TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

Homes evacuated in California fires

old mother, Helen Herz, out of a house that burned.

"My mother was terrified. Everything is burned to the ground."

The Thousand Oaks started about 1:30 p.m. Tuesday about 30 miles northwest of Los Angeles. The blaze laid down during the early evening Tuesday but flared up again after midnight.

Residents on Tuesday rushed to save horses and other livestock when flames crackled past multimillion-dollar ranch estates owned by actors Tom Selleck and Richard Widmark.

A 2,000-acre blaze damaged or destroyed 28 homes and injured at least five residents today in the Winchester area south of Hemet in Riverside County, said Bob Blatz, a representative for the California Department of Forestry.

The blaze, reported at about 11:30 p.m. Tuesday, threatened dozens of other homes on both sides of Highway 79. They were evacuated.

Homes and an Indian reservation were threatened by two other Riverside County blazes totaling more than 500 acres, authorities said.

In San Bernardino County, homes were threatened at daybreak in Yucaipa and Mentone by a 1,000-acre blaze. No injuries were reported.

Another fire reported around 1 a.m. today in the Chatsworth area of Los Angeles County had consumed around 300 acres of brush in Los Angeles and Ventura counties.

Four Los Angeles city firefighters were injured early today when wind-driven flames rushed through the Santa Susana Pass and burned a fire engine, authorities said.

In Orange County, a fire reported about 11 p.m. Tuesday in the Anaheim Hills burned 200 acres, severely damaged two homes and prompted about 75 residents to voluntarily evacuate the Villa Park area, said Maria Sabol, a county fire representative.

U.S. troops fired on in Somalia

Aidid accuses U.N. of instigating violence, suffering

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Gunmen shot at U.S. infantry not far from a U.S. base Wednesday. The troops returned fire, and two trucks in their convoy were hit, but there were no reports of casualties.

A U.S. military representative, Col. Steve Rausch, said the attack on a convoy of six trucks and four Humvees occurred near a camel market not far from Hunter Base in northern Mogadishu.

No further details were immediately available.

The capital's northern sector is held by warlord Ali Mahdi Mohamed, a bitter clan rival of Mohamed Farrah Aidid, whose gunners control the south side. The two factions engaged in heavy gun battles early this week, but the fighting subsided Wednesday, U.N. officials said.

Aidid urged the United States on Wednesday to override the United Nations and take a leading role in resolving the Somali conflict. The U.S. special envoy to Somalia was to leave for the region Friday.

Aidid, in an interview with ABC News, accused U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali of instigating violence in the Horn of Africa nation.

"We believe that the U.N. in general and the secretary-general in particular should make a decision similar to that of the U.S. government by admitting his mistakes and by adopting the commitment to help the Somali people to end their suffering rather than inflict destruction on them by waging unnecessary war on the Somali people," Aidid said.

"Mr. Boutros-Ghali and his (multi-national army) can no longer be considered as a neutral force."

MOHAMED FARRAH AIDID

"Mr. Boutros-Ghali and his (multinational army) can no longer be considered as a neutral force," he said.

For four months, U.N. helicopters and troops hammered Aidid command centers and tried to capture the warlord in retaliation for the deaths of dozens of peacekeepers in attacks blamed on Aidid's militia.

The emphasis on hunting down Aidid was abandoned after the United States, reeling from the loss of 18 soldiers in an Oct. 3 battle, opted for diplomacy over military might in its attempt to promote a political settlement.

Aidid also accused Boutros-Ghali of influencing Ali Mahdi to lead a march on southern Mogadishu on Monday. The march, which Ali Mahdi touted as a peace demonstration, touched off two days of fighting that killed at least 17 people, according to the latest figures provided by an Aidid spokesman.

U.N. officials, fearing bloodshed, tried to dissuade Ali Mahdi from entering Aidid's sector. But Aidid insisted the U.N. chief masterminded the demonstration in a bid to compromise the political reconciliation sought by the United States and the Organization of African Unity.

Instead of having the United Nations try to resolve the Somali conflict, Aidid said he has invited Washington to initiate a dialogue that would help Somalis solve their problems by themselves.

U.N. representative George Bennett dismissed Aidid's allegations against the United Nations. "We don't think anybody (in the United Nations) has actually been in that position of instigating violence in any way," he said.

Bennett said the U.S. special envoy to Somalia, Robert Oakley, was expected in Mogadishu within the next few days.

The State Department said Oakley would head for the region Friday to try to get neighboring countries involved in promoting a political settlement, but did not have immediate information on whether he would go to Somalia.

It appeared Washington might be impatient with the United Nations' reluctance to talk with Aidid.

Negotiations Oakley opened with Aidid earlier this month won the release of a captured U.S. helicopter pilot and all but ended the U.N. manhunt for the warlord.

Aidid declared a unilateral truce with the United Nations on Oct. 9, and his men freed pilot Michael Durant on Oct. 14, the day Oakley left Somalia.

Since then, U.N. representatives have said they were talking to low-level aides of Aidid, but that it was up to his Somali National Alliance to initiate a formal dialogue.

On Tuesday, Bennett said, "We are clearly not talking to Aidid himself." He also said dialogue was unlikely while Aidid had some questions to answer about the killings of peacekeepers.

The latest sign of the Clinton administration's interest in a political accommodation in Somalia was the appointment Tuesday of a new envoy. Ambassador Richard Begosian will replace Robert Gosende, who was closely identified with the previous hard-line policy toward Aidid.

Australia's Foreign Ministry, meanwhile, said a 21-year-old New Zealander was killed Wednesday by a gunner who ambushed the victim's truck.

Vinyl still alive, well

from a band just because it has one different guitar lick," Rooks said.

Those with more esoteric tastes have also found happiness in purchasing vinyl.

"I like to search for some of the stranger albums," Scott Swanson, who purchases vinyl albums, said. "A couple of months ago, I bought a Partridge Family Christmas album."

Nor has the popularity of vinyl stopped with the vinyl generation.

Rooks said 12- and 13-year-olds visit his store to buy vinyl for the artwork, color variation and out-of-print labels.

Often, he said, younger customers use the records to make re-mix songs. Because records are easier to manipulate and can be hand-spun, the regular-size vinyl and 12-inch dance mixes are popular for that purpose.

In addition, cheaper production costs of vinyl make it attractive way for small independent companies to release music from new bands.

"Many kids come in to buy the seven-inch singles of the underground bands — bands they can't get on CD yet," Harris said.

Just because it has been released on CD doesn't mean it won't come out on vinyl. And although most domestic record companies have slowed their pressing of vinyl, it hasn't stopped.

Most vinyl nowadays is pressed in Asia and Europe, but there are still releases in the United States, even though they are mostly promotional, McCoy said. Both Pearl Jam and Nirvana released a collector's edition of their new record on vinyl before the CD release.

"Bruce Springsteen's record contract clearly states he must release every new album on vinyl along with other formats," Rooks said.

Harris said SUB POP record company in Seattle create a singles club where people could get limited-edition vinyl singles from lesser-known grunge/rock bands. Many of these have already become collector's items, he said.

Some companies also have found there is a niche in vinyl for those who would like older, out-of-print albums.

Rooks said a California company is reissuing old blues music on new 78s for people who might have home juke boxes.This trend follows the used vinyl market.

Mike Vitale, employee at Love Records, said some of the most popular selling used vinyl right now are old 70s soul bands, spinner and funk albums along with a big surge in doo-wop music.

No format of music has completely passed away, even though it can't always be found in the major record or discount stores.

"There is a market for every facet of music," Rooks said "I just had a guy come in here yesterday and buy some Beatle's eight-tracks."

Universe still a mystery

To help explain the idea, Reay used a beer-bottle model to show exponential expansion.

The model showed how each bubble appears and expands faster than light, so each one could be a universe. To compare the size of the universe now to then creates a ratio of expansion approximately 10 to the 3,000th power to 1.

"That number is too big for humans to comprehend," Reay said.

The growth and expansion of the universe led to the question: Will the universe expand forever?

Reay said the expansion of the universe is based on a critical density point.

"If the current density is less than the critical density, the universe will continue to expand," Reay said. "If they are equal the universe will stop, and if the current density is greater the universe will collapse."

If scientific constants are used to examine the expansion of the universe, Reay said the universe should have collapsed after the first 5x10 to the negative 43rd of a second.

"This is an unsolved mystery in physics," he said. "The universe has lasted 10 to the 61 power longer than expected."

Police don't expect pranks

CHAD HARRIS
Collegian

Halloween is traditionally regarded as a night of mischievous deeds and strange occurrences.

Such is not the case in Manhattan on All Hallows Eve.

K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom said his department does not see much difference on Halloween night, compared to any other night, in regard to crime.

"There are no more crimes than your ordinary day," Beckom said. "Once in a while, we'll have someone decorate buildings of the campus with lighted jack o' lanterns, but that's about it.

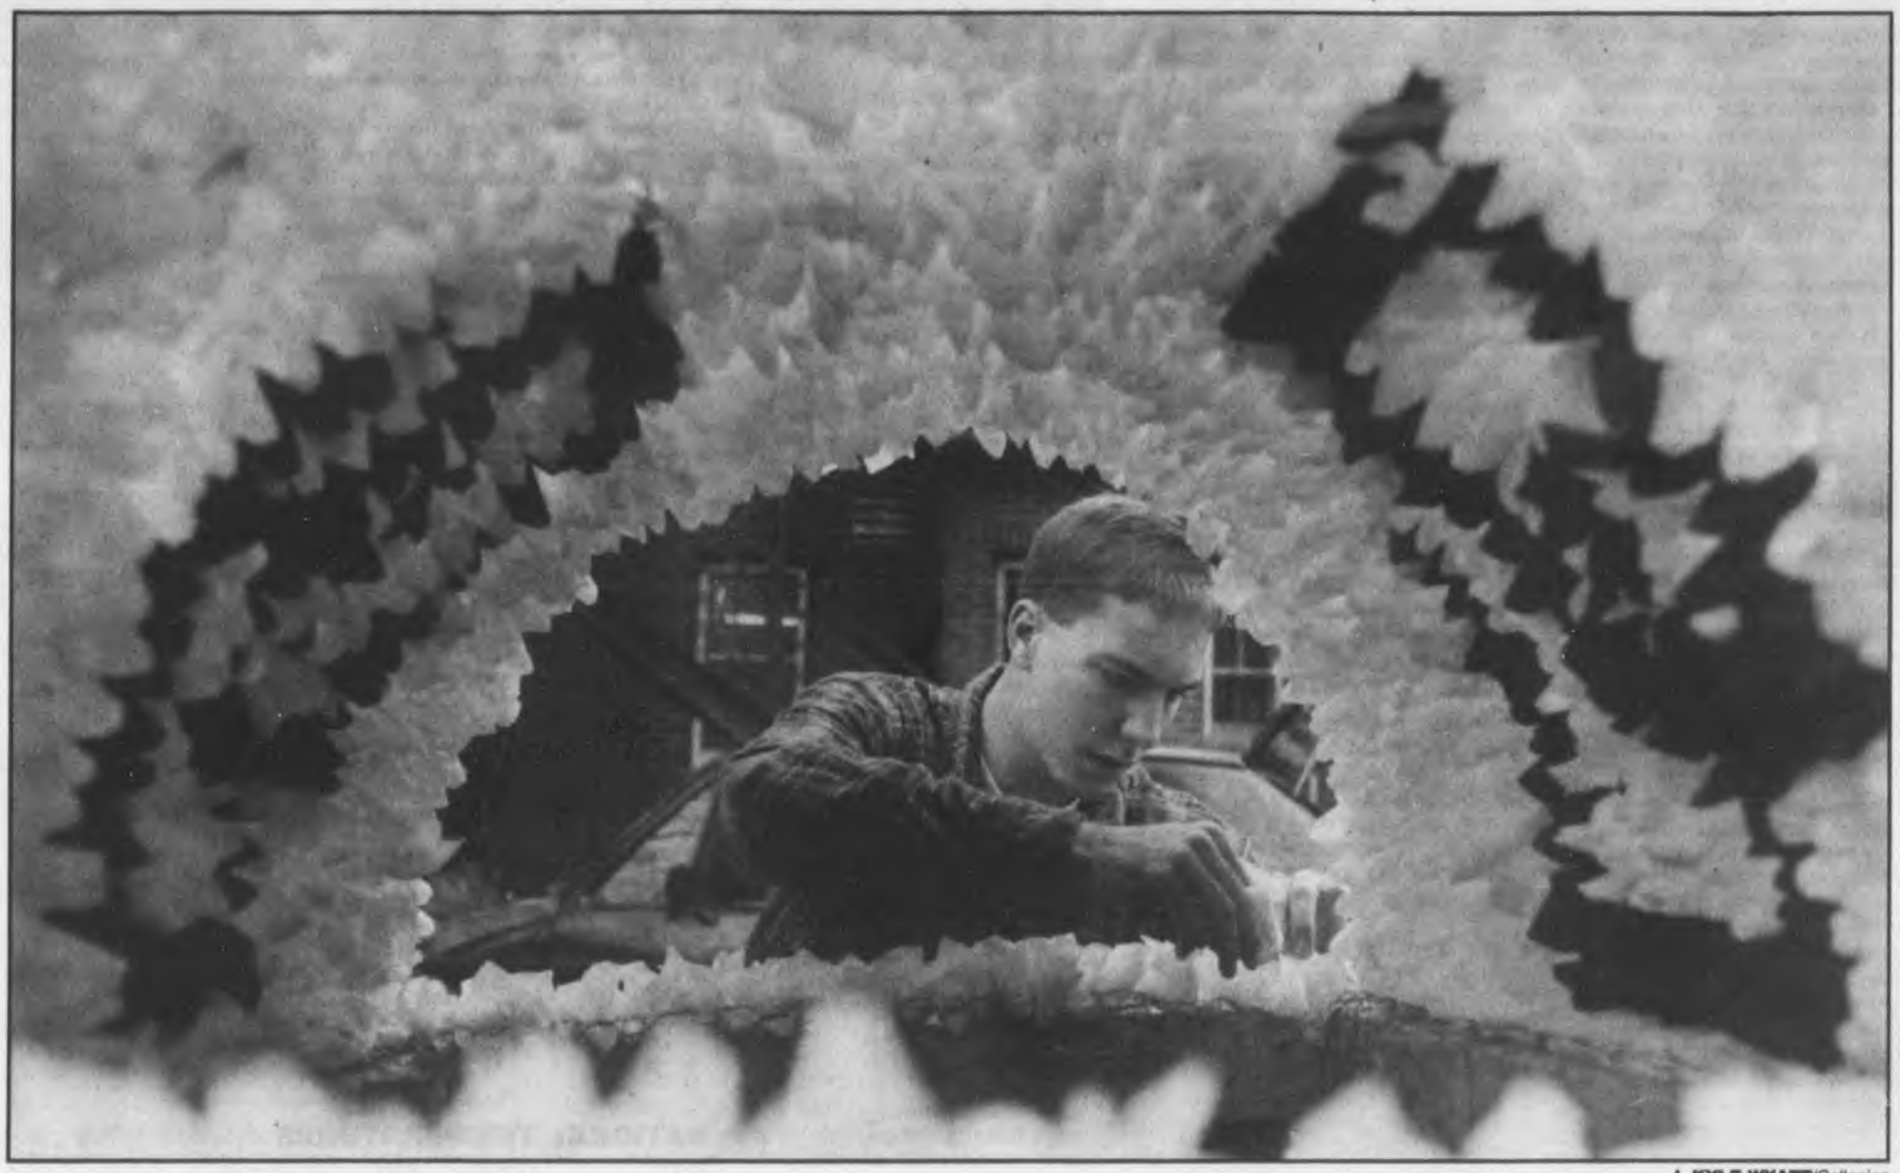
"We haven't seen any major property damage within the past five or six years."

Beckom has been with campus police for 23 years, including eight as chief. He said the department takes some precautions for Halloween evening.

"We increase the patrol activity a little," he said. "This isn't done for reasons involving vandalism, as one might expect, but rather for the patrolling of all the parties. We want to make sure we're visible, promoting a more cautious attitude and possibly dissuading people from creating problems."

Satanic rituals are not a common occurrence for Halloween, he said.

"Satanic rituals, in the past, haven't been specific to Halloween," Beckom said. "Again, though, most of the activities done by various cults are done far from any human traffic, and they aren't usually publicized highly."



Sgt. Stanley Conkwright of the Riley County Police Department said Halloween evening does not present problems for RCPD either.

"As far as crime is concerned, it hasn't been a problem in the past," Conkwright said. "However, there are a number of parties, and that is probably what we're most concerned with."

The department does not take any extra precautions for the Halloween season, Conkwright said.

"We don't add more manpower for Halloween night or organize any special patrols," he said. "We do go to all the grade schools in Manhattan to talk with children about trick-or-treating and safety every year.

"The Halloween season is exciting, especially for children," Conkwright said. "We hope everyone has a fun time this year, and for safety reasons, we ask that parents check out their children's candy after trick-or-treating, as well as escorting the smaller kids through walking the neighborhood."

▶CHAMBER SHOWS SUPPORT FOR SNYDER WITH $1,000 AD

In today's edition of the Manhattan Mercury, the Chamber of Commerce sponsored a full two-page letter signed by more than 400 community members in support of football coach Bill Snyder and the K-State football program.

Randy Martin, president of the Chamber of Commerce, said the letter is not meant as criticism of the Mercury's recent decision to print details of Snyder's contract.

"This is just to show the community support of the football program and Coach Snyder," Martin said.

After pursuing the details surrounding Snyder's 10-year contract since May, the Mercury was able to obtain the information from K-State after receiving help from Attorney General Bob Stephan, Richard Pretorius, editorial page editor for the Mercury, said.

Pretorius said the Mercury has been criticized for printing the information in the middle of the football season, but that the timing was not the newspaper's fault.

"This could've happened within two days in May," he said.

To pay for the two-page advertisement, which cost more than $1,000, the Chamber of Commerce collected money from local businesses and individuals, Martin said.

▶K-STATE BEATS KU BY 75 IN BLOOD-DRIVE DONATIONS

K-State students were the big donors during the fall American Red Cross and KSU Bloodmobile.

K-State collected 914 units, compared to the University of Kansas' 842. The unit spread was 75 pints, making this a very close win for K-State, according to statistics given by Lafene Health Center.

"We really need to buck up next spring. We only won by 75, and KU is mad about being beat twice by us in one semester," Currie said.

The Bloodmobile had higher numbers this fall than in past semesters at K-State.

"We had over 1,000 people come through this fall. This number is really up in comparison to former years," Reita Currie, health coordinator of the Bloodmobile, said.

The number of first-time donors is up from last year's 149 donors to an all-time high of 218, according to Lafene statistics.

"These people are very significant to the success of our program," Currie said. "We always need to get more people involved."

The staff of the blood drive consists of volunteers from the Manhattan community.

"Our job is to get as many people signed up as possible. This bloodmobile was extremely successful because of the competition of K-State versus KU," said Ted Ellet, junior in journalism and mass communications and student chairman of the KSU Bloodmobile.

Many people don't realize the effort and commitment volunteers have toward the Bloodmobile, Currie said.

All of the blood collected at the Bloodmobile serves local hospitals.

"Just knowing that one person giving blood can save three people's lives is what makes this all worthwhile," Ellet said.

Senate passes $15,000 for ICC

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

A student senator suggested Thursday that more than $12,000 be cut from a recommended allocation for the International Coordinating Council.

ICC is an umbrella organization that represents 18 different multicultural groups at K-State.

Rachel Smith, arts and sciences senator, and Trent LeDoux, Student Senate intern coordinator, said the ICC recommendation should be lowered from $15,184 recommended by Senate Finance Committee to $3,082.

"Our reasoning was that we didn't feel like it would benefit the whole student body," Smith said. "Twelve hundred students just doesn't warrant $15,000.

"I hope my constituents know that I tried to save them nearly $15,000."

Kouassi Kouakou, president of ICC, said the people suggesting reductions in ICC's allocation are unaware of the benefits multicultural clubs provide K-State.

"The people debating against the requests don't care about international activities. They don't attend the events. That's pretty sad," Kouakou said.

"When we cut their budget, we are saying sit down, shut up, do your studies and go home," Kouakou said.

Motaz Hourani, co-advisor to ICC, said he could not figure out why Smith was so opposed to funding international groups.

"I don't know why this lady is being so hostile to us," Hourani said. "I don't know if she's always like this or just tonight."

Smith said she is not being hostile, just practical.

"Our intention is not to cut groups, but to encourage them to be a part of International Week," she said. "We feel it would reach out to more students if these events were incorporated into International Week instead of being separate events.

"It would also save money."

Senate voted to allocate the $15,184.50 initially recommended by Senate Finance Committee.

Santa Ana winds fuel uncontrolled fires in southern California

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Wildfires driven by searing desert winds devoured thousands of tinder-dry acres in Southern California on Wednesday, destroying scores of homes and forcing hundreds to flee in terror from wealthy suburbs and rural hamlets. Six firefighters were injured, three critically.

Among the evacuees were elderly people carried on gurneys from two convalescent homes and patients at a hospital.

One fire threatened the Wild Animal Park in northern San Diego County, where zookeepers evacuated 26 endangered California condors and four Andean condors.

By midafternoon Wednesday, 12 large fires fanned by hot, dry Santa Ana winds gusting up to 70 mph were burning from Ventura County to the Mexican border. The fires fed off vegetation baked to a crisp in the rainless summer.

"We have what we call a blow-up condition at this time," said Norm Plott, a Fire Department spokesman in Ventura County, where a 15,000-acre arson fire, the first to erupt in the region Tuesday, was raging out of control.

"We have what we call a blowup condition at this time."

Late Wednesday, a fast-moving fire that started in Irvine raced 10 miles down a canyon, destroying an estimated 40 homes and buildings in the wealthy seaside community of Laguna Beach in southern Orange County.

Amid the confusion, overwhelmed firefighters ran out of water and called for reinforcements, and helicopters made daring water drops in futile efforts to douse burning homes.

Smoke and ash eclipsed the sun over downtown Los Angeles, freeways and schools were closed, and wind-borne embers picked out homes at random, quickly engulfing roofs in flame.

One of the worst blazes was in Altadena, a suburb northeast of Los Angeles in the foothills of the San Gabriel Mountains.

In that blaze, a homeless man identified as Andres Z. Huang, 35, was arrested Wednesday and booked for investigation of unlawfully starting a fire. Bail was set at $7,500. Authorities said he started the fire because he was trying to keep warm.

The Altadena fire destroyed an estimated 50 homes and buildings in neighborhoods where houses easily fetch $500,000.

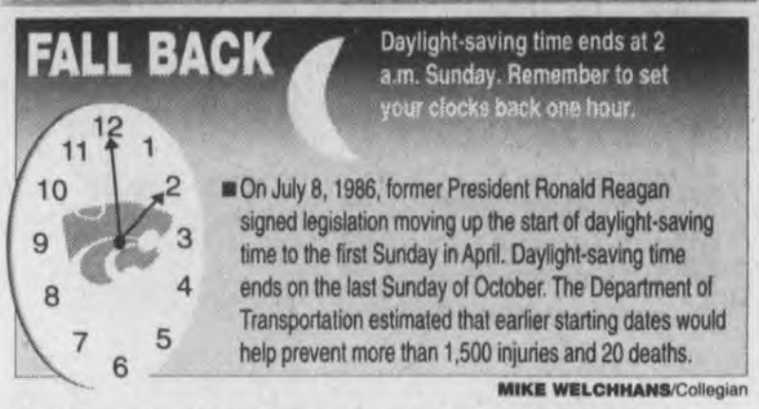
"They said, 'It's coming up the canyon! It's coming up the canyon!' so we just got out of there as fast as we can. I have nothing but what I'm wearing," said Sandra Bohlen, whose three-bedroom Altadena home burned.

Though firefighters had difficulty getting crews and equipment to the scene, Los Angeles County Deputy Fire Chief Paul Blackburn said the winds were so strong that added manpower wouldn't have made much difference.

The Santa Ana wind condition occurs each fall when wind becomes superheated and dry as it blows across deserts east of Los Angeles through Southern California.

"We would have needed one fire truck at every house and there aren't that many fire trucks in the state of California," said Blackburn, adding it could take a week to contain the blaze.

As the 4,000-acre inferno advanced, at least 500 homes were abandoned. But some residents stayed behind to hose down roofs. A fire engine was destroyed, and one firefighter suffered smoke inhalation.



Two convalescent homes were evacuated as flames reached their doors. Elderly residents, some on gurneys, were taken to makeshift shelters at schools.

Smoke forced St. Luke Medical Center in nearby north Pasadena to evacuate 74 patients, who were transferred to other hospitals.

In Riverside County, an 11,400-acre blaze damaged or destroyed 28 homes and buildings near Winchester. Four residents and one firefighter were injured, said Bob Blatz, a spokesman for the California Department of Forestry.

In Ventura County northwest of Los Angeles, a 20,000-acre arson blaze destroyed a house and a mobile home in the Santa Monica Mountains and burned 12 miles to the ocean. Car-size boulders on the cliffs crashed onto the Pacific Coast Highway as the flames devoured the foliage that had held them in place.

Haitian military officer receives drug money

MIAMI (AP) — The second-most powerful military man in Haiti personally receives and distributes $100 million or more in drug-trafficking bribes each year, according to a confidential U.S. Senate report.

"The drug-trafficking perk ... right now is controlled by the Port-au-Prince police chief, Lt. Col. Michel Francois," according to a summary of the report.

Francois also controls the attaches, the civilian-military gangs the United Nations said are hunting down and killing pro-democracy figures in Haiti. The gangs came to U.S. attention when they attacked diplomats and reporters at the Port-au-Prince docks this month.

The report says little direct evidence ties Haiti's military ruler, Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, to drug payoffs, but it adds that there is obviously an arrangement between Cedras and Francois.

The military is bitterly resisting the return to Haiti of elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide in part because its lifestyle depends on the drug trade, and it fear prosecution, the report said.

Israel, PLO peace talks continue

TABA, Egypt (AP) — Pressed for time, Israeli and Palestinian negotiators clashed Wednesday over the focus of their peace talks.

Palestinians want to discuss a rapid Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories and details on the release of Palestinian prisoners. But Israel wants security guarantees about the Palestinian police force that is supposed to take the army's place.

After an initially tense confrontation, the two sides agreed to discuss the schedule for Israeli withdrawal next week.

The negotiations began two weeks ago, and the deadline for signing a detailed plan on transferring authority in the Gaza Strip and West Bank town of Jericho is only six weeks away.

Libyan rebels try to dispose Gadhafi

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Moammar Gadhafi's government has executed dozens of Libyans and arrested hundreds to quell a rebellion aimed at bringing him down, an exiled opposition group says.

The National Front for the Salvation of Libya said soldiers loyal to Gadhafi have arrested 1,500 of the 60,000 residents of Bani Walid, the town in eastern Libya where the insurrection began, and have the town under siege.

Mohammed Gibril, a National Front spokesman in Cairo, warned of possible tribal-based massacres.

Gadhafi has ruled Libya since 1969, and the military is believed to be the only force capable of ousting him. His government denies there has been any unrest.

But opposition leaders and Western diplomats in Cairo and the Libyan capital Tripoli confirmed that rebel soldiers reached nearby Misratah. Some claimed that rebels advanced into three other areas near Tripoli.

Aristide not to return to Haiti over weekend

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Haiti's ousted president, his hopes of returning to power by this weekend all but gone, called Thursday for a total trade embargo to force out the country's military leaders.

Jean-Bertrand Aristide said he would not waver in his fight to restore Haiti to democracy. But he reiterated that he would not return until army commander Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras steps down, he said.

"One, he must leave," Aristide said at a news conference following a speech to the General Assembly. "Two, I must return."

Aristide, Haiti's first democratically elected president, was to return by Saturday under a U.N.-brokered agreement reached in July.

Senate examines Packwood diaries

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Bob Packwood's diaries raise questions of possible criminal conduct by the lawmaker unrelated to allegations of sexual misconduct, the Senate Ethics Committee disclosed Thursday.

As the Senate neared a debate on a subpoena for the diaries, Committee Chairman Richard Bryan, in a sharply worded five-page statement, rebutted Packwood's contention that the panel wants his diaries to rummage through his private writings.

"There is no constitutional right being violated," Bryan said of the investigation, which focused until now on allegations of sexual misconduct and intimidation of witnesses.

The panel's staff has already examined large portions of the diaries.

Astronauts take morning vacation

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — NASA gave the Columbia astronauts the morning off to do whatever they wanted.

They wanted to sightsee.

Astronaut William McArthur Jr. said Wednesday he and his crewmates would spend their second morning off like the first one last week: experiencing "the grandeur and beauty of space."

Mission Control told the astronauts that they could sleep in and that ground controllers wouldn't bother them until they heard from them.

"You don't need to get up and hurry to do anything," Mission Control's Gregory Harbaugh said Wednesday night.

Except for the two breaks, the seven astronauts — especially the four scientists — have been working long and hard since the medical research mission began Oct. 18. Their 14-day flight is due to end Monday.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

IF YOU THOUGHT COLLEGE WAS EXPENSIVE, TRY PUTTING YOURSELF THROUGH RETIREMENT.

Think about supporting yourself for twenty-five, thirty years or longer in retirement. It might be the greatest financial test you'll ever face. Fortunately, you have one valuable asset in your favor. Time.

Time to take advantage of tax-deferral. Time for your money to grow.

But starting early is key. Consider this: if you begin saving just $100 a month at age thirty, you can accumulate $172,109* by the time you reach age sixty-five. Wait ten years and you'd need to set aside $219 a month to reach the same goal.

At TIAA-CREF, we not only understand the value of starting early, we can help make it possible—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research are already enrolled in America's largest retirement system. Find out how easy it is to join them. Call today and learn how simple it is to put yourself through retirement when you have time and TIAA-CREF on your side.

Winston leaves audience in awe

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

George Winston performed a riveting musical show to a well-filled McCain Auditorium Thursday night.

Winston was audience-friendly, elaborating on the influences and inspirations behind each piece he played. He made his inner thoughts accessible, which helped to draw the audience into the drama of the sounds flitting upon the air.

His diverse talent was displayed as he left the audience awe-stricken with selections played on three instruments: piano, harmonica and the Hawaiian slack key guitar.

The concert was opened by "The Crepe," a ballad by the late jazz organist, Larry Young. The ballad was simplistically beautiful, with a soothing undertone. His style was sure, yet never harsh, gentle, without ever losing any elements.

The concert was filled with pieces for the winter and fall season, many of which were inspired by nature. The second piece he played, "Colors," was inspired by the state of Montana, Winston said. This piece was soothing, gentle and characterized by quickness guided with a steady hand. The piece came to a glorious climax that words could never sufficiently describe.

The audience intensely experienced the sound as it witnessed Winston intently make himself a part of the instrument. The music came not from his piano, but from his soul. The art dominated, as each piece played was marked by Winston's individuality.

The highlights of the first half of the show were the Vince Guaraldi compositions: "Linus and Lucy" and "The Great Pumpkin Waltz," made famous in the "Peanuts" cartoons. The audience's excitement upon hearing these delightful pieces was evident as Winston seemed to bring back a piece of nearly everyone's childhood.

Winston's ability to play the slack key guitar left the audience amazed. This instrument is solo finger picking guitar styles unique to the Hawaiian islands. The style was free and charismatic. It was light and flittering.

Winston's style marked "When the Saints Go Marching In" in the R&B style of James Booker. It contained all of the intricacies of the blues. The rich chords served to bring the audience to a creative awakening.

The audience was absolutely delighted by his harmonic improvisation based on the Eastern European musical style. Winston made two harmonicas carry the sound of a band. The music was culturally rich, and many people in the audience were tapping their feet.

Winston played the final piece on the slack key guitar, "Spring Creek," a lullaby that captures the essence of the high plains. Winston left the stage, leaving behind an enthusiastic audience giving him a standing ovation.

Pell Grant program not protected from fraud

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Administration officials said Thursday the Pell Grant program provides no way to measure what taxpayers get for their money.

Officials said the $6-billion-a year program is run on an honor system and has no protection against fraud.

"Success in this program is whether we successfully give the students the money — not whether they graduate from a college or proprietary school," David Longanecker, assistant secretary for post-secondary education, told the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

"This program operates essentially on an honor system," the department's inspector general, James B. Thomas Jr. said at the conclusion of two days of hearings on the nation's primary direct aid program for needy students in higher education.

Investigators have told of schools receiving millions in Pell Grants for ghost students, maintaining false records to support grants to students still in high school or otherwise ineligible, and students receiving apparent kickbacks paid with tax dollars to attend classes.

The General Accounting Office, Congress' auditing agency, found payment irregularities at all 23 orthodox Jewish schools it investigated in the New York City area.

As early as 1981, the Justice Department knew of problems at 57 Jewish institutions, including several of those now under scrutiny by Congress and the executive branch.

Justice asked the Education Department to preserve records of those schools for possible criminal prosecution, but only one case was ever brought to trial.

During the past decade, 162,576 students have received Pell Grants for more than five years. Awards to those students totaled nearly $1.6 billion. Nothing in law bars grants that go far beyond the normal four-year span of a traditional college education, but Longanecker said Congress may want to reconsider that policy.

The Education Department has no mechanism to detect duplicate Pell Grants to the same student, and it relies on the good faith of schools to report no shows and students who withdraw.

Because schools receive the bulk of their grant money up front, they can have free use of taxpayer dollars for months, including money they are not entitled to.

Nunn said Wednesday many of the problems his panel uncovered appear to warrant criminal investigation by the Justice Department.

A free community program
My thighs are too fat!

Do you think your thighs are too fat? Is your nose too big? Would you have more fun if you were blonde? Are you aging "gracefully"?

Everyday women receive messages from society, our families, and ourselves about how we should look. We constantly compare ourselves to an "ideal," and we always seem to fall short. And, very often, our self-worth is defined by not how we look to others, but how we think we look.

The Body Betrayed: Body Image in Women's Lives, a free public program sponsored by The Women's Program at Menninger, will feature panel presentations on:

- how culture influences women's self-esteem
- body image & eating disorders
- body image & sexuality
- how a woman's body ages

The featured presenters are: Linda Sebastian, MN, ARNP; Kathryn Zerbe, MD; Faye Heller, RN, MN, ARNP; and Nancy Jones, MSW. Reservations are recommended.

A reception and book signing with Kathryn Zerbe, MD, author of the recently released book, The Body Betrayed: Women, Eating Disorders, and Treatment will follow the program.

Politically correct costume restrictions too scary for school

Have fun trick-or-treating this Halloween, but be careful what costume you choose to wear.

You might be doing something worse than scaring someone. You might be offending them.

This was the message sent out through Iowa City, Iowa, public schools by an Iowa City Affirmative Action group made up of volunteer citizens.

The letter states certain costumes should not be worn at Halloween school parties. Nor should the teacher decorate her classroom with certain traditional Halloween paraphernalia.

Among the costumes named in the letter are such Halloween classics as a devil, a witch, a hobo, old people and various monsters.

The group's reason for circulating the letter is based on the common PC adage that somebody might get a little offended with what you are wearing because they may hold certain beliefs on a subject.

It would be quite a tragedy if a child came to school wearing a hobo costume and another child, whose father is a member of the Pro-Hobo League of Iowa City, became upset, and the child was then distraught for the rest of his life.

The PC police have gone too far this time. We should not let the PC police get away with their McCarthyistic attempt to suppress every item they see causing some sort of offense to another human being.

The issue here isn't whether a child was allowed to dress up for a national holiday.

The issue is the philosophy that groups such as this affirmative action group use to base their opinions to dictate how society should behave. This deals with what a person says or the clothes the person puts on their body.

The scariest costume of choice this year is probably that of a member of the Iowa City Affirmative Action group. Be careful if you wear it; someone might get offended.

Depression can consume you

It began when I was in high school. My junior year to be exact. The depression started slowly, then accelerated at a pace that was astounding. Within a span of 30 seconds, I would have mood swings that ranged from elation to absolute fury. I hated myself, hated life, hated everyone and everything around me.

And there was nothing I could do to stop it.

I remember going home after school and having my mother ask me what was wrong. I never knew where to begin, so I said, "Nothing." It was obvious to her that something was wrong, but she didn't know how to help.

My first year of college, the depression seemed to disappear. I was too involved in college to have time to think about much else, and the first year went fine.

My sophomore year, I began to run everywhere. I still don't know why, but I became extremely hyperactive. I couldn't sleep, so I went to the weight room in Ford Hall and physically threw myself at the walls.

All I remember thinking is that I was trying to beat whatever was hurting me and get it out of my head. When the depression actually began, it was almost a relief, because it was a constant thing.

I slept all the time. I went to Lafene and got medicine that knocked me on my ass, but it didn't help. Then I left school.

The hospital wasn't much better. They said I was an alcoholic, even though the most I drink is once a year. If you ever want to feel completely out of control, attempt to tell someone in a mental hospital that you aren't sick.

I don't know about anyone else, but by the time I came back up here, I had realized that I could send myself into this place where the depression "shielded" me somewhat. If the pain of life got to be too much, I could effectively disappear into myself.

Still can, in fact. That's something I didn't give up. I keep it in "reserve" so to speak. The problem with playing with depression is that sooner or later you realize that you can't get out. By the time our family doctor gave me medication for it, I was trying to put my fist through walls.

I don't know what goes through a person's mind when they attempt suicide, I only know what was going through mine when I was so depressed. All I felt was pain. The medication I'm on took the pain away, but now I have problems regulating it.

One day it will be fine; the next I'll sleep most of the day.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

And I don't feel anything anymore. Not pain, not joy, not hate nor love. That's an effect of the medication I guess. Whenever I start to cry, the tears just don't make it past my eyes. I blink, and they're gone.

I've realized that there are a lot of people up here with depression. A lot on medication and a lot who are having problems dealing with life.

It seems to be a common occurrence here and probably on other campuses as well.

The thing people have to realize is that things do get better. It may not seem like it, but depression does end. There are places you can go to get help. There are people who will listen.

It's nothing to be ashamed of. It doesn't mean you're weak or a failure. Depression is a common occurrence and one that can be helped.

I would be lying to everyone if I said that some of the pamphlets on campus aren't crap.

There's one that says that all you have to do if you're depressed is smile. If someone tells you that, they should be slapped.

If you're depressed, you don't feel like smiling. If you did, you wouldn't be depressed. I would also be a liar if I said I didn't sometimes still get depressed. Everyone does.

I just don't sink into it for years like I did.

Now I look forward to graduating and going out to see what the real world holds.

I guess if all this has any deep meaning to take away with you, it's this: There are many things in this world to be seen and done.

Just don't let one black period in your life ruin it all.

To speak or not to speak

I've kept my mouth shut for too long. Whenever I disagreed with a policy concerning Student Governing Association or an article in the Collegian, my opinions were always silenced (except for those within an earshot who heard my tirades.)

Now, something must be said, because I am tired of the bureaucratic tyranny that resides within this institution.

Before I step on my soapbox and explain the reasons for my emotional larceny, I must give some background of the incident that occurred at the K-State Union on Wednesday.

What started out to be fun, games and good ol' college humor, turned out to be a battle of the First Amendment.

My name is Jasonomarr Johnson. Yes, the same one who posted cameos of Jon Wefald on the first floor of the Union. To those who witnessed the incident, I wish to thank you because you are the prime reason why I wrote this column.

What occurred only reinforces the fact that speech is "free" in the Union (as it is elsewhere on campus) only if you agree with the "Big Wigs," the "Head Cheeses" of the University.

As I sat taping "Jon Wefald" to the floor, I was approached by facilities management, demanding that I immediately remove "my expressions" from the floor.

Since her lack of education preceded her (definitely not collegiate material), a feeble attempt of rationale was given — actually an attempt to dupe me for the real reason, Union censorship.

JASONOMARR JOHNSON
GUEST COLUMNIST

"I'm sorry, but this poses a health hazard, and the picture must be removed. People will not see it on the floor. They will step on it, slip and fall. ... and besides I have to clean up what's left."

Well, I'm sorry, too. Not only is this poor rationalization, but poor work ethic as well!

I don't understand how anyone cannot see a 1.8 x 34.5 white strip on the tan tile floor of the Union. Let's think about this one for a moment. ...

Yes, I do often walk into long open trenches near construction sites and trip off of 75 percent of the curbs I encounter. Oh, and how can I miss all the walls, supports and billboards I walk into in the Union. Stupid me!

The point is that this display was large enough, with contrasting colors, that it would be impossible for anyone not to see it unless they were blind. My logic was established when the crowd that gathered remained at reasonable distance. No one came close to stepping on the photos.

Now comes the heavy artillery, the big gun, Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union. He asked me what my business was.

I told him all I was doing was taping some photos of Wefald, which I thought were humorous, and they would be gone in a few days. Once Wefald's name had entered into the picture, he made sure his "no" response was pretty substantial.

Unlike the facilities management comrade worker who approached me earlier, Mr. Connaughton used SGA facility codes to add support to his dogma — excuse me, SGA's dogma.

When I asked to see these codes, he did promptly (and I stress promptly) escort me to his office upstairs.

Nowhere in the by-laws did it say anything about postings on the floor. All it said was that I had to be sponsored by an organization. You mean to tell me that all those posting on the billboards are SGA approved? I think not!

Well, it was obvious I wasn't going to win any ground-breaking political advances, so I thanked him for his time and walked back downstairs. If that isn't censorship, I don't know what is.

When I returned to collect the photos, quite a crowd had gathered, wondering what he said. When I had revealed the outcome, it seemed as if the students were more upset than I.

I replied that I would take them to the free-speech zone outside the Union and post them there. As the cliché goes, this was definitely the straw that broke the camel's back. Once again, a crowd had gathered outside to see the pictures. No one told me that I couldn't post them there, so after I was done, I left to go to work.

Within two hours time, when I returned to see the condition of the photos, they were gone! What the hell happened?

There wasn't even a trace of them. Once again, my point is proven that contrasting views and opinions are often silenced on this campus.

Whether it be voices of dismay concerning Midnight Madness, disapproval of SGA funding or tuition, or a now-disgruntled individual's form of expression, such as my "Wefald" photos, students must be heard.

I now encourage anyone who is enraged or concerned about K-State's issues to speak their peace and express themselves. If nothing is said, nothing can be done.

As for myself, I refuse to be silent any longer. I make this promise to the student body: The "Jon Wefald" photos will return someday (unless I mysteriously disappear via Wefald's secret service).

Not because I wish to humor people, but because I will prove a point. A point for which many people in the past have died for and are still dying today.

I, too, will defend it to my last drop of blood. The right to speak.

▶ SNYDER'S SALARY

Coach's record, not contract is the issue

Editor,

I am one of the many students on campus who is tired of hearing about the contract of head football coach Bill Snyder from both the media and the faculty here at K-State.

The simple fact of the matter is that national recognition for the University depends on whether or not this college has a winning athletic program.

There is no national weekly poll for the amount of periodicals the University has or whether or not it has a top-notch library.

I'm not saying this is right or wrong, I'm just stating a simple fact.

It is really too bad that all of the attention that should be given to one of the greatest football seasons in history is being diverted to a well-deserved coach's contract. I am glad that we have Bill Snyder as head coach of our football program, and I am sure that most

▶ SNYDER'S SALARY

Coach has his own extra special needs

Editor,

Football coach Bill Snyder's contract has been made public against his wishes and the wishes of the administration.

The revelation has been an embarrassment to Snyder and a distraction as well, especially so in the midst of an exciting and productive football season.

But our focus should not be on Snyder. It's not his fault that he finds himself in a business (the entertainment business) that tends to pay talented persons well. Years ago, Humphrey Bogart was asked why he thought he was worth a quarter of a million dollars a picture, to which Bogie replied, "Because I can get it, shweetheart."

Coaches of Snyder's caliber can and do make that kind of money, both here in Manhattan as well as at other major universities, with the possible exception of the University of Chicago and perhaps the Ivy League schools.

That being the case, the point is not to embarrass Snyder, but to examine the essential values we have as a culture.

Is it not ironic, for example, that the same week Snyder's $250,000 compensation package is made public is the very week that both the Faculty Senate and the Student Senate passed resolutions asking administration to find necessary funds so that $225,000 in library periodicals, the very heartbeat of a research institution, would not have to suffer further cuts.

Is it not ironic that we have just broken ground for a $28-million library addition for a library that has historically been the poorest-funded library with the smallest collection in the Big Eight?

Is it not ironic that Snyder is guaranteed an annual 7-percent raise while the faculty raise for this year was so tiny that numerous faculty lost ground due to increases in retirement and medical deductions?

Is it not ironic that in 1931 the average university professor earned about the same as a doctor or a lawyer, while today some of my talented professor colleagues are barely making ends meet and some qualify for subsidized housing?

What happens to a nation whose sense of values becomes so distorted that we mortgage our future on diversions of only fleeting interest at the expense of our essential soul?

Perhaps I'm overstating my case. I too pay attention to Wildcat football and am happy for our recent success in a program that has long been mediocre.

I regret Snyder's unease at having his salary revealed. But at the same time, I hope we can, as a nation, begin to re-focus on what may be a larger, more important issue, which has to do with our basic social and moral fabric; we need to re-examine our priorities.

Actually, I also would be embarrassed if my salary were revealed, not because it is princely but because it is so paltry, even after 30 years experience. But I'll do it so that Snyder is not out there alone for all to see.

I'll hang out there with him. I make $28,000. (Actually it was a bit worse, but I played hardball with the dean last year and talked him into a $3,000 raise.) So, I'm feeling a little flush.

I hope my colleagues are not too envious. Perhaps, Snyder, I could buy you a beer and commend you on your decision to go for a tie against Colorado last week and wish you and the team well on Saturday against Oklahoma.

Perhaps you could say a few kind words in support of our needs in the library. After all, I'd like a University our fine football team could be proud of.

Author of letter needs a tad more perspective

Editor,

This is in response to the letter submitted by Chad Campbell about the Denny case. He presents several arguments about what is justice, and I wanted to be sure everyone understood what he said.

Campbell complains that there is "no justice in America for an African American." Assuming this brash generalization is true, He then argues that because blacks will never experience justice, neither should anyone else. Thus, it is fine for every African American to go out and assault every European American because of their ethnicity.

Hey, this concept works in Bosnia, why not in our country? I'd suggest that Campbell start with anyone who believes in justice, for example, the numerous whites who marched with blacks in Washington, D.C., to hear Dr. King speak of true justice in the 1960s. Surely their beliefs don't matter. They're white, and because of that, they deserve a bit of oppression.

Campbell states that "many cops are nothing more than an American Gestapo to keep blacks down." Well, Campbell, how many is "many?" Two percent? Five percent? What about the majority of police officers who are intent on being public servants for everyone, men and women who risk their lives daily to help you keep your life?

What about the officers who were as appalled as you about Rodney King and any other similar incident? Surely their beliefs don't matter; they're white, and you should play "Cop Killer" in the background as you beat them into oblivion.

Campbell presents statistics from America's sad history. I don't deny that what has happened in the past is disturbing, but what's happening in our present is equally disturbing. Reginald Denny did not lynch those 33,000 blacks. Denny isn't responsible for slavery in America or for the blacks "killed in the middle passage."

That is the past. Neither you, Denny, nor I is responsible for it. But surely this doesn't matter. Denny is white, so offer him up as a blood sacrifice for all the wrongs ever done in this country.

The past can't be undone. To make innocent people responsible for things they didn't do, just because of their skin color, is racism. It's as wrong as the events of the past. To say Denny was guilty of some racist act perpetrated 400 years ago, and to say it's OK to assault him, just because he is white, is prejudice. It' s as wrong as the prejudice of the past.

You obviously believe that whites oppressing blacks is wrong. Why then, do you propose that blacks oppressing whites is OK? Both are racism andwrong.

Campbell, your racism and prejudice are disgusting and appalling. As much so as the history you cite. It's attitudes like yours that are responsible for those abominations of history. You say that "until there is justice for all ... then consider the Denny verdict a redemption." I say, Campbell, that until attitudes like that are changed, then there cannot be justice for all in America.

A Snyder 1st: OU in Manhattan

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Colorado downed Oklahoma 27-10 but only managed to tie K-State 16-16.

So, simple logic would conclude that the Wildcats would be a favorite to beat the Sooners Saturday at KSU Stadium, right?

Not necessarily.

"I don't think they (the Sooners) played nearly as well as they're capable of, and I think Colorado played very well in that game," K-State coach Bill Snyder said. "A lot of people would suggest that coming off the win against Texas had an impact in that ballgame. That was a tremendously big win for Gary (Gibbs, Oklahoma's coach) and for that program."

Oddsmakers certainly agree that Oklahoma's first loss was a mere letdown, and consequently picked the Sooners to win by eight points Saturday.

Oklahoma, 6-1 overall and 2-1 in the Big Eight conference, will travel to K-State, 5-1-1 overall and 1-1-1 in the conference, for the first time since 1987. Oklahoma has won the last 22 games, including nine straight in Manhattan.

But K-State should have the mental edge, having not lost a game at home in 11 straight contests.

The Sooners are seeded No. 14 in the Associated Press Poll, while K-State sits at 25th.

After playing five consecutive games in Norman, Okla., Snyder said it was time to play the Cats' schedule as intended.

"We made the decision a year ago that we would never do that again, because we were getting to the point where we could sustain ourselves without that kind of scheduling," Snyder said.

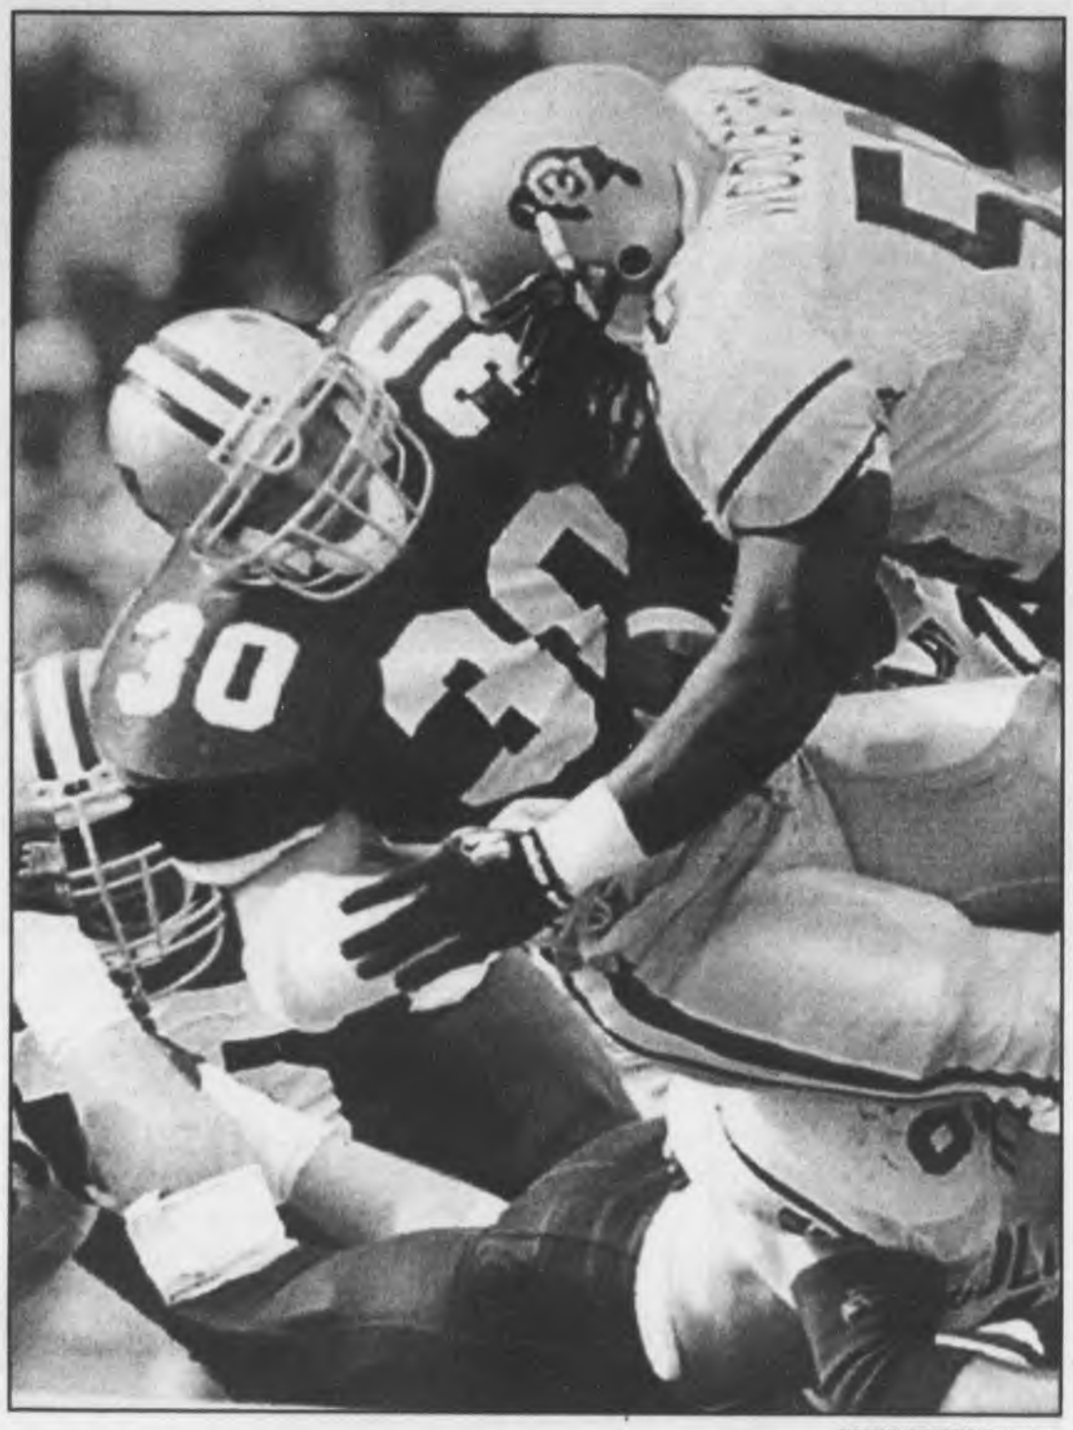
This game will complete a three-game swing against the Big Three, and a win against the Sooners would put K-State at 2-1-1 in the league — good enough for third place. If Nebraska beats Colorado at Boulder Saturday, the Cats would be tied with the Buffaloes for second.

Snyder said playing Nebraska, Colorado and Oklahoma consecutively is a concern.

"We have hopefully conditioned ourselves to deal with that," Snyder said. "In the entire time that we have been here, we have never had the luxury to be able to pick and choose when to get up for a ballgame. They've all been somewhat monumental for us."

Is there any reason the Sooners shouldn't be geared up for K-State?

"No, the tapes do not lie," Gibbs said. "This is a good football team, and this fact is apparent not only by their record but also by their game film."



Snyder said Oklahoma's offense is reminiscent of the traditional attack the Sooners are known for, but can show balance as well.

"I see an offense which could be the Oklahoma offense of old, if that's what they choose to emphasize," Snyder said. "They are more diverse than I've ever known Oklahoma to be."

Part of that balance relates to quarterback Cale Gundy. Gundy leads the league in passing efficiency with a 156.3 rating. Freshman James Allen contributes to the attack, running for 68 yards per game, which is the fourth-best mark in the league.

K-State seems to have the edge in total defense, ranking third in the league compared to fourth place for Oklahoma.

"All you have to say is they held Colorado to only 16 points," Gibbs said.

COLUMN

Salary-cap rule ensures parity among NBA teams

BOB LEHMAN

Wednesday, the New Jersey Federal Court of Appeals upheld as valid the contract between center Chris Dudley and the Portland Trail Blazers.

The NBA challenged this contract because of a one-year escape clause that will allow Dudley to become an unrestricted free agent after the first year of the multi-year contract.

This clause circumvents the league salary-cap rule. You see, if an unrestricted free agent re-signs with his previous team, that salary is not applied to the team's payroll under the salary cap.

So, the plan now is to purchase the best talent available with minimal salary up front. Then the players are allowed to "escape" from their contracts into early free agency only to be re-signed to a more lucrative contract with no salary restrictions.

Not a bad deal.

The NBA, however, sees things differently. It sees some creative owners inventing ways to get around a rule that is in place to ensure the competitiveness of the game.

Where I come from, getting around rules in a competitive situation is called cheating, and it is not commonly validated by a District Court of Appeals.

Wanting to build a championship team should be the ultimate goal of every organization in the NBA.

But dodging rules is not how it should be done. Rules are in place for a reason. That reason is not "to be broken," either.

This particular rule, the salary cap, is in place to level out the competitive field between large-market and small-market teams. The cap is a tool to ensure that games will be won on the court and not in the off-season meat market.

It has been said that the salary cap has outlived its usefulness in the NBA, that it places more emphasis on a player's worth than on his ability or on what he can bring to a team. Where I come from, this is called nonsense.

How is a player's monetary value determined? I'm no expert, but I think it is generally based on his performance. How, then, is it possible to place more emphasis on one than on the other?

Besides, who is it that won't take less money to play an important role on a team that already has several high-salaried players? It's the individual player, not the NBA, that has the wrong emphasis.

What is more important, money or playing the game?

The salary cap has the sole purpose of ensuring parity throughout the league. It performs this task very well.

You cannot find any totally dominant teams in the NBA. There are teams that are better than others, but the talent level of each team is quite even.

The practice of placing escape clauses in basketball players' contracts will inevitably cause the salary cap to become obsolete. Why have a rule in place if it can be legally avoided?

The loss of a salary cap in the NBA has the potential to devastate the league. As it is now, nearly every game, every night, is a good game to watch.

From the personalities to the skills, an NBA game, any NBA game, is an event to behold.

The absence of a salary cap will lead to rich teams with better, higher-paid talent and not-so-rich teams with not-so-much talent.

In other words, there will develop two distinct divisions of teams. No, not eastern and western; but good and bad.

This cannot be in the best interests of the game.

There are a few thing that I would like to see in professional basketball. I would like to see the salary cap stay intact.

I would like to see fair play off the court as well as on. I would like to see a player place more emphasis on playing for a team than on getting paid by an owner.

I would like to see all these things and more.

But with the decision handed down on Wednesday, two of these things are on their way out.

The other one never had a chance anyway.

CROSS COUNTRY

Drake uses low seed as motivation for Big Eight Championships

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Last year, the K-State women's cross country team shared the Big Eight Conference Championship with Colorado.

Despite returning the team nucleus that earned the Wildcats the championship last year, the Big Eight coaches poll predicted the Cats would finish fourth place in the Big Eight Cross Country Championships this year.

"Picking us to finish in fourth place was a real interesting thing to do," Coach Terry Drake said. "I also think it was the wrong thing to do, because the girls felt like they were insulted."

Drake also said the women will feed off the low pick.

"I have definitely played that fact up," Drake said. "The girls will try to use that to their advantage this weekend."

Championships are scheduled for this weekend in Columbia, Mo., and the University of Missouri will be host of the meet. The women's course will be 5,000 meters, and the men's race will be 8,000 meters.

"We have never ran on the course, but it is a relatively flat course," Drake said. "We've been simulating the course in practice. I have told them where the trouble spots are."

Leading the Cats this season have been Paulette Staats and Jeanene Rugan.

"I hope it all clicks this weekend," Drake said. "Paulette and Jeanene are definitely the top one-two punch in the Big Eight, and they have accepted that role well."

Nebraska is picked first in the women's competition, according to the coaches' poll, followed by Kansas and Colorado. The Cats are picked fourth, followed by Oklahoma State, Missouri, Oklahoma and Iowa State.

Nebraska coach Jay Dirksen said the teams from the Big Eight haven't competed against each other much this season.

"It's a hard way to pick teams when we don't run head-to-head," Dirksen said.

"Colorado is ranked higher, and I think Kansas is the best team in the conference."

Drake said the competition for the team title could be closer than the coaches' poll has predicted.

"There are about six girls that have separated themselves in the Big Eight," Drake said. "After the top six, it's any team's race, and we've talked about being in position to win."

The K-State men's team was also tabbed to finish fourth in the Big Eight by the coaches poll.

An injury to David Haskell probably took the men's team out of placing higher, Drake said.

"The loss of David has changed the focus more on individual and away from the team," Drake said.

Drake said Francis O'Neill and Ryan Clive-Smith have the best chances to win.

O'Neill is coming off a fifth-place finish at the Iowa State Memorial Classic on Oct. 16, where he covered the 8,000-meter course in 25:14. It was O'Neill's highest finish this season.

"Francis has been a little disappointed with his season so far," Drake said. "He really wanted to win at Iowa State. When it comes time to run, I won't be worried. He told me to tell the reporters that he will run hard this weekend."

SPORTS DIGEST

▶SNYDER SEMIFINALIST FOR AWARD

K-State coach Bill Snyder was selected Thursday as one of the 10 semifinalists for the Football News' 1993 National Coach of the Year Award.

In addition to Snyder, the list includes Bobby Bowden of Florida State, Terry Bowden of Auburn, John Cooper of Ohio State, Terry Donahue of UCLA, Lou Holtz of Notre Dame, Don Nehlen of West Virginia, Tom Osborne of Nebraska, Howard Schnellenberger of Louisville and George Welsh of Virginia.

Snyder, who was named the national coach of the year by ESPN in 1991, has guided the Wildcats to a 5-1-1 record and their first national ranking in 23 years this season. The Cats are currently ranked 22nd in the USA Today/CNN Coaches' Poll and 25th in the Associated Press Poll.

Snyder was also the Big Eight Coach of the Year in 1990 and 1991, and this season he led the Cats to their first 5-0 start since 1931.

The list will be trimmed to three finalists on Nov. 19, with the award being announced on Nov. 29.

Fans attending the K-State-Oklahoma game who already have parking passes should park in the lots west of KSU Stadium and enter through gates one, three, four or five. Fans without parking permits should enter through gates seven and eight and park on the east side of the stadium. Handicapped parking is available on both sides of the stadium.

Drive-up service is still available for fans wishing to purchase game-day tickets at KSU Stadium. A ticket booth will open at 8 a.m. Saturday between gates seven and eight along Kimball Avenue. Fans can enter gate seven to purchase their tickets or season-parking permits and then exit through gate eight.

▶CATS LOOK TO SNAP 6-MATCH SKID

The K-State volleyball team will compete in the Wichita State Invitational Friday and Saturday with hopes of breaking a six-match skid.

The Wildcats will take on the University of Sherbrook, from Sherbrook, Quebec, at 4:30 p.m. Friday.

On Saturday, the Cats' scheduled matches include Wichita State at 12:30 p.m. and Arkansas State at 4:30 p.m.

The Cats dropped to 7-15 on the season with a 3-0 loss to Nebraska Wednesday at Ahearn Field House.

Coach Patti Hagemeyer said although the squad is in a slump, team members' attitudes are good, and the team is focusing on learning from its miscues.

"The team is still working hard," Hagemeyer said. "This is all a part of development and building a program."

Hagemeyer said the team is going into this weekend's tournament intent on winning, but she doesn't know how much momentum it will build for the rest of the season.

"We've never been a team to feed off momentum," Hagemeyer said. "It would be good for them to get a taste of winning."

The netters are 0-7 at the half-way point in the Big Eight Conference schedule, and Hagemeyer said the season starts to seem longer and fatigue sets in on some of the players.

"The season seems to drag on forever at this point, but I think we're still doing the things we need to do in practice to get some wins," she said.

K-State resumes conference play at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, Nov. 3, at Ahearn Field House against the Iowa State Cyclones.

Smatterings

BY STEVEN ROCK

Nature calls, part 1: paying a price to pee

Ahh, the beauty of our judicial system.

In Fort Lauderdale, Fla., an intoxicated German man was arrested because he had to urinate.

Let me explain.

Johann Peter Grzeganek, a man who speaks very little English, had recently boarded a plane when he heard (felt?) nature calling. He asked a flight attendant where the restroom was, but she told him he would have to wait until the plane had taken off.

"No, no, no, the roof would go," Grzeganek then said, presumably with his legs tightly crossed.

But the flight attendant took it to mean that the airplane, not the poor man's bladder, would explode. Grzeganek was arrested on federal charges of interfering with a flight crew and making a false bomb threat.

Grzeganek, 23, then spent nine months in jail. Nine months.

It's a good thing Grzeganek didn't have to go No. 2. The poor guy might be on death row.

Nature calls, part 2: an $18-million whiz

Who would have thought that taking a leak could be such a traumatic event?

Indeed, the practice of urination cost Johann Peter Grzeganek nine months of his life (see above Smattering).

Recent reports confirmed that it cost the U.S. Air Force $18 million.

Again, let me explain.

Lt. Col. Don Snelgrove, a master pilot in the Air Force who has amassed more than 2,500 hours of flight time since 1976, was 35,000 feet above ground when he felt the urge to relieve himself. So he set his F-16C on automatic pilot and reached for the "piddle-pack," a plastic container with a dehydrated sponge inside.

But after he undid his lap belt and adjusted the seat upward, the belt buckle got wedged between the seat and the stick that controls the aircraft. The stick was shoved to the right, sending the plane into a massive spin. It eventually crashed into a barren Turkish hillside, injuring no one.

Snelgrove had jumped ship 2,000 feet above ground and was not seriously injured.

There were no reports, though, as to whether or not any dangling body parts snagged a tree on the way down.

Forget the AP poll — K-State ranked 32nd!

Just in case the $17 million Bramlage Coliseum, the $3.3 million Dev Nelson Press Box, the $2 million indoor practice facility and the $100,000 worth of weight-lifting equipment don't do it, K-State now has yet another — and perhaps more powerful — tool to use when courting potential recruits.

Inside Edge, a publication for college-age males put out by Harvard University undergraduates, recently did a study of 300 schools and their party quotients. K-State was ranked an impressive 32nd.

The 300 colleges were ranked on, among other things, the bar and club scene, the party scene, attractiveness of female students and ease of classes.

Incidentally, KU was the only Big Eight school that didn't make the list.

There obviously wasn't a category called "Former Athletes Currently Working in Fast-Food Restaurants."

PHONE TAG

Time: 9:23 a.m.
Date: Thursday, Oct. 28.
Place: Farrell Library.
Number of rings: 4.
Answerer: Tamara Endecott.
Year and major: freshman in horticulture science.

Q. Why did you answer the phone?
A. "I was picking up some books and talking to a friend, and she said, 'Go answer the phone.' It was getting really annoying."
Q. But it only rang like three or four times.
A. "Well, it was annoying my friend."
Q. Did you hear it ringing?
A. "Yes."
Q. Did it annoy you?
A. "Not really. I live at Smurthwaite House, and we hear the phone ringing all the time."
Q. Did you have any idea why the phone might be ringing?
A. "No. I had no idea. I just figured some silly person was calling a wrong number." (Silly? I thought the only people who used the word "silly" were Captain Kangaroo, Collegian city/gov editor Wade Sisson and my grandma.)
Q. You said you live at Smurthwaite. Isn't that for really smart people?
A. "I'd like to think so, but I don't know."
Q. Well, don't you have to have like a 5.8 grade point average?" (And, consequently, no life?)
A. "I don't know what the GPA requirements are. All I know is that I hope I make it this semester."
Q. Is that iffy at this point?
A. "Yes. Very iffy. My Spanish III class isn't going too good."
Q. Hey — if I, a journalism major, can get an A in Spanish III, anybody can.
A. "You got an A? Who did you have?"
Q. I couldn't begin to tell you. That was like seven years ago.

LOCAL TALES OF GHOSTLY ENCOUNTERS

Story by: Kim Dillon

Design&Illustration by: Britton Harper

Manhattan has its share of ghosts.

If you don't believe, you may soon.

Four K-State fraternities have stories about ghosts who haunt the houses.

Two ghosts are said to inhabit the Delta Sigma Phi house. One, named George Segall, is still said to haunt the place. The other ghost, who has no name, was a nurse who wandered the halls with her medicine tray. She has not been seen in years.

The Delta Sigs' house was originally built as a YMCA and was turned into Saint Mary Parkview Hospital, before housing the fraternity.

George Segall was the last patient to die in the Saint Mary Parkview Hospital. As patients were moved to the new location, Segall fell off his bed and got stuck between his bed and the wall. When someone checked his room, it was assumed he had been moved to the other hospital. George died during the night, as the story goes.

One night when he was a pledge, Daryl Rieke, senior in milling science, and his roommates heard a sound coming from the middle of their bedroom as they were trying to fall asleep.

They thought the sound came from the neighboring room, Rieke said. Then they thought it was the air conditioning.

They soon realized the sound — it was a voice.

Before Rieke experienced the occurrence, he said he thought the story about George was just a rush tool.

"It kinda made a believer of me when it happened," Rieke said. "It was definitely unexplainable."

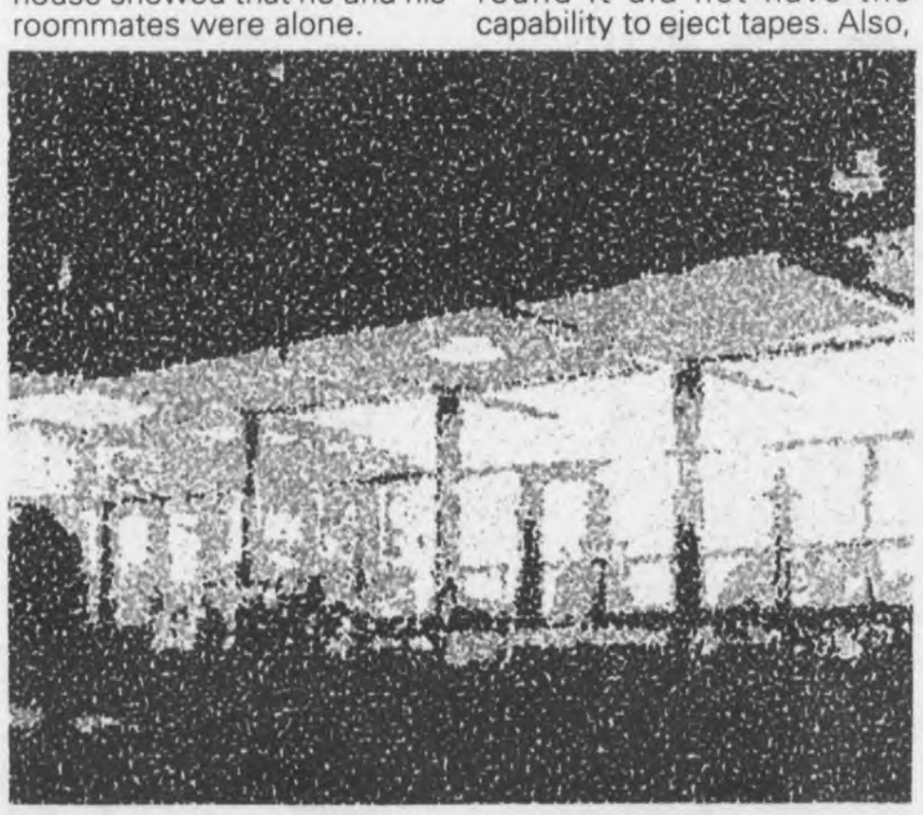
Jerrod Overly, junior in business management, said he had a similar experience.

One night last year when there were only a couple of people in the house, the doorknob in Overley's room started rattling. He turned off the television and walked to the door.

The rattling stopped.

Even though he did not hear anyone walk away, he opened the door, and nobody was there. Overley's room is across the hall from the room where George died.

The Kappa Sigma house also has been plagued by a ghost whose name is Irving.



Irving evidently hung himself in the fraternity's original house and followed along when the fraternity moved, Patrick Duerksen, senior in agribusiness, said.

Daryn Britton, senior in business, was working in his room a couple of years ago and had what might have been an encounter with Irving.

Britton and his roommate were the only people staying in the house at the time. One morning, at about 2 a.m., he was painting the hallway when he saw a figure out of the corner of his eye.

He said he turned to look, and the figure of a man was there a split second before disappearing.

Britton said something had been there, but a search of the house showed that he and his roommates were alone.

He said he believes ghosts exist because he saw one.

"He usually only appears on breaks when nobody is around much," Britton said.

Another story involving Irving, Britton said, occurred during a school break when a member was staying in the house alone.

The member was listening to a radio when someone asked him to turn it down.

Britton said the member said OK and did it, then realized he was the only person in the house.

Another tale unfolded in the fall of 1991.

All Kappa Sig pledges were out of the house, and all of the actives were downstairs. Jon Chastain, sophomore in construction science, said he heard a sound emanating from the upstairs.

It was as though all the beds were being turned upside-down.

When everyone went upstairs to check it out, they found nothing out of the ordinary. No one was there.

•The tale of a possessed VCR

In the spring of 1992, Lance Miller, junior in pre-law, said two Kappa Sig pledges were studying after they had watched a videotape and turned off their videocassette recorder.

While they were studying, the tape suddenly ejected itself. The pledge farthest from the remote blamed the one sitting closer to the remote for ejecting the tape.

When the two looked more closely at the remote, they found it did not have the capability to eject tapes. Also, the VCR was turned off.

In the previous Phi Gamma Delta house, now Pi Kappa Phi house, a ghost named Duncan is rumored to roams the halls.

Duncan was a Theta Xi pledge who was killed in the house when the Theta Xis lived there before the Fijis.

The explanations for his death, outlined in "Haunted Heartland" are as follows: He was struck fatally in the head by a pledge's paddle. He died of a heart attack. He was killed after falling or being pushed down the stairs.

A room in the house — the room the Fijis decided to turn into a library when they moved — may have had traces of Duncan in it.

Chris Hupe, Fiji member and senior in finance, said red paint was on the walls in the room.

The Fijis repeatedly tried to paint the walls, but the red kept showing through the paint. Finally, they gave up and paneled halfway up the walls.

In the same room, a paddle bearing Duncan's name had hung above the door. Hupe said the paddle's outline showed through each time it was painted.

During Thanksgiving break of Hupe's junior year, he said three members stayed in the Fiji house.

One night when they were upstairs in the sleeping dorm, the three heard the door at the bottom of the stairs slam shut and the sound of somebody coming upstairs.

Nobody was seen walking, however, and the door couldn't have opened on its own because it is on a spring.

The Pi Kaps, who just moved into the old Fiji house, also tried to paint the library tan.

Again, the red paint kept bleeding through.

The Pi Kaps tried to put wallpaper on the walls, but the red paint bled through undaunted, Andy Larson, senior in geology, said.

•Man locks himself in room to escape spectral woman

During a Christmas intersession, two members were staying in the Triangle house, Mike Schnieders, sophomore in civil engineering and geology, said.

One of them was in the basement and thought the other had returned from class because he heard someone walking across the kitchen floor. When he went upstairs to find the other member, he couldn't find anybody.

He went back upstairs to do some more investigating. When he went into the office, he saw the image of a woman in the room. He promptly ran to his room and locked himself in.

A Triangle house member who was staying alone in the house during a Thanksgiving break was sleeping late. He woke up to the sounds of a giggling child playing, Schnieders said.

The member got the impression someone was bouncing on the bunk above him, but nobody was there, so he went back to sleep. He woke up to giggling again and felt someone tugging on his sleeve. When he opened his eyes, he saw the image of a little boy who ran off.

Terror trail highlights Zoo's SPOOK Tacular

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The Sunset Zoo is sponsoring the eighth SPOOK Tacular today through Sunday

Angie Fenstermacher, marketing development assistant of Sunset Zoo, said the event is a perfect opportunity for parents to take their children out for a safe night of trick-or-treating.

SPOOK Tacular offers two different trails that run from 5:30 to 9 p.m.

The terror trail features the "dearly departed tour." The Peek-A-Boo is for small children, Fenstermacher said.

"We have a 70-foot tunnel of terror and a chamber of horrors," Fenstermacher said. "Children under 12 must be accompanied by an adult to dare to walk on the dark side."

"On the Peek-A-Boo path, there are characters like the Pink Panther, the crash dummies, Marge and Bart Simpson and the characters from the 'Wizard of Oz,'" Fenstermacher said.

There will be many prizes given away in the three days, she said.

"Area merchants are providing the treats," Fenstermacher said. "There is a trip for two to anywhere in the continental United States to be given away."

Many K-State students are volunteering their time to help with the SPOOK Tacular, she said.

Jason Sullivan, freshman in engineering, said his associate class in the Pi Kappa Tau fraternity is helping with the Peek-A-Boo trail. The class is volunteering for its community service.

"As a fraternity, it is to give something back to the community," Sullivan said. "We have philanthropy activities scheduled, but every associate class has to do a community service.

"Each associate class starts out small — like the SPOOK Tacular," he said.

Nathan Culley, sophomore in biology and pre-veterinary medicine, said the Smith Scholarship House is helping with the terror trail.

"I'm a volunteer at the zoo, so I was going to help anyway," Culley said. "We received a letter the zoo sends to fraternity and sororities and other organizations.

"I told everyone at the house meeting it's a lot of fun and you get to scare people, and we ended up with 10 to 12 guys," he said.

Bars want you in costume

Manhattan bars sponsor contests with monster motifs

VICKY TILLIER

There is no excuse for you to be Boo—red on Halloween.

Aggieville has several activities that have been planned for today, Saturday and Sunday to celebrate the holiday.

Several Manhattan bars are offering prizes and money for the best costumes.

Silverado Saloon will be giving away a $50 prize to the best-dressed couple, owner Jon Farrell said.

Kickers Bar & Grill and Bobby T's Bar & Deli are sponsoring a Monster Mash Shuffle costume contest between the two bars.

Participants can win prizes for having the best costume at both places, said Bob Limbocker, owner of Bobby T's.

Scoreboard and Snookie's are having an all-University party for students.

"We will be doing the limbo, bobbing for apples, dancing and giving away prizes for the best costume," Jack Rowlett, owner of Scoreboard, said.

Rowlett said people will win prizes when they bob for apples.

"There is only one contest. The winner could be the best-dressed group, or the best-dressed guy or girl, it doesn't matter," Keith Eyestone, owner of Snookie's, said.

Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon will also be having a costume contest, and special Halloween tapes will be played for entertainment, said Jeffery Mays, manager of Last Chance.

Mike Troute, manager of the Gin Mill Lounge, said he is throwing one of the biggest costume parties around at the Wareham Opera House.

Rowdy's Halloween Bash is a good atmosphere for all age groups.

Longhorn's is also planning to have a costume contest, said Troy Warnken, manager of Longhorn's.

"Floating ghosts and cobwebs will decorate the ceiling, and a guy will be jumping out of a coffin," he said. "It will be very dark and spooky."

Lucky BrewGrille will also have a costume party.

"There will be five different costume categories," said Bob Leetch, owner of Lucky BrewGrille. "The categories will be Most Original, First Family, Brady Bunch, Sleezoid and Kristinia Gann."

Halloween Costumes

Popular movies create custume demands

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

It's that time of year again when kids, both young and old, begin searching for that perfect Halloween costume.

The hottest costumes vary from year to year according to personal tastes and popular movies, Ellen Prescott, manager of the seasonal department at Wal-Mart said.

This year's movie successes, such as "Bram Stoker's Dracula," "Aladdin" and "Coneheads," have led to increased rental of Dracula, genie and Conehead costumes, Pam Miller, owner of Marie's Costumes and Formal Wear, said.

Body parts, including hands, feet, legs, arms and heads, have also been selling quickly at Marie's.

"The body parts are a take-off of Jeffrey Dahmer," Miller said. "Wigs, like the huge Texas curls, have also been going like crazy."

Seventy percent of the business at Marie's is done from October to December, and customers range from children to adults, Miller said.

The store has been taking reservations for costumes since Sept. 1, and 200 customers per day normally visit the store during the last two weeks of October.

Although accessories, masks and wigs are sold at Marie's, the costumes are rented for an average of $20 to $45 for a 24-hour period. Customers reserve costumes, sign a contract and put down a refundable security deposit for the use of the costumes.

Ninja and cave-man costumes have been popular this year at Halloween Happenings, in the Manhattan Town Center, Laura Moore, manager of Coach House Gifts, said.

Halloween Happenings, a seasonal division of Coach House Gifts, is open from the last week in September through Halloween. It is located across from the information desk at the mall.

In addition to costumes, customers can purchase Halloween decorations, masks and accessories at the store. Costume prices range from $18 to $40 for adults and $14 to $32 for children.

Wal-Mart offers costumes ranging in price from $5 to $25, Prescott said.

"Our popular costumes trend to cartoons and movies," she said. "The masks from 'Jurassic Park' and Mickey and Minnie Mouse costumes have been popular this year."

"As popular as the store has been this year, it's wise to come down and get your costume," Moore said. "But it's fun to look around even if you're not going to buy."

Safe fun offered for kids

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

Trick-or-treating from door to door has become less popular in recent years. However, children in Manhattan still have many options for celebrating Halloween.

Manhattan Town Center is providing trick-or-treating opportunities from 3:30 to 6 p.m. on Sunday throughout the mall. All of the stores will be offering candy provided by Town Center.

There will also be free photographs taken from 3:30 to 5 p.m., which can be picked up from CPI One Hour Photo Finish.

"The mall will be wall to wall with children. Parents love it. It's always a big event," Shannon Maddux, Town Center employee, said.

K-State students are also helping parents find safe places to trick-or-treat.

Ford Hall President Barb Stucky, sophomore in secondary education, said Ford residents will have a lobby-decorating contest in anticipation of welcoming trick-or-treaters on Halloween night.

Tour guides will lead the children through the halls from 6:30 until the candy runs out, Stucky said.

Although Ford residents do not have to participate, Stucky said the majority do. Besides offering treats, some of the residents dress in costumes.

"They just love to see the little kids in costumes. Although they might go out with their friends later, everyone tries to be there for the kids," she said.

Visiting the residents also makes Halloween more convenient for parents because they only have to drive to one location, Stucky said.

Trick-or-treaters will not be the only children benefiting from Halloween — Pi Kappa Alpha will be host to its annual Halloween Hunt to benefit Big Brothers and Sisters of Manhattan.

The Pikes decorate their house, and eight sororities have chosen to participate as well. They sent fliers to area grade schools to promote the event. The houses will be open on Sunday from 5 to 9 p.m.

It is the third year for the Halloween Hunt, Dave Welte, junior in business and Pike member, said.

The event has grown over the years because of increased sponsorship and response by parents.

"We have a lot of fun with it, plus it makes us look good to the community. We give the younger kids a safe place to go, and it shows the parents that we care," Welte said.

In the Pike house, a haunted house will be set up on the first floor, and there will be room-to-room trick-or-treating.

Many of the ghost, witches, vampires and monsters will be going to safer places to trick-or-treat this Halloween.

A Manhattan church and a community center are both offering alternatives to door to door visits by area children.

Westview Community Church is having a party from 6 to 8 p.m. Sunday.

"Some organizations are having events on Saturday, but our purpose is to give the children a safe place to have candy and play games," Debbie Kluttz, party chairperson, said.

Westview has celebrated Halloween at their church for nine years, Kluttz said.

"We have a carnival type party, and the entrance fee is a bag of candy," she said. "We have many games for the children to play and a costume contest. We pick the funniest and the scariest."

The church has received donations from area businesses to help keep the cost of the party down.

"McDonalds donates leftover Happy Meal toys for our prizes," Kluttz said.

Other area business donated items to give to the children, she said.

"We are expecting 400 to 500 parents and children," she said. "The numbers increase every year."

The Douglas Center, a community youth and adult center, is having a Halloween celebration on Saturday.

"We are having a party for young children at 6:30 p.m.," Larry Nicholson, director of the center, said. "We will have games like bobbing for apples and candy for the little children. Then at 7:30 p.m., we will have a costume dance for the older children.

The center decided to have the party on Saturday, because Sunday is a school night and some children will want to go trick-or-treating, he said.

"We offer many community services, and this is a way for the children to have fun, Nicholson said.

Pikes' haunted house to offer ghosts, goblins

SUSAN HATTEBERG
Collegian

Parents wanting a safe place for their kids to trick-or-treat this year should check out the Pi Kappa Alpha haunted house.

The haunted house, at 2021 College View, will be in the basement of the Pike house from 5 to 9 p.m. Oct. 31, Brady Sauder, senior in kinesiology, said.

"There will be ghosts dropping from the ceiling and goblins behind every corner," Sauder said. "It's a lot better than any other haunted house."

The haunted house will consist of many different things, said Paul Tuttle, co-chairman of the Pi Kappa Alpha Halloween hunt.

"We might have people dressed up as Jason or wolfman," Tuttle said.

There will probably be spaghetti for intestines and people hanging from the ceiling, Tuttle said.

Sauder said last year a person dressed in an ape costume led the kids through the haunted house.

The haunted house is a philanthropy, a service to the elementary kids of Manhattan, Sauder said.

"We put it on to provide a safe place for children to trick-or-treat on Halloween," Sauder said. "Parents of the younger kids like it because they can go to one place and get all the candy they need."

Tuttle said parents like the idea of the Riley County Police Department sponsoring the haunted house. It takes about 15-20 minutes to go through the haunted house, Tuttle said.

Last year's attendance, estimated at 1,000 children, is expected again this year, Sauder said.

"Even though it rained last year, we had a steady flow for the four-hour period," Sauder said, "We gave out a lot of candy."

The haunted house is free, and any donations are given to Big Brothers/Big Sisters, Sauder said.

"It is aimed toward elementary-school children, but anyone is welcome," Sauder said.

The Pikes decorate rooms with jack-o'-lanterns and anything that makes it look like Halloween, Sauder said.

"The guys really enjoy putting it on," Sauder said.

Eight sororities will also help out by providing candy for the trick-or-treaters at the various sorority houses, Sauder said.

"This is to give the parents more safe places to take their kids trick-or-treating," he said.

A uniformed officer will be at each house to ensure safety, Sauder said.

He eats light bulbs for a living

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Don't try this!

Jim Rose, who chews razor blades and eats light bulbs for a living, is explaining the best way to stick a meat skewer through one's face.

"There is, like on a tennis racket, a sweet spot. If you pierce yourself in that place and extract it, it heals real quick."

The tongue is a similar story, he adds.

"You can cut your tongue — I've done that several times with razor blades — put a rag on it, and 20 seconds later the cut is gone."

Rose's tone suggests a school nurse offering helpful hints for removing a splinter or soothing a minor burn.

But this is the 36-year-old creator of the Jim Rose Circus Side Show, the most horrifying show on Earth, a man who just recovered from internal injuries as a result of eating five light bulbs in one day.

His Seattle-based troupe attracted national attention while on tour with the 1992 Lollapalooza festival. It since has gained a steady following in Europe, along with notoriety that has brought protests from Catholic groups for something called "The Electric Jesus" bit.

Rose describes himself and his masochistic colleagues as like-minded monsters.

There's the Amazing Mr. Lifto, who hoists weighty objects with various pierced appendages, and the Enigma, a sword swallower with a taste for earth worms, maggots and grasshoppers.

The Torture King performs the meat skewer number, and Matt "The Tube" Crowley, a former Seattle pharmacist, does highly disturbing things with a contraption more commonly used to force feed hospital patients.

Seniors to leave legacy with scholarship

TARA EUBANKS
Collegian

A scholarship specifically tailored for seniors is in the planning stages.

The K-State Student Foundation has created the program for the seniors of 1995. Seniors graduating in May 1994 will be asked to contribute a pledge to these scholarships.

"It's a program where the seniors can leave a legacy in terms of giving money," said Patrick Duerksen, senior in agribusiness and vice president of programming at Student Foundation. "They get to know that they're helping out an incoming senior," he said.

The scholarship will go to seniors with a minimum of a 2.5 grade point average.

Students will be asked to write an essay telling how they have made a difference at K-State, said Jacquelyn Pinney, senior in human ecology and president of Student Foundation.

"This is not a scholarship to see who has joined the most clubs or has the best resumé," Pinney said. "We want people to win these scholarships that have truly made good contributions to their organizations or to K-State in some way."

Student Foundation has not determined the amount of money that will be requested of May '94 seniors. The donation will be about $40, either to be given in one semester or divided into two payments. The number and amounts of the scholarships will depend on the amount of money Student Foundation raises next semester, Duerksen said.

A goal of the program is to maintain or increase K-State's national ranking of seventh place in alumni donations.

Of all K-State alumni, 25.1 percent contributed to the University in 1992-93, according to KSU Foundation statistics.

"By starting this program, students will realize how important alumni support is," Pinney said.

The program will need gift-giving seniors to be effective.

"What we want to do is to restore the tradition of seniors leaving a parting gift to the campus," Greg Leet, senior adviser for Student Foundation, said.

"Today the pressing need isn't to beautify the campus but to benefit other students with money," Leet said.

"The senior gift-giving program leaves both parties, the recipient of the scholarship and the senior donor, satisfied that by putting time and effort into K-State, they will receive benefits for a lifetime," Pinney said.

Dutch find paintings missing since 1945

Nazis, Red Army looted art worth tens of millions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — First the Nazis looted them from the Dutch, then the Red Army looted them from the Nazis. Now the Dutch have found them again.

But getting back the treasure trove of 306 Old Master drawings is something else again, the Dutch said Thursday.

The drawings found in the cellars of Moscow's Pushkin Museum have been identified as the bulk of the famed Koenigs Collection, worth tens of millions of dollars and missing since 1945.

A team of experts sent to Moscow by the Dutch government returned this week from authenticating the drawings, and reported them in excellent condition.

"This visit was purely an art-history exercise. The return of the paintings wasn't on the agenda," team representative Marie de Zwaan said.

A Dutch-Russian group working on the Koenigs Collection agreed to organize a Dutch exhibition of the works and will meet Nov. 15-19 in the Netherlands to discuss whether the drawings will be returned to Dutch control.

None of the works have been on public display since they were taken by the Nazis.

Rotterdam's Boymans van Beuningen Museum, which was forced to hand the Old Master drawings over to the Nazis, wants to be the first to show them off again.

The collection includes a Peter Paul Rubens drawing of his wife Helena Fourment and "The Lion" by Rembrandt. Other artists include Correggio, Titian, Van Dijk, Durer and Holbein.

But 184 of the 490 drawings originally taken by the Nazis are still missing.

For decades the Dutch government has been demanding the return of the drawings, but it was only last year that the Russian government admitted to having the Koenigs Collection.

It was assembled by Franz Koenigs, a German-born Dutch industrialist, during the 1920s.

Baron Daniel van Beuningen, a patron of the museum that bears his name, bought the collection in 1941. But he was forced to sell most of it to Adolf Hitler's agent Hans Posse during the Nazi occupation of the Netherlands.

The works, intended for a museum Hitler wanted to set up in his native Austria, were taken to Dresden, later occupied by Soviet Russian forces.

The drawings disappeared at the end of the war, along with millions of other art treasures taken from Germany to the Soviet Union.

The Soviets and their East German allies repeatedly stalled efforts to locate the missing Dutch collection.

"An additional $2 million needs to be raised for the library."

KIRK BAUGHAN
ASSOC. DIRECTOR OF THE ESSENTIAL EDGE CAMPAIGN

Academics had priority in five-year fund-raising project

Of the $160 million raised by the Essential Edge Campaign, 86 percent went to academics, and 14 percent went to athletics.

University President Jon Wefald said this shows K-State alumni have placed academics as the first priority.

The campaign included projects from each of K-State's eight colleges, Farrell Library, the new art museum and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Project goals focused on scholarships, professorships, new equipment, research and facilities improvement.

"I think it was a very balanced campaign between academics and athletics — and a very fair campaign," Wefald said.

After passing its goal of $100 million in the summer of 1992, the Essential Edge Campaign continued to receive alumni support.

The total amount raised from the campaign was $163,648,600. Cash amounts totaled $122 million, and the final $41 million has been pledged.

These official results will be released at the upcoming annual meeting of the KSU Foundation's Board of Trustees tonight.

One of the most important accomplishments of the campaign is that it met its goal, said Kirk Baughan, associate director of the Essential Edge Campaign.

He also said the library addition will be a lasting effect of the campaign.

"I suppose, looking back on it 25 to 50 years from now, the whole library campaign will probably stand as the single-most important thing," Baughan said.

The campaign served as a catalyst for the library's fundraising by developing and focusing alumni and student interest, he said.

Fundraising will continue for the library campaign.

"An additional $2 million needs to be raised for the library," Baughan said.

This private fundraising is an ongoing aspect of the campaign and not a second phase to the campaign, he said.

The additional money is needed to finish the physical structure of the new library, Baughan said.

Success of the entire campaign centered on the volunteer involvement and leadership of the alumni, Baughan said.

"Volunteer involvement and volunteer leadership was the critical aspect or element of the campaign," he said.

Some of the ways alumni volunteered included being hosts to meetings and serving as project chairs and committee members.

"We tend to focus on money, but the volunteer leadership that was recognized is a long-term human aspect of the campaign," Baughan said.

A key volunteer for the campaign was 1950 graduate Robert Hagans.

Hagans, from Kansas City, served as the national campaign chairman.

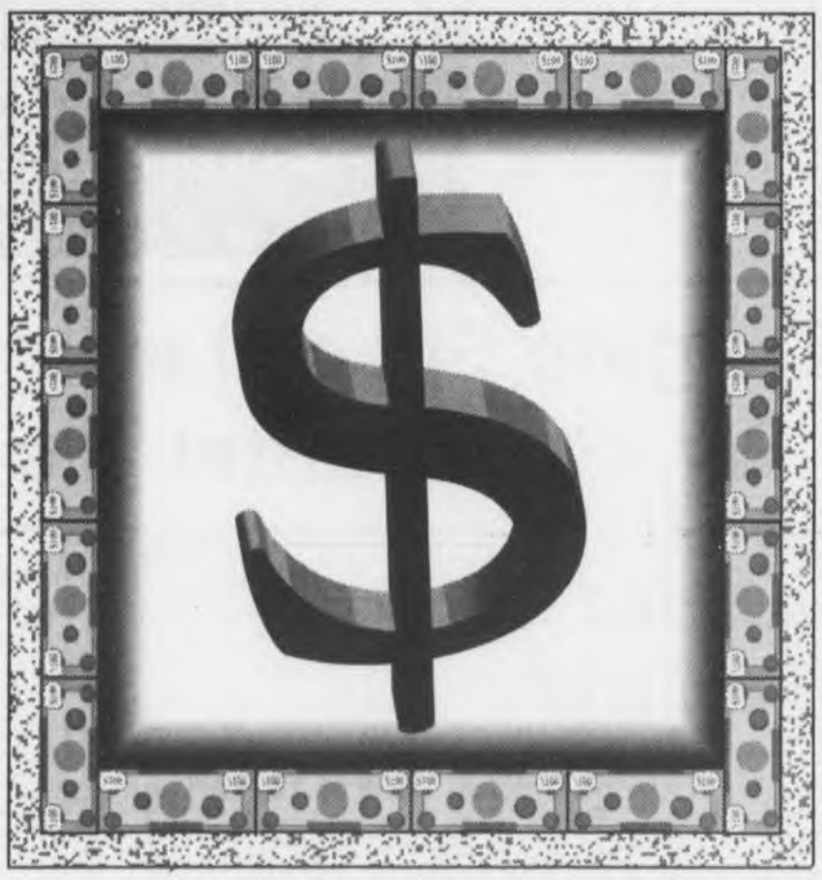
As chairman, Hagans, who was co-emcee to the campaign kick-off with Gordon Jump, traveled across the country to regional campaign meetings and made gifts to the colleges of Business Administration, Arts and Sciences and Agriculture.

In business administration, he has funded two faculty chairs and two scholarships, and he has also funded scholarships in each of the other colleges.

Jump, 1956 K-State graduate, current actor and campaign spokesman, will salute Hagans for his work on the campaign at the upcoming Board of Trustees meeting.

The academic climate at K-State also played a role in the success of the campaign, Baughan said.

"The fact that the University was on an up-swing helped," he said.



Baughan also said the alumni felt pride in giving to a University that is expanding academically.

One of the disappointments of the campaign is that not every project met its goal, Baughan said.

"We would have liked to have had all of the colleges reach their goals," Baughan said. "But there were uncontrollable factors."

For instance, the construction economy for large buildings was slow, and many K-State graduates were affected, he said.

The colleges of Architecture and Design, Arts and Sciences and Business Administration fell short of their goals.

"Other than that, everybody's pretty happy," Baughan said.

Wefald said the campaign was important to K-State for two reasons.

K-State desperately needed the private funds for scholarships, professorships, faculty supplements, equipment and long-term endowments, he said.

The second reason K-State needed the campaign was because of cutbacks in state funding.

"During this period of time was when state funding has dropped," Wefald said.

There was not enough funding from the state to keep the University in a vital academic position, he said. So, the campaign was a result of the need to supplement the inadequacies of state funding.

This was the first large capital campaign, other than the campaign to fund Bramlage Coliseum, Baughan said.

A campaign can help focus alumni, faculty and administration on a single project, he said.

"In general, a campaign helps focus people on immediate kinds of gifts," he said.

Many alumni have the intention to give, but a campaign gets their attention focused, Baughan said. Campaigns also present deadlines to alumni.

Alumni support of academics was another key to the success of the campaign.

K-State ranked first in the Big Eight Conference and seventh nationally in alumni support among 112 public research/doctoral universities during the past fiscal year, according to a report by the Council for Aid to Education in New York.

During fiscal year 1992, 27.1 percent of K-State alumni gave to the University. In fiscal year 1993, 25.1 percent of K-State's alumni gave to the University. The closest Big Eight school was Iowa State University with 21 percent of its alumni donating to the university.

"This shows how loyal our alumni really are," Wefald said.

The Essential Edge Campaign officially began July 1, 1988, and officially ended June 30, 1993.

The Foundation credits the campaign for increasing annual gifts to the University from about $12 million before the campaign to about $20 million in 1992.

Since the campaign, the number of donors has also nearly doubled, said Gordon Dowell, director of publications for the Foundation.

The Foundation manages more than 3,000 accounts, and 750 of those accounts were created during the campaign, Baughan said.

Those range from accounts such as a $5,000 endowed scholarship to a $750,000 faculty chair, he said.

As for a future campaign, that will be about five years down the road.

"Generally, there is at least five years between major capital campaigns," Baughan said. "We will be doing other mini-campaigns."

Those mini-campaigns include completing funding for Throckmorton Hall and Farrell Library and getting funding for more presidential scholarships, he said.

"We can't stop now," Wefald said. "We've got to keep going.

"Most importantly, it enhanced academic and research projects that we otherwise wouldn't be able to touch," he said. "It kept us moving in a very positive direction. And it definitely enhances our progress toward academic excellence."

Debtor's guilt causes much anxiety

Dear Cassandra,

I have this problem. You see, I have always prided myself in being debt-free. Well, last May, I made this bet. We shook hands, and I soon lost.

Since then, I have been trying to repay him, but he will not cash in on his winnings. He knows that I can't stand being in debt, so I just asked him why he wouldn't accept payment. He couldn't give me an answer.

Lately, he has been trying to convince me that I have already paid him back, or that we agreed on a different bet than the one that we shook hands on.

I can't accept his version or payment of the bet. This is driving me crazy! I don't want to tell him to go to hell because we are good friends. I realize that I should be happy that I do not have to pay up, but my pride and moral upbringing tells me differently.

What should I do? I have tried everything.

Signed,

"I can't get no satisfaction. ... "

Dear Can't,

OK. I don't get this, but I'll do my best to give you my advice.

You didn't, however, tell me if repayment was to be in the form of money. If that was the case, which it doesn't sound like it is, you could simply leave the cash in his pocket, so to speak.

But, like I said, this repayment doesn't sound like a money issue. It sounds like some sort of service or favor. If that's the case, you certainly can't make him accept it. And if you can't make someone accept something, it becomes impossible to give it to them. It's not your fault. You just can't do it.

Don't tell him to go to hell. That isn't necessary. But you need to get over your pride and stiff morality. If it doesn't matter to him, why should it matter so much to you?

The solution to just let the issue go may sound morally reprehensible to you, but you may have to deal with that.

REVIEW

'Hocus Pocus' runs on

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

This Halloween weekend, bloodthirsty teenagers, while searching for the perfect slasher-horror flick, will probably raid local video stores. However, others might be content with lighthearted, comical entertainment.

For this group, "Hocus Pocus" may just be the right escape.

It all begins in the late 1600s when three wretched witches (Bette Midler, Sarah Jessica Parker and Kathy Najimy) are hanged in Salem. Three hundred years later, they return to the legendary Sanderson House, their old home, hungry for fresh, young children to devour.

In the meantime, Max (Omri Katz), a new kid in school, is adjusting to life in Salem. This makes for a nice, albeit contrived, family-style situation that is ruined by the return of the witches.

The film takes a turn for the worse when Max, his sister and a girl from school spend the rest the movie trying to avoid being trapped and eaten by the Sanderson sisters.

After only 40 minutes, the film becomes so disorganized and blatently pointless that the audience might lose interest. Loud, reckless commotion detracts from the actual plot by trying to become the plot. There are several seemingly satisfactory stopping points to the film — even after one hour.

Curiously enough, "Hocus Pocus" magically never wants to end.

As a children's film, this is too frightful. Numerous unsuitable scenes waste our time, especially when the film could be wrapping up just about NOW. For instance, there is a graphic, tacky scene of a run-over cat. In other scenes, a headless corpse violently pursues the main protagonists only to be further dismembered in ensuing developments.

In addition, there is an inappropriate scene at the beginning of the film in which the three witches kidnap and put a helpless young girl to death. This disturbing scene, however innocently intended, gives rise to the main conflict of the movie.

"Hocus Pocus," even with its politically incorrect and senseless events, appeals to the average college student who wants to vegetate at ease with exaggerated fun and chuckles.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Don't forget to buy your Halloween candy. Your house may be popular this year before you escape for parts yet unknown.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): In celebration of Halloween, take off the mask.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't leave your jack-o'-lantern lit too long. Burning vegetables can be noxious.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): BOO! Scared you, didn't I?

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Forget the apples. Try bobbing for cantaloupe this year.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Don't forget: Halloween masks aren't the only way to have fun with latex.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Beware of eating too much Halloween candy. If you gain weight, it will be impossible to get out of your costume.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Buy your best friend a Halloween gift. Be creative, and don't make it candy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): This year, try using soft soap to soap windows. Bar soap leaves a sticky residue.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): When making Halloween cookies, try shaping them like bunnies and cutting the heads off in honor of the season.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Buy a strobe light for the living room, and neglect to tell your roommate.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): This year, don't wear a costume. Go as a serial killer. They look just like everyone else.

Funky horns add to metal sound

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

What do you get when you take a speed-metal trio from Idaho and add an extra guitar player, an extra percussionist, two trombone players and a saxophonist?

You get Black Happy.

This eight-man band has just released its second album, "Peghead." "Peghead" is overflowing with sounds seldom heard on mainstream radio, or anywhere else for that matter.

Black Happy could be compared to the Red Hot Chili Peppers, but these Idaho boys are a lot funkier. They could also be compared to Fishbone, but they aren't quite that far out there.

The band is basically guitar-and-bass-and-drum driven, as they should be, but the layering of horns and unusual percussion rhythms makes for a thick, full sound.

Surprisingly, eight instruments don't overpower the music. The horns are added tastefully. Simple, repetitive riffs hover above crunchy guitars and a frantic bass line for an eerie effect.

And the guitars are crunchy; there's no doubt about that. Buzzing power chords mark the songs' choruses, while quick, palm-muted bursts punctuate the verses. The band's speed-metal roots are still evident, although they may be toned down a bit.

A wide variety of styles are exhibited on "Peghead," from radio-amicable, funked-up pop tunes like "Bullmonkey" to tongue-in-cheek, hoedown ditties like "Chicken in a Biscuit."

Not surprisingly, it was a couple of years ago that Black Happy first came on the big-time music scene — the same time that record companies were scouring the Pacific Northwest for new, unheard-of talent.

Thanks to the Seattle invasion, everything on the radio now sounds like Nirvana. Thanks to God, Black Happy's stomping grounds of Couer d'Alene, Idaho, were too far from Seattle for the disease to spread to them.

Black Happy vocalist Paul Hemenway has been known to describe his band as "a bunch of geeks." "Peghead" proves them to be nothing of the sort.

Peek-a-boo pumpkin

Andy and Kaelyn Nicks, his 2-year-old daughter, have some fun while carving pumpkins at Sunset Zoo Thursday evening. Members of the Manhattan community were invited to help carve pumpkins at the zoo for decorations for the Peek-a-boo Path and Terror Trail this weekend. The carvings took place from 6:30 until 10 p.m. Thursday. The two haunted pathes will be open from 5:30 to 9 p.m. Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Festival celebrates 'Bubbas'

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREER, S.C. — Got a hankering for barbecue or just some down-home fun? Head down to the Squeeze Pleeze Restaurant and Fishing Lake for BubbaFest '93.

The inaugural festival has everything a budding Bubba might desire: country music, sports, wading pools full of grits, a Moon Pie toss and the crowning of the royal Bubba and Bubbette.

"A Bubba is just a hard-working, family, patriotic type of guy who's very unpretentious and loves to have a good time," organizer Debbie Hoag said.

Planners hope Saturday's celebration will draw as many as 15,000 visitors and put the small community of Sugar Tit on the map.

The community of several hundred people near Greer grew around a crossroads in the northwestern part of the state but has never been incorporated.

It got its name from an old-time pacifier, a bit of sugar wrapped in cheesecloth that mothers gave babies to calm them. Men would gather at the general store and their wives joked there must be "sugar tits" down there, organizer Toby Goodlett said.

The festival has grabbed some big-time attention: Pepsi and Wal-Mart are among its sponsors, and the sports cable channel ESPN said it would send a crew, Goodlett said.

The Kansas State Collegian Photojournalists

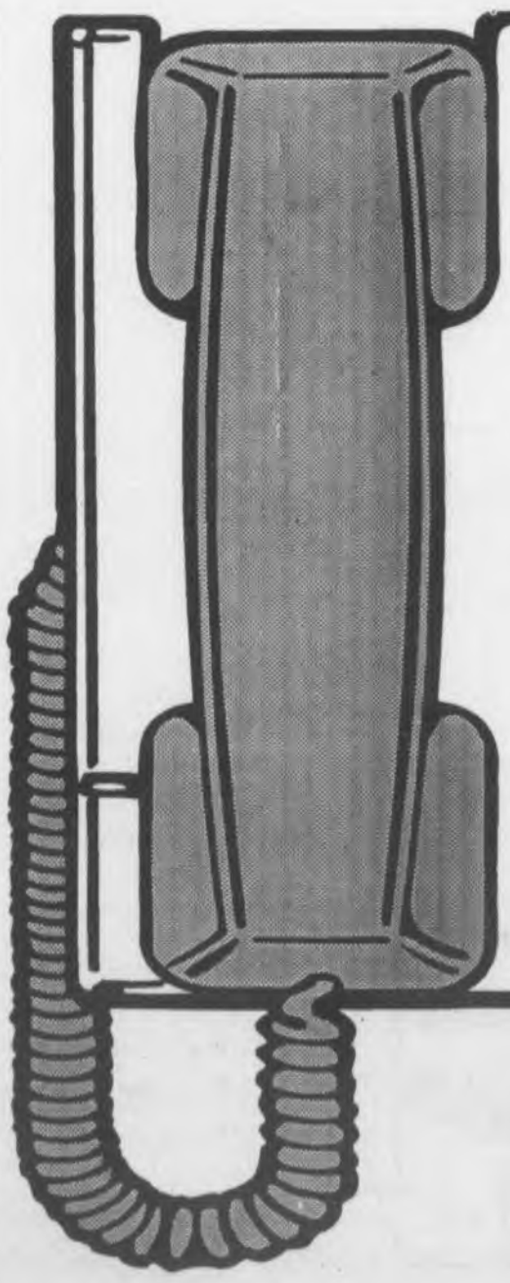
K-State photojournalists swept the top three positions in the Region 7 Collegiate Clip Contest of the National Press Photographers Association for 1992-93. And five other K-Staters placed among the year's Top 20.

The only other university placing within the Top 19 was the University of Missouri with 10 placings.



To compete, students entered published photos in news, sports and feature photo categories throughout the year. Each month, photographers submitted photos to be judged and points were tabulated for the year-end contest.

Here's how the Collegian photojournalists placed.

1. Craig Hacker, Wichita freelancer, 606 points.
2. David Mayes, senior, 464.
3. Shane Keyser, senior, 414.
5. Cary Conover, sophomore, 126.
6. J. Kyle Wyatt, junior, 120.
7. Darren Whitley, interning at Southwest Daily Times in Liberal, 98.
8. J. Matthew Rhea, graduate, 84.
14. Mike Welchhans, junior, 52.

Faculty debates Snyder's salary

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANHATTAN — K-State faculty are trying to be philosophic about the disparity between their salaries and the $250,000 package that football coach Bill Snyder receives.

"I think the faculty are taking a realistic attitude about the marketplace," Ken Klabunde, a chemistry professor and member of Faculty Senate, said Wednesday.

But Klabunde said college coaches appear to be paid out of whack with what academics receive, and admitted he's not happy about Snyder's package, which recently came to light.

"I don't see that (a coach's) contribution is any more significant than an outstanding faculty member," Klabunde said.

Snyder's base salary of $126,504 is nearly doubled by bonuses, TV revenue and perks he will receive in the first year of his 10-year contract, which includes a 7-percent minimum annual raise.

Aruna Michie, associate professor of political science and president of Faculty Senate, said Snyder has done a good job with the football team. The Wildcats are 5-1-1 and ranked nationally for the first time in 23 years.

But Michie said the timing of the disclosure was poor. Faculty members are experiencing a combination of wanting to cry and getting frustrated, Michie said.

Faculty members received an average 2.5-percent raise last year, said Michie, whose nine-month salary is listed at $30,825. She said there is an unwritten agreement among faculty members, deans and the administration that their salaries will all rise by about the same amount.

"(Snyder) is playing in a market, too," she said. "It's just skewed."

Some of the University's academic stars receive salaries approaching six figures, sometimes for a combination of academic and administrative duties.

Don Setser, a distinguished professor of chemistry who is internationally known, receives $84,303 for a nine-month contract. Terry Johnson, a distinguished professor of biology who runs the KSU Center for Basic Cancer Research, receives $98,268 for a 12-month contract.

Snyder said he was not happy that details of the compensation package were released. The figures were made public under pressure from Attorney General Bob Stephan.

"If that's what the law indicates, then that's the way it should be," he said. Snyder also said he was disappointed that some faculty members are upset about his compensation.

Clinton replaces Forest Service Chief

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Forest Service Chief Dale Robertson, a holdover from the Reagan administration often at odds with environmentalists, was ousted Thursday and replaced by one of his deputies.

Robertson, 53, had been under intense criticism since 1991 when a federal judge declared illegal the agency's plans to allow logging of national forests in the Pacific Northwest and halted most of the harvests to protect the northern spotted owl.

Named chief in 1987, Robertson's job had been rumored to be in jeopardy since President Clinton was elected on a platform that emphasized environmental protection.

David Unger, 61, a veteran of the Forest Service and Soil Conservation Service, will become the acting chief overseeing the 191 million acres of national forests on Nov. 1, Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy said.

In a statement issued by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Espy described Unger as a conservationist with extensive experience in endangered fisheries habitat.

Espy did not specify why Robertson was being replaced. But Assistant Agriculture Secretary Jim Lyons told a congressional panel in August that Clinton had inherited a terribly mismanaged national forest system, damaged by years of excessive logging under Presidents Reagan and Bush.

"We realize now we were cutting timber faster than we could sustain," Lyons said.

Unger said in the USDA statement Thursday that he believes his background, especially in the area of natural resources, will help lead the agency in a new direction.

Besides his fights with environmentalists over logging, Robertson often was at odds with U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service biologists about the effect of timber harvests on the spotted owl and other species.

Two years ago, U.S. District Judge William Dwyer of Seattle found Forest Service logging operations in the Northwest to be in violation of environmental regulations and ordered them stopped.

Dwyer said high-level government officials bent on maximizing harvests were deliberately breaking the law.

Robertson has also come under criticism from a variety of fronts.

The General Accounting Office earlier this month reported more than 180 alleged incidents of management interference and retaliation against Forest Service law officers probing wrongdoing within the agency and the timber industry.

Two special agents for the Forest Service told a House panel that the timber industry — sometimes with the help of Forest Service officials — is stealing tens of millions of dollars worth of timber from national forests annually.

Last week, Lyons sent a strongly worded letter to Robertson asking why the agency had not stopped doing business with contractors who have a history of hiring illegal aliens.

The Justice Department is also investigating the alleged misuse of tanker planes used to fight forest fires. Tom Amontree, a representative for Espy, acknowledged the decision to replace Robertson was not limited to concern over logging policies.

"There are a lot of controversies at the Forest Service — allegations of undocumented aliens, the air tankers, timber theft," he said. "They are serious problems that need to be addressed."

Robertson will become a special assistant to Deputy Agriculture Secretary Richard Rominger, Espy said. Associate Chief George Leonard also will leave his position effective Nov. 1 to assist Lyons, assistant secretary for natural resources and the environment.

Senate accuses Haiti of drug smuggling

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — The second-most powerful military man in Haiti personally receives and distributes $100 million or more in drug-trafficking bribes each year, according to a confidential U.S. Senate report.

"The drug-trafficking perk ... right now is controlled by the Port-au-Prince police chief, Lt. Col. Michel Francois," according to a summary of the report.

Francois also controls the attaches, the civilian-military gangs the United Nations said are hunting down and killing pro-democracy figures in Haiti. The gangs came to U.S. attention when they attacked diplomats and reporters at the Port-au-Prince docks this month.

The report says little direct evidence ties Haiti's military ruler, Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, to drug payoffs, but it adds that there is obviously an arrangement between Cedras and Francois.

The military is bitterly resisting the return to Haiti of elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide in part because its lifestyle depends on the drug trade, and it fear prosecution, the report said.

Two agents of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration assigned to Haiti are now confined to the embassy because of threats and the violent unrest that has accompanied the effort to restore Aristide.

"Their work is effectively shut down," the summary said.

An anonymous Justice Department source confirmed the Senate account and said the agents were expected to be withdrawn from Haiti soon.

The three-page document is a summary by Senate investigators of material compiled from U.S. intelligence files and witness accounts, an anonymous congressional source said. It was requested by a Senate committee chairman.

The Senate report states that more than 1,000 Colombian nationals are living in Haiti to serve the drug trade. Many are under the supervision of Colombian drug trafficker Fernando Burgos Martinez, who has worked openly in the country since at least 1984.

Burgos Martinez is the Haiti manager and bag man for Colombia's drug cartels and now supervises bribes paid to the Haitian military, according to both the Senate report and a previous DEA confidential summary.

Top Haitian officers "have been making a hundred million dollars or more on providing sanctuary for drugs coming to the U.S." each year, the Senate report says.

Hillary Clinton stresses necessity for uniform benefits

CRISTINA JANNEY

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton spoke to a packed room at the Midwest Summit on Health Care in Kansas City, Mo., Friday, trying to gain support for her health-reform plan.

Clinton outlined the major points of the health plan and stressed the need for universal coverage.

"If we do not have universal coverage, we do not have reform," Clinton said.

She said universal coverage is not just for those who are uninsured, but will guarantee health care for all Americans by eliminating displacement due to illness or job loss.

"Under the current system, no one is guaranteed health insurance this time next year," Clinton said.

The goal of the Clinton health plan is to create comprehensive benefit packages that are portable from job to job, despite income or geographic location, she said.

"Inner-city Kansas City and rural Kansas must have the same access," she said.

Clinton said the present system has rewarded the wrong type of behavior. The system must be simplified and made more efficient, she said.

Health-care providers make more money when problems are allowed to become serious, instead of using preventive care.

She used the example of a man at the Truman medical facility in Kansas City, Mo., which she toured that morning. The man had to have his toes amputated because of diabetes. The man had insurance intermittently, depending on what job he was in, but had not been to a doctor since 1945.

"A simple test could have saved this man from suffering and the cost of staying in a hospital for several days," she said.

She said health-care availability and education could save money and lives.

"Most people know more about the cars we drive than the the health insurance we are in," she said.

Fans injured in Wisconsin

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADISON, Wis.— Chain-link and rail fences collapsed under a wave of jubilant fans pouring onto a college football field Saturday, injuring dozens of people, two critically, and hushing a cheering crowd.

About 75 people were injured when approximately 12,000 spectators scrambled out of five student sections at Camp Randall Stadium, University of Wisconsin Police Chief Susan Riseling said.

By early Sunday, the city's three major hospitals had examined or treated 80 people. Of those cases, 16 people were hospitalized, and two people were in critical condition, hospital officials said.

Spectators pushed forward as the University of Wisconsin defeated the University of Michigan 13-10 before a sellout crowd of 77,745. It was the first Wisconsin victory over Michigan since 1981.

Metal rail fences lining the front of the stands collapsed. A chain-link fence about 5 feet high separating a track from the playing field also went down, pulling up its concrete footings.

Police struggled to clear the mob so paramedics could reach the injured, some of them on the field and others still in the stands.

"We tried to get some of the people back so the people below them who were getting trampled could get out," Dane County deputy sheriff John Brogan said. "It was just too loud for them to hear. People kept falling on top of each other."

While many fans crowded loudly around the goal posts, a hush fell over spectators in the stands who could see the injured. The cheering ceased within 10 minutes

SAVE highlights NAFTA problems

JEREMY UNRUH

Craig Volland, trade issues coordinator for the Greater Kansas City Environmental Leaders Forum, will discuss the controversy over environmental effects of the North American Free Trade Agreement at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in Union Forum Hall.

Volland is president of Spectrum Technologists Inc. and the coordinator of the Greater Kansas City Green Party, a grassroots alternative political party devoted to environmental and social justice issues.

Volland's speech is titled "NAFTA and the Environment" and is co-sponsored by Students Acting to Save a Vulnerable Environment and Student Coalition for Peace and Justice, Sharon Moreland, president of SAVE, said.

"We think congress is hurrying NAFTA through. In this version of NAFTA, all of the problems aren't being addressed, so we don't support NAFTA as it is now," Moreland said.

LECTURE INFO

■ Craig Volland will discuss NAFTA at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

Moreland cited worker rights and the environmental effect of NAFTA as issues of concern.

"We're afraid that more U.S. companies will set up shop south of the border where there's no environmental regulation," Moreland said.

Moreland said the speech is free and open to everyone.

"We're hoping it will draw quite a few people. After the discussion we will be passing out 'Say No to NAFTA' postcards to send to Congress," Moreland said.

Actor River Phoenix dies suddenly at age 23

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — River Phoenix, whose natural intensity as a teen-age actor in the 1986 film "Stand by Me" launched his career, collapsed outside a nightclub early Sunday and died. He was 23.

Friends reported that Phoenix was acting strangely as he left the Viper Room in West Hollywood about 1 a.m., sheriff's Deputy Diane Hecht said. She didn't elaborate.

Paramedics were called when the actor collapsed, and he was rushed to Cedars Sinai Medical Center. He was pronounced dead shortly before 2 a.m.

"At this time, the cause of death is under investigation. The exact cause will be determined at autopsy by the coroner," Hecht said.

The autopsy will probably be performed Monday, she said. Sheriff's detectives were handling the case, as a matter of routine, but it's not a homicide investigation at this time, Hecht said.

PHOENIX'S FILMS

1985 — "Explorers"
1986 — "Stand by Me"
"The Mosquito Coast"
"Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade"
1988 — "Little Nikita"
"A Night in the Life of Jimmy Reardon"
"Running on Empty"
1991 — "My Own Private Idaho"

A year after his 1985 film debut in "Explorers," Phoenix showed his star potential in director Rob Reiner's "Stand by Me."

Phoenix portrayed Chris Chambers, the tough boy in a group of friends who learn about themselves on a hike in the woods where they find a corpse.

In his brief career, Phoenix played a male hustler in Gus Van Sant's 1991 film "My Own Private Idaho" and portrayed a youthful computer hacker in the Robert Redford-led ensemble cast of 1992's "Sneakers."

His other films include "The Mosquito Coast" (1986) and "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade," both with Harrison Ford, "Little Nikita" (1988) with Sidney Poitier, "A Night in the Life of Jimmy Reardon" (1988), and "Running on Empty" (1988).

Phoenix came from an unusual family and spent much of his childhood on the move, living in Oregon, Mexico, Puerto Rico, South America and Florida.

His parents had met while hitchhiking and named their son "River" after the river of life in Herman Hesse's "Siddhartha."

Born in Madras, Ore., on Aug. 24, 1970, Phoenix spent most of his childhood in Venezuela with his siblings, Rain, Leaf, Liberty and Summer, while his parents, John and Arlynn Phoenix, became missionaries for Children of God.

Phoenix once summed up his unique origins in an interview:

"I was born in Oregon. My sister, Rain, was born in Texas. My brother, Joaquin Rafael, alias Leaf, was born in Puerto Rico. My other sister, Liberty, is a native of Venezuela. My other sister, Summer, was born in Florida. My mother in the Bronx, New York. My father in Fontana, California."

The family legend has it that Phoenix began his performing career at age 5, singing with 3-year-old Rainbow on street corners in Caracas.

He saw his nonconformist early life as an asset to his career as an actor.

"I think it helps you become versatile in adapting to new situations, new atmospheres, new people, just as you do when you go from film to film," he said five years ago.

The family eventually moved to Los Angeles.

Local businesses sold 4,500 flood T-shirts

During the Kansas flood of '93, the K-State Union Bookstore and It's Greek to Me, a Manhattan merchant, sold T-shirts to benefit the American Red Cross.

More than 4,500 shirts were sold, each for $9.95, with all proceeds going to the American Red Cross. The K-State Union donation came to $2,777.38, and It's Greek to Me's donation was $9,256, for a total of $12,033.38.

The design for the T-shirt was made by Kathy Yates, Union Bookstore supply manager, and Kay Farley, Union Bookstore manager, and is set with a background of Kansas. The state is half-filled with water, and it's raining, as Willie the Wildcat and the University of Kansas Jayhawk are sitting in an inner-tube together with an umbrella. The caption above the Jayhawk says, "Willie, I don't think were in Kansas anymore," and below it all, in bold letters is, "KANSAS FLOOD OF '93." On the left sleeve is the Union logo. The artwork for the shirts was done by It's Greek to Me.

Farley said the idea to include Willie with the Jayhawk was given to generate goodwill.

"We included Willie and the Jayhawk because it was a time when both schools were affected. We felt it was one time when the rivalry between the two schools was at rest. On the design, Manhattan and Lawrence are indicated with stars," Farley said.

The Union was open as an emergency shelter for flood victims for 19 days, housing nearly 200 people a night. The Red Cross provided meals for the victims along with the free stay in the Union.

Buffer zone proposed for abortion clinics

WICHITA (AP) — A proposal to put a so-called bubble around doctors and patients at abortion clinics is on hold.

Mayor Elma Broadfoot asked City Councilman Bill Cather to drop the proposal because it is too controversial.

"I think it will be very divisive on the bench," Broadfoot said.

The mayor's opposition to the plan is a setback for abortion provider George Tiller and others who expected her support in an effort they say would help prevent violence at abortion clinics.

Tiller was shot outside his clinic on Aug. 19. He was not seriously injured. An abortion protester has been charged in the shooting.

"Saying it would be controversial is not valid, not valid at all," said Peggy Jarman, a representative for Tiller. "It's a lousy reason not to tackle an important issue."

Cather's proposal would create a 100-foot buffer zone around hospitals and health-care facilities. Inside the buffer, patients and doctors would be protected by an 8-foot bubble.

Protesters would have to keep their distance from people who warned them to stay outside their bubble.

Wichita detectives arrest murder suspect

OKMULGEE, Okla. (AP) — Sheriff's deputies on Saturday arrested a man for questioning in the death of a Wichita businessman who was stabbed in his home during an apparent burglary.

Detectives from Wichita were in Okmulgee late Saturday to question Stacey W. Speed, 24, about the death of Victor Williams Sr., 40. Authorities believe Williams was killed Monday morning in his south-Wichita home.

Speed was jailed on a complaint of possession of stolen property in Okmulgee County after he allegedly left Williams' 1982 BMW at a motel in nearby Henryetta, Sheriff Dayle James said.

Speed, who served time for second-degree robbery, has relatives in Oklahoma, including his father in Boley.

Police said Williams, owner of Victor's Auto Sound in Wichita, was stabbed to death just before his car and some stereo equipment were stolen from his home.

Report says Reagan not out of Contra loop

WASHINGTON (AP) — The special prosecutor's final report on the Iran-Contra scandal concludes that President Reagan was not out of the loop, nor an innocent victim of overzealous aides, according to a national news magazine.

Reagan personally directed national security aides Robert McFarlane and John Poindexter at critical periods during the secret and illegal shipments of U.S. missiles to Tehran in 1985 and 1986, U.S. News & World Report quotes unnamed sources as saying in the magazine's upcoming issue.

Ancient protective wall found in central Israel

JERUSALEM (AP) — The world's oldest known fortress, a wall believed to date to 4000 B.C., has been uncovered in central Israel, the government said Sunday.

The wall was found near the central coastal town of Hadera, archaeologist Eli Yanai said.

The 4-foot wall protected villages along a strategic road. The finds, uncovered during recent excavations to widen a highway linking Hadera with Afula in northeast Israel, included a 24-yard stretch of wall and a watchtower.

Court ruling may change K-State's assault policy

MELISSA DUGAN
Collegian

A recent Kansas Supreme Court ruling related to a 1990 case involving K-State students might change the University's sexual-harassment and assault policy.

A former K-State student, Shana Nero, is claiming negligence against K-State for not providing adequate protection from Clarence Davenport, who had previously been accused of sexual assault.

According to an Oct. 6 article in the Chronicle of Higher Education, Nero said she felt she had not been sufficiently protected because Davenport was allowed to live in the same residence hall as her although he had been accused of a sexual crime.

The Kansas Supreme Court voted earlier this month 5-2 that Nero has the right to sue the University because the school is responsible for protecting students from foreseeable criminal conduct while in a common area.

However, according to the Chronicle, Kansas Supreme Court justice Kay McFarland disagrees with the ruling because the majority opinion requires that the University presume guilt.

Jennifer Kassebaum, senior assistant University attorney, agreed with McFarland that the ruling requires K-State to presume guilt before it is decided by a jury.

K-State policy prohibiting sexual violence states that "KSU Housing and Dining Services may provide options for and assistance in changing academic and living situations after an alleged sexual assault, if requested by the complainant and if these changes are reasonably available."

Kassebaum said Davenport was only accused of sexual assault at the time the incident occurred with Nero, and had not yet been convicted.

At this time, the victim in the first sexual-assault case decided not to proceed with University policy, and therefore, nothing could be done because the policy requires that a student initiates or takes action first.

The victim did, however, choose to file a report with the local officials.

The Kansas Supreme Court has not said K-State isn't doing something it should be doing, Kassebaum said. Until the dispute is settled, the policy will remain the same, she said.

Alterations to the policy may be made, Kassebaum said, depending on how the case turns out.

Some K-State students who live in resident halls are interested in the outcome of the case.

Stephanie Gorrell, junior in elementary education and Moore Hall resident, said if there is any doubt involved, sexual offenders should not be allowed to live in co-ed residence halls.

Gorrell said she feels the safety of all residents is in jeopardy when someone who has committed a sexual crime is allowed to live in the hall.

Joe Weisenberger, Moore Hall president and junior in psychology, said he does not agree with the Kansas Supreme Court's decision because a person is supposed to be innocent until proven guilty, and the ruling may cause a lack of fairness to all parties involved in a sexual-offense case.

Film director Fellini dies at 73

Oscar winner mixed fantasy and spectacle in works

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME — Federico Fellini, the Italian film maestro whose mix of fantasy, spectacle and earthiness created "La Dolce Vita" and such Oscar-winning movies as "8 1/2" and "La Strada," died Sunday. He was 73.

Fellini had been in a coma at Rome's Polyclinic Hospital after suffering a heart attack and developing respiratory problems Oct. 17. He suffered a stroke in August.

His wife, actress Giulietta Masina, learned of his death from television, the ANSA news agency reported. She had been too distraught to remain by his bedside and visited only a few times while he was in a coma. Saturday was their 50th wedding anniversary.

Fellini, known as Il Mago, the magician, won a special Oscar in March for lifetime achievement. Others in the pantheon of directors so honored include Charlie Chaplin, Orson Welles and Alfred Hitchcock.

"I can say that I like getting the Oscar, especially because it comes from the Americans," Fellini said. "However, in all sincerity, in my work, I did nothing but enjoy myself."

Italy and the film world mourned the death of the man Premier Carlo Ciampi called the country's great national poet.

"A great light has gone out, and now we are all in the dark," actress Sophia Loren said. "The world will be much sadder without his imagination."

Marcello Mastroianni, Fellini's best-known leading man, said he had little to say in his grief.

"More reflection is needed to understand how great the man was," he said.

Fellini won Oscars for "La Strada" (1954), "Le Notti di Cabiria" (1957), "8 1/2" (1963) and "Amarcord" (1973).

Perhaps his most famous film was "La Dolce Vita" in 1959. The movie, with its sexy scene of Anita Ekberg coaxing Mastroianni into the Trevi Fountain, brought him the Golden Palm, the top prize at Cannes, and the condemnation of the Vatican, which branded the film obscene.

Feminists called him a dirty old man. He was accused of running out of ideas and having nothing to say, of favoring the grotesque and of being obscure and indulgent.

Fellini directed 20 feature films.

Pell Grant program needs major fixing

Maybe petitioning the state legislature for money is not the best way to subsidize the University budget.

Especially considering how several New York colleges have found a unique and far more successful way to fund the rising cost of education.

These universities have pocketed millions of dollars from the poorly managed Pell Grant program.

The New York colleges involved were basically "Pell Grant mills" that enrolled students mainly to produce financial aid.

These schools collected more than $30 million in Pell Grant money. The funds were justified by enrolling students who never attended and by forging documents to support federal-aid applications.

The grant money was used, among other things, to pay off school mortgages, transfer capital to affiliates and build a $1.2-million mutual-fund investment.

The Education Department reviews of the schools' Pell Grant program in December 1992 did not discover the violations. Only recently did a Senate subcommittee uncover the misuse of the Pell Grant funds.

The ease with which the universities bilked the Pell Grant fund was made possible by the fact that the program operates essentially on an honor system. Success in the program is determined by whether or not someone is given the money, not how many students receiving aid graduate.

Currently, Senate hearings are taking place to determine if the Pell Grant program needs to be modified.

It is obvious that the Pell Grant program needs to be reformed. Better management and new guidelines are needed to ensure that federal aid is used by students and not abused by other institutions.

Or perhaps defrauding the government will become an acceptable way for universities to operate in the black. Let's hope not.

Elders not the answer to sex ed

The recent confirmation of Dr. Joycelyn Elders to the post of surgeon general has set the stage for a sex-education civil war. The federal government is currently planning its most ambitious sex-education program ever.

Knight-Ridder news service recently reported that a proposal from the Department of Health and Human Services for comprehensive health services for the nation's 35 million 10–19-year-olds could cost as much as $7 billion. The proposal includes plans for sex education, birth-control counseling, health care and contraceptives at clinics in or near public schools.

Dr. Elders, "the nation's doctor" in the words of President Clinton, will likely take the lead in the formation and implementation of any new sex-education policy. This should give the public pause considering Elder's philosophy on sex education could be summarized by a statement she recently made, "We've taught teenagers what to do in the front seat of the car; now it's time to teach them what to do in the back seat."

It's safe to surmise from her barbaric thesis that what Elders wants to teach teenagers to do in the back seat of the car is to use a condom when having sexual intercourse. She doesn't feel sex education should begin in driver's education classes, though, with the 10 steps of using a condom being taught alongside the 10 steps of starting a car.

Elders believes this process of sexual enlightenment should begin much earlier, with sex-education classes for kindergartners.

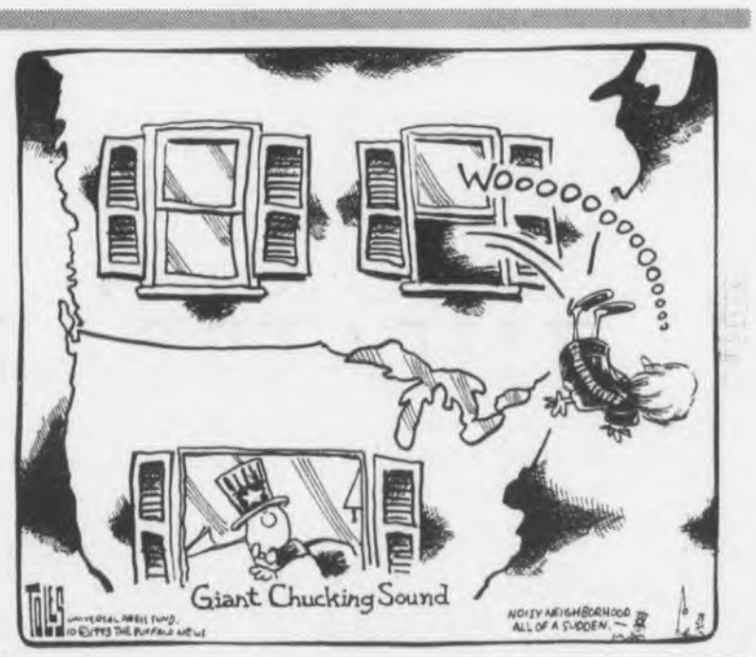
One only has to look as far as Elders' record as Arkansas Health Director to see why this philosophy and new proposal will fail if implemented. Columnist Don Feder reported that during Elders' tenure, beginning in 1987, the teen-pregnancy rate rose 17 percent. From 1989 to 1992, cases of syphilis among the state teens were up 130 percent, and the rate of HIV infections increased 150 percent. All this occurred while the budget of her health department increased from $67 million in 1987 to $150 million in 1993.

Elders' failure in Arkansas does not come as a surprise to those who have seen through the "safe-sex" lie. Condoms, a safe-sex staple, with a standardized failure rate of about 15 percent, are as safe as a boat that sinks 15 percent of the time when you take it out. Granted, you may not drown if it sinks, but it's a sure bet that anyone with any common sense would easily be dissuaded from riding in it.

JOHN HART

In spite of the obvious Russian-roulette flavor of the safe-sex message, the campaign marches on. It is sustained by the false belief that teenagers engaging in sex is as constant as Newton's law of gravity.

According to a study by Planned Parenthood, the No. 1 reason given by teens for premarital intercourse was not uncontrollable hormones or lust but "peer pressure." Sex-education programs that stress contraceptive use make the assumption that teenage sex is the norm. Norms are, of course, what teenagers are so eager to conform to.



The challenge, then, is to make abstinence the norm and contraceptives the side point. Unfortunately, for teenagers in Arkansas and across the nation, premarital sex is presented as the norm, and abstinence is the side point.

In spite of the many reasonable criticisms millions of Americans have offered against the idea of "safe-sex" education, Elders has displayed a great deal of intolerance and bigotry toward her politically incorrect dissenters. She once told the pro-life movement to "get over their love affair with the fetus" and said they were led by a "celibate, male-dominated church."

It shouldn't come as a surprise to future parents and educators at K-State that Joycelyn Elders will go to almost any lengths to impose her view of sex education on the nation through the public-education system. We must go to the same lengths to stop her.

▶ SNYDER

Sleighting coach will not solve profs' woes

Editor,

K-State receives a tremendous return from its contract with Coach Snyder. To those in the media infatuated with Snyder's contract, consider the extra revenues he generates for the University — from increased gate receipts and alumni contributions to possible bowl revenues.

These revenues far exceed the salary savings to the University from hiring a mediocre coach.

The demand for sports entertainment has led to high salaries for football coaches across the country. If K-State fails to offer a competitive contract, it does so at its own peril.

Other universities have attempted to recruit Snyder, and future attempts will surely be made. These universities would gladly offer Snyder a contract superior to the one he now possesses.

Yes, faculty at K-State are underpaid, but paying our coach less would not remedy this problem, especially when much of his compensation comes from sources outside the University.

▶ PLUS/MINUS

Faculty Senate should take off the earmuffs

Editor,

The forum concerning the plus/minus system was very enlightening. I discovered that K-State is more concerned about jumping on the bandwagon than acting on its students' concerns.

For some odd reason, I had the idea that I was here to get an exceptional education from an exceptional school. I did not realize it was not important that the students are accomplishing the things that they want to and are satisfied with their opportunities now, without a plus/minus system.

I had no idea that the Faculty Senate did not care what the Student Senate thinks. There was no hint to me that a faculty member would ever insinuate that the students have no right to decide how they want to be judged and that this University was not a democratically oriented place.

Would someone please explain to me how anyone is supposed to get a 4.0 GPA with a plus/minus system?

Would someone please help me to understand why I will only get 3.7 points if I make a low A, but I'm not quite as smart as Einstein, who has no social skills or cultural awareness, and I was busy organizing homecoming, attending Landon Lectures, watching K-State play Nebraska, broadening my cultural horizons and studying for my three other tests as well?

Because if I'm not supposed to be well-rounded, why am I required to take KIN 101 or Psychology when I am going to be improving the genetic stock of cattle all my life?

Well, everyone, go home — there's nothing to see here anymore. These are moot questions, because Faculty Senate says that they've heard all they are going to hear, and unless someone comes up with a better reason, nothing will change.

May everyone walk in the world without fear

Editor,

High praise to Erin Mansur-Smith, whose column "The silent message that got lost" in the Oct. 27 Collegian cuts through the tenacious rhetoric of biblicism and secularism to the main point: "The message is that my friend has the right to walk down the street without being harassed. He has the right to marry someone he loves. He has the right to keep his children. He has the right to be human and be treated humanly. ... He is not asking for extra rights. He is not asking for special rights. He is asking for human rights. He is asking for courtesy." Precisely.

Four centuries of hate don't justify beating

Editor,

I am flabbergasted at the thought of excusing the malicious and deliberate beating of Reginald Denny by Williams and Watson because of the plight of African Americans 400 years ago. If this premise was applied to every group in society that has been repressed in the past, crime would be rampant and justified.

The fact that the same violence that oppressed African Americans is being used to get retribution from the white population is a moral contradiction. Does the "eye-for-an-eye" policy apply in 1993 for events that occurred 400 years ago? I don't think so. Just tell me this: If this excuse will be used to expand the justification for senseless violence, how long do I have to wait to be able to use my faculties to recognize chaotic violence when I see it? Another 400 years, maybe?

Williams and Watson were guilty of beating Denny; the injustice done to Denny was not compensated for because some feel instead that justice lies in denying Denny his rights to "get back" at an imaginary enemy that has been recognized as the white man.

To this group of thinkers, justice should not be achieved by injustice.

A big pat on the back for one great weekend

Editor,

We're grateful for the magnificent weekend K-State gave us and for the very sensitive story by Deryl Cunningham on the front page of the Oct. 27 Collegian.

There is one small error, and since Cunningham's story is so accurate in other regards, if may well be because we were not as clear as we could have been.

It does seem important to note, however, that we were never actually seated in the president's box at Saturday's game, and we certainly weren't asked to move. We were told up until Saturday morning that was the expected seat location, and when it changed, we were told the reason might have been the governor's visit and her presence in the president's box. Our game seats were, like everything else last weekend, absolutely wonderful. We were right on the 50-yard line, just below the press box in the midst of avid K-State fans just like us.

Chimes Junior Honorary, the K-State Alumni Association, the K-State Union staff and everyone we met on campus treated us like royalty from beginning to end. It was a weekend we'll never forget.

Center provides travel information

TRISHA BENNINGA
Collegian

When you get ready to plan your Christmas vacation or spring break, do not overlook the Union Program Council Travel Resource Center, sponsored by the UPC Travel Committee.

The UPC Travel Resource Center, on the third floor of the K-State Union outside of the UPC office, provides various free brochures, maps and travel guides for every state and some countries outside of the United States, Charla Bailey, program adviser, said.

The committee calls the states and requests about 20 of each brochure. Students can take them or copy them if it is the last copy.

In addition, the committee also has toll-free phone numbers for state travel bureaus if students would like to get information on specific points of interest in that state, she said.

"The travel center provides students with information about other parts of the United States and world so they can plan their own trips," said Jeff Struve, committee chairman and junior in bakery science/chemistry.

If a person is traveling to Europe, the committee also sells international student IDs and Eurail passes, Struve said.

In addition to travel information, the travel committee offers three to four trips each semester, Bailey said.

This semester, the committee has sponsored trips to the Renaissance Festival, the Henry Doorly Zoo and the Old Market in Omaha, Neb., and a shopping trip to Kansas City in December.

Bailey said they only sponsored three trips this year because they had a small committee.

The committee is brainstorming for trip ideas for the spring semester, Struve said.

Bailey said the committee is creating a survey to distribute to students in the next two weeks to get ideas.

The spring-break trip has yet to be decided. They are trying to decide whether to go skiing or somewhere sunny, Bailey said.

"Our big trip is the spring-break trip," Struve said. "Last year we went to Daytona for a week."

The committee determines the cost of the trips by adding together transportation, admission and publicity costs and dividing by the number of open spaces for the trip, Bailey said.

If not enough people go on the trips, the money lost by vacant spaces is totaled up at the end of the year and becomes a Union deficit.

The UPC Travel Committee is composed of students.

The committee has an open membership, meaning that anyone can join anytime.

The committee usually averages about 10 members, Bailey said.

MEDICINE

Test shows if children will inherit hemophilia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Scientists have solved a key mystery about hemophilia and developed a new test for telling women whether they risk bearing sons with the disease.

The test should give a definitive answer in about 45 percent of families affected by severe cases of hemophilia A, the most common form of the blood disorder, researchers said.

It will also work for prenatal diagnosis in those families, they said.

Experts called the new test a valuable addition to current assessment methods.

Hemophilia A appears in about one in every 5,000 males, and about half the cases are considered severe. The disease is caused by defects in the gene that tells the body how to make factor VIII, a substance that promotes clotting.

People with severe disease may have to inject themselves with Factor VIII 30 to 50 times a year to control internal bleeding and maintain health.

Scientists had been puzzled by the fact that in about half the severe cases, they were unable to find any defect in the factor VIII gene. The new study shows that the problem is an unusual flaw, apparently caused by a process not described before in any disease, said study co-author Jane Gitschier of the University of California, San Francisco, and the Howard Hughes Medical Institute.

Gitschier presents the new work in the November issue of the journal Nature Genetics with colleagues at her school, the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in Baltimore and the University of Geneva Medical School in Switzerland.

Women can have the defective gene without getting hemophilia because they also have a second factor VIII gene. Males have no such backup.

The previously known flaws in the factor VIII gene are so numerous that doctors cannot routinely test women for each of them, said Dr. Leon Hoyer, director of the Holland Laboratory of the American Red Cross in Rockville, Md.

Instead, when women seek to know if they carry the defective gene and so risk passing it on to offspring, a different genetic test can give a definitive answer 60 percent to 80 percent of the time, he said. There is also a blood test that is about 80 percent to 90 percent accurate, he said.

The new test — which detects the newly found flaw — is simpler than the genetic analysis and more accurate than the blood test, Hoyer said.

It really looks like a major advance for women who are now told, "We don't know whether or not you're a carrier," said Dr. Jeanne Lusher, medical director of the National Hemophilia Foundation.

The newly found defect involves a flipping around of part of the gene.

Lowering the Boom

K-State upends the "Boomer" Sooners 21-7 for 1st time in 23 years

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

No more almosts, should haves or could haves.

After battling Nebraska and tying Colorado, K-State got the job done Saturday, handling Oklahoma with a score of 21-7 to move to 6-1-1 and tie for second in the Big Eight Conference.

The Wildcats beat the Sooners for the first time since 1970, and were boosted from 25th to 18th in Sunday's Associated Press Poll.

"We are starting to realize we can line up with the big boys and expect to win," said running back Rod Schiller, who rushed for a career-high 117 yards on 19 carries. "That is the main difference in this team. We had a lot of determination."

"We knew we could do it if we just went out there and played our best," Schiller said.

K-State is 11-0-1 in its past 12 contests at home, which is a new school record. The Cats haven't lost at home since 1991 and have projected a 20-2-1 record since that setback to Colorado.

Oklahoma was hindered by inefficiencies all day long, fumbling eight times and losing three.

The Sooners fumbled three times during the course of one drive on their second possession of the contest.

Oklahoma quarterback Cale Gundy mishandled two snaps, and holder Joey Alfred lost control of the ball on 31-yard field-goal attempt.

Kenny McEntyre recovered the last fumble, allowing K-State to take over on the 19-yard line.

"Not only was this a disappointing loss, it's probably more frustrating than disappointing," Oklahoma coach Gary Gibbs said.

"It seemed like during the course of the ballgame we had ample opportunities to put points on the scoreboard, but it seemed like every time we got into their territory we would make a big play and turn the ball over."

During the 1991 season the Cats played Nebraska, Colorado and Oklahoma in succession, losing all three games. The victory against Oklahoma gave the Cats a 1-1-1 record in the same stretch.

"For our seniors it was their last chance at the 'Big Three,'" Coach Bill Snyder said. "So it was a special win for them."

The Cats scored twice in a pivotal third quarter, while keeping the Sooners out of the end zone. K-State has outscored its opponents 60-3 in the third quarter over the course of eight games.

K-State's defense befuddles Gundy, gains four sacks in Big Eight victory

BRIAN ANDERSON

Trick or treat — trick the Oklahoma Sooners' offensive line and treat on quarterback Cale Gundy and the rest of the backfield.

That was the scenario on Saturday when the K-State defensive line sacked Gundy four times in the Wildcats' 21-7 victory over the Sooners.

Coach Bill Snyder said his line did a fine job against Oklahoma.

"We played awfully well, particularly when they had to rise to the occasion," said Snyder, whose team held Oklahoma to seven points or less for the first time since a 6-6 tie in 1933.

"They did very well against the run and did very well guarding the pass. The containment and pressure on Gundy was good."

K-State had four sacks against Oklahoma — the most this season for the Cats. Defensive end John Butler led the team in sacks with two, while tackle Sean Dabney and end Dirk Ochs each had one.

"We wanted to set our own pace," said Ochs, who had six tackles. "If we did the things we were supposed to do, we would be all right."

Ochs said he thought it was important to get to Gundy.

"Gundy was a little nervous out there because of the concussion (two weeks ago)," he said. "Since then, he likes to duck and get out of the pocket quicker. We got pressure on him, but we could not contain him.

"We just came after him. We weren't going to sit back and wait for things to happen. When you get them back, we knew he was going to pass."

Dabney said he was surprised by the number of sacks.

"We knew we had to play hard to get to him, but I didn't think we would get that many sacks," said Dabney, who had five tackles. "They are a good offensive line. I would say they are the second-best, next to Minnesota."

Snyder said he was happy with the Cats' ability to stop Oklahoma's rushing game.

"Our defensive line has really come into its own," Snyder said. "I think they did a wonderful job in taking away the running game."

Oklahoma averaged 187 yards rushing a game going into the contest. K-State held them to 58 yards — the worst for a Sooner team and the best effort for the Cats this season.

Tailback James Allen, who was the fourth-best rusher in the Big Eight with a 68.5-yard average, was limited to 53 yards.

K-State allowed Oklahoma just seven points — 28 below their season average. Butler said the defense is getting better and finally being rewarded.

"The defense as a whole didn't have too many plays that got busted," Butler said.

"We worked hard all year for this. It's finally paying off."

Kevin Lockett and Brad Seib celebrate after Lockett's touchdown catch in the third quarter. Lockett and Seib combined for 131 yards on seven catches Saturday.

Game Notes K-STATE VS. OKLAHOMA

✔ Saturday's win over Oklahoma broke K-State's 22-game losing streak to the Sooners. The last time the Cats defeated OU was in 1970 when K-State won 19-14 in Norman, Okla.
✔ K-State has beaten OU only 3 times in the last 58 years.
✔ The game marked the first time K-State has defeated a ranked team since 1981 when they beat Iowa State 10-7 in Manhattan.
✔ The win moves K-State's home unbeaten streak to a school record 12 games.
✔ K-State's 21 points in the victory against the Sooners marked the the highest point total against an OU team since 1988 when the Cats were defeated by the Sooners 24-70.
✔ Rod Schiller rushed for a career-high 117 yards on 19 carries. This marked the second 100+ yard rushing day for him this season. His first was against New Mexico State in the season opener.
✔ K-State had four sacks, the most this season.
✔ K-State has now won four consecutive Homecoming games.
✔ Chad May threw two TD passes in Saturday's game to move his string of TD passes to seven games, just one short of the Big Eight record (8) by Darian Hagan of Colorado.
✔ May is moving up the K-State single-season charts for passing with 11 TD passes on the year. This moves him into second in number of touchdowns thrown by a K-State QB in a single season. Lynn Dickey has the most TD passes for a season with 14.
✔ May has moved into fifth place on the single-season passing yards list with 2,009 in eight games.
✔ Mitch Running caught his first TD pass of his career on a 6-yard pass from May.
✔ Thomas Running recorded his third fumble recovery of the season in the game versus the Sooners.

Staats finishes in fifth place to lead the K-State women

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

COLUMBIA, MO. — The K-State women's cross country team went into the Big Eight Cross Country Championships picked to finish fourth in the coaches' poll.

Logic would say with two runners not competing on Saturday, the Wildcats' chances would drop.

The Cats didn't win the Big Eight title, but they finished in second place and placed two runners in the top 10.

"We ran as well as we could, but we lost our No. 3 and No. 4 girls in the last two days," coach Terry Drake said.

"With both of them out, we were right in there, and we still beat a nationally ranked team. So I can't be disappointed with that."

K-State was missing Irma Betancourt, who is out for the season with a ruptured disk, and Amy Marx, who became ill before the meet.

"Everyone ran well today," Jeanene Rugan, the Cats' No. 2 runner, said.

"If Irma was there, she would have been somewhere in the pack. That could have pushed us over the top. It's not disappointing, but it would have been nice to win."

Nebraska captured the women's team title for the fifth time in nine years. K-State was followed by Colorado, Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma State and Iowa State.

The Cats' top finisher was Paulette Staats, who finished in fifth place with a time of 18:00.2 on the 5,000 meter course.

Rugan finished in seventh place for the Cats with a time of 18:19.0.

"I'm pretty happy with my performance," Staats said. "My goal was to finish in the top five, and I did. So I'm pretty happy."

Rugan said her teammates also ran well.

"Lesley Wells and Cari Warden ran well today," she said. "They helped us by staying in the race and doing well."

The temperature at the A.L. Gustin Golf Course was around the freezing mark.

It was also snowing for most of the day, but the footing was good, Big Eight officials said.

Drake said the weather condition affected everybody.

"I didn't really think that the weather played that big of a factor," Drake said.

"Everyone had to run in it, so I hate to blame the weather. I believe that it did slow the times down, though."

Drake said the course was tougher than he remembered.

"The course was really hilly at the beginning," Drake said.

"I had kind of forgotten about the hills at the beginning. To be honest, it was a lot easier than it used to be. The last time I was here, they had more hills than this year."

In the men's race, the Iowa State Cyclones won the Big Eight title by placing four runners in the top 10 and three runners in the top five.

Colorado took second, followed by Oklahoma State, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Missouri, K-State and Kansas.

Francis O'Neill, the Cats' No. 1 runner, finished in 13th place after finishing fourth in the Big Eight last season.

"Francis lost his shoe in the last mile, and that affected his finish," Drake said. "I'm sure that Francis is not happy with his performance today."

The Cats' next highest finisher was Ryan Clive-Smith.

Clive-Smith finished in 17th place by out-sprinting an Oklahoma State runner at the finish line.

"I didn't get to see the finish," Drake said, "but the runner he beat was the defending Big Eight champion from last season."

Shula ties Halas' NFL record with 30-10 drubbing of Chiefs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Miami coach Don Shula has won with three of the greatest quarterbacks in NFL history — Johnny Unitas, Bob Griese and Dan Marino.

Now, Shula is winning with Scott Mitchell.

Subbing for the injured Marino, Mitchell threw for 344 yards and three touchdowns Sunday to help the Dolphins beat Kansas City 30-10.

The win allowed Shula to tie George Halas' NFL record of 324 coaching victories.

Until Marino was sidelined for the season with a ruptured Achilles' tendon three weeks ago, Mitchell had never started a game.

Mitchell's passing may help Shula pass Halas as early as Sunday against the New York Jets.

"If and when the record is broken, I want it to be in a year when the team is successful," Shula said.

"As I told them after the game, that would make it that much more meaningful for me."

At 6-1 with five consecutive victories, the Dolphins look like a Super Bowl contender.

CHIEFS ROUNDUP

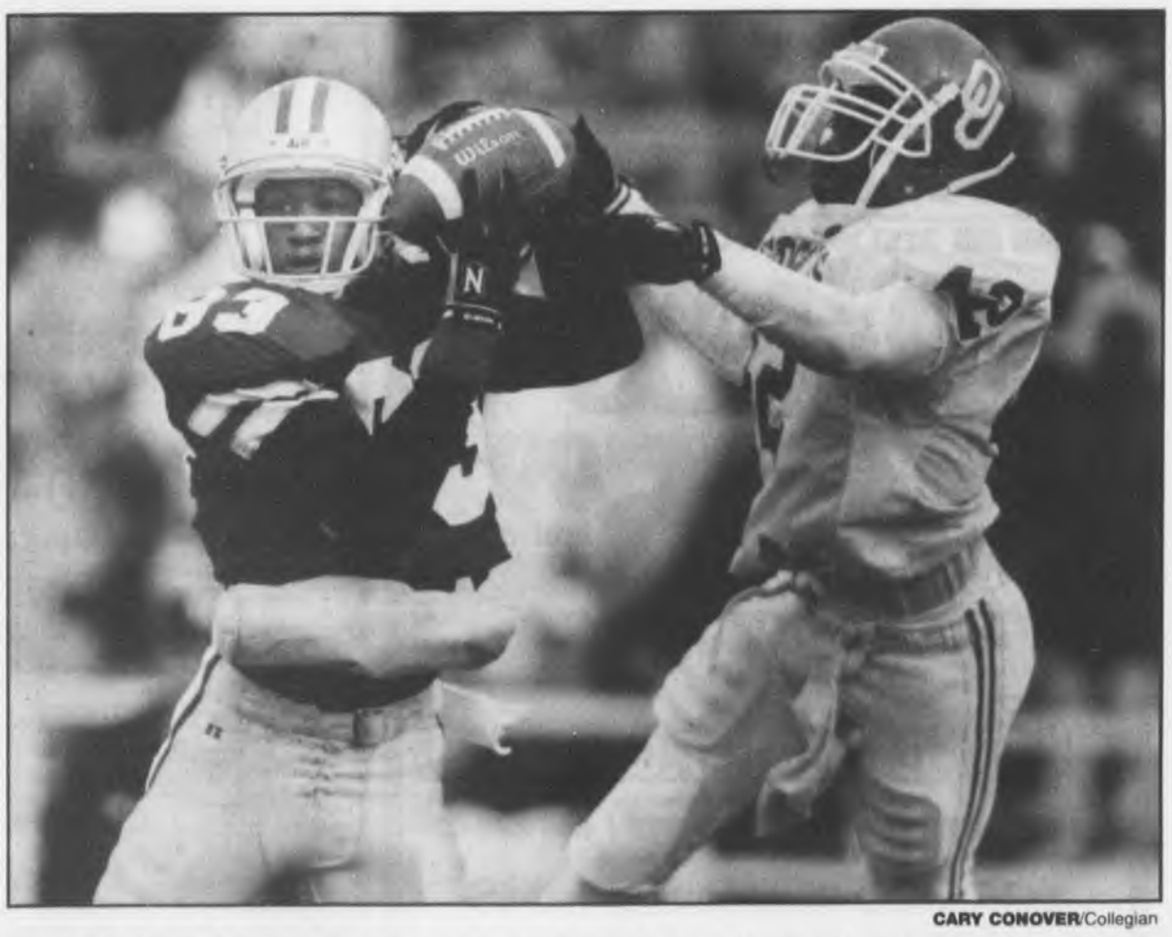
- Joe Montana achieved his 3,000th career completion in the second quarter. He is the fourth player in NFL history to break that mark. The others are Fran Tarkenton, Dan Fouts and Dan Marino.
- Miami coach Don Shula is now 27-7 while playing backup QBs filling in for an injured starter.

"I'm not even the starting quarterback, and we're still winning," Mitchell said. "So we must have a pretty good team."

Against the Chiefs (5-2), Mitchell completed 22 of 33 passes with no interceptions.

Repeatedly fooling the NFL's fourth-ranked defense, he threw touchdown passes of 27 yards to Irving Fryar, 8 yards to Keith Byars and 77 yards to Mark Ingram.



He outplayed and outlasted Kansas City's Joe Montana, who aggravated a strained left hamstring and departed in the second quarter with the Chiefs behind 13-0. He did not return, and his status for Kansas City's next game Nov. 8 against Green Bay is uncertain.

"It wasn't a whole lot of fun," Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer said.

"We just couldn't make a play. The one thing we did answer is that the Dolphins can win with Scott Mitchell."

"We got our butts kicked all over Joe Robbie Stadium," Schottenheimer said.

"I did a lousy job, our staff did a lousy job, and our players did a lousy job. I think that says it all."

Wildcats serve up 'blue-light special'

Oklahoma's Darrius Johnson to make the catch in the end zone. Quarterback Chad May scored on the Cats' next possession, taking a 21-0 lead.

Oklahoma was forced to punt on each of its possessions in the third quarter except one. Thomas Randolph recovered a Terry Collier fumble on the OU 36-yard line on the Sooners last possession.

"I think you do whatever you put great emphasis on, and that's one of the things we emphasize," Snyder said. "We want to come out prepared and dominated the first five minutes, and we've done that thanks to our coaching staff and our players."

Gibbs said the third quarter was decisive.

"There in the second half, especially in the third quarter, they were able to take advantage of the wind and control the clock," said Gibbs, whose Sooners fell to 6-2, 2-2 in the Big Eight and No. 20 in the AP Poll. "They had one drive where they made three or four key throws.

"I thought Chad May had his best drive of the day in terms of going to the right guy, and the other drive was just a case of them just knocking us off of the football and running the football," Gibbs said.

May made up for a lackluster performance in the first half by completing 8 of 14 passes for 125 yards and two touchdowns in the second half. He was 13 of 31 for 203 yards and had three interceptions for the day.

"I think aside from two drives it was the worst game I'd ever played in my life," May said. "But on the other hand, I've got to be happy for the team."

Oklahoma's lone score came early in the fourth quarter when Gundy hit P.J. Mills for a 31-yard touchdown pass. The two-play 85-yard drive followed a May fumble on the Sooners 13-yard line.

"I'm very proud of this win, but we realize, and the players realize, we still have things to improve upon," Snyder said. "We can't turn over the ball as much, and we can't allow a tight end to catch as many passes. The players realize this, and we know we have more work to do."

K-State got on the scoreboard first when May found Mitch Running on a slant rout for a six yard touchdown strike. It was Running's first career touchdown catch, and gave the Cats a 7-0 lead with Tate Wright's ensuing extra-point kick.

Free safety Jaime Mendez, who recorded seven tackles, said K-State controlled the game aside from a few mental errors.

"I think on both sides of the ball we dominated completely," Mendez said.

"We had a few little let-downs late in the game, but if we wouldn't have had those the score could've been a lot worse."

Mendez said this game should hush the critics of K-State's ability to compete.

"I think a lot of them have said rotten things about our team," Mendez said. "It's time for them to open their mouth and insert their foot, because we played a great game today.

"Some of them have been calling us K mart, and if we are K mart, then we put on a blue-light special today."

▶CATS LOSE ALL THREE IN WICHITA STATE TOURNEY

The K-State volleyball team extended its dive to nine losses Saturday at the Wichita State Invitational despite some outstanding performances.

The Wildcats fell 2-3 to Sherbrooke (Canada) in the first match on Friday evening.

Four hitters registered double-figure kills, led by senior Stephanie Leister with 22. Yolanda Young followed with 19; Angie McKee had 16 and Kate DeClerk 15.

K-State fell 0-3 (10-15, 1-15, 6-15) to Wichita State in Saturday's first match.

Again the Wildcats took an opponent to five games, falling to Arkansas State, 15-13, 15-13, 9-15, 3-15, 14-16, in the final match of the tournament.

McKee registered 20 kills with just one error in 42 attempts for a .452 hitting percentage. She added six blocks in the match, three solo and three assists.

DeClerk, a freshman middle blocker, was named to the all-tournament team. She recorded 33 kills and eight errors in 77 attempts in three matches, along with eight block assists and two solo blocks.

K-State is 7-18 on the season and will return to action against conference foe Iowa State at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in Ahearn Field House.

▶SMITH BREAKS LOOSE FOR TEAM-RECORD 237 YARDS

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Running back Emmitt Smith simply defies the defense to stop him.

The Philadelphia Eagles planned all week to key on Smith. Nothing worked.

Smith powered for a team-record 237 yards, including a 62-yard touchdown run, and Eddie Murray kicked three field goals as the Dallas Cowboys beat the Eagles 23-10 Sunday.

"I didn't expect to have such a great day against the Eagles, because they play such tremendous defense," Smith said.

He must have thinking of the days or Reggie White and the late Jerome Brown. This isn't the same defense.

"I had great running shoes on today," added Smith, not losing the opportunity for a shoe commercial.

The Eagles played the Cowboys to a standstill in a driving rain until Smith broke his big run with 3:45 left.

Smith, who missed the two defeats while holding out, erased the mark of 206 by Tony Dorsett against the Eagles in 1977.

Neak Frasty '93 step show combines originality, history

PAULA MURPHY
Collegian

Two K-State chapters took home first-place trophies at the Neak Frasty '93 Stompdown Saturday night in Bramlage Coliseum.

The Delta Sigma Thetas won the sorority division, while the Omega Psi Phis claimed first among the fraternities.

The event, sponsored by the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity, was a mix of stepping, chanting and singing.

Jason Strickland, senior in elementary education and Alpha Phi Alpha member, said his fraternity worked hard to publicize the event.

"We traveled to almost all the schools in Kansas to advertise. We went to Kansas City, Wichita, and even up to Lincoln, (Neb.)" he said.

Kenny Lumpkins, Alpha Phi Alpha member and graduate of the University of Missouri-Kansas City, was also helping at the event.

"I came up for this last year, and it was a big event. I came up this year to help mostly with security," Lumpkins said.

"Most people make a night of it, or a weekend of it," he said.

"It's definitely a social event. People come up to watch the step show and then go to the party afterwards," Lumpkins said.

The step routines show the audience about the history and traditions of the fraternity or sorority.

"Each organization has different steps," he said. "You can just about tell by the steps and performance who's performing even before they identify themselves. It's a way for us to show pride in our groups."

Kristen Falkenberg, junior in architectural engineering, came to the show to watch.

"My sorority (Kappa Alpha Theta) participated in it the last two years, and I loved it. I just had to come back," she said.

The competition was open to any group that wanted to participate.

The Delta Upsilon fraternity had originally entered the competition, Chris Bosco, sophomore in grain and milling science, said.

"We couldn't participate because we didn't have time to get a routine together. It takes a long time," he said.

"Everyone you'll see here tonight has been working a huge amount of time on their routines. We'd rather participate by showing up and watching. We're just out here to enjoy the evening and show our support," Bosco said.

Nathan Washington, sophomore in business management, was also out to enjoy the event.

"I like the way they let the image all come out," he said.

The show started with the singing of the black national anthem.

A panel of nine judges for the event were introduced, and the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity performed an exhibition routine.

After the sorority competition, there was a brief intermission. The crowd immediately got up to socialize.

Calvin Mayfield, 1992 graduate in electrical engineering and Phi Beta Sigma member, enjoyed the first part of the event.

"It's great. I like watching the choreography and seeing how sharp, how crisp they can make it," he said. "All my brothers and sisters are here. It's like a family reunion."

MIKE WELCHMANS/Collegian

Members of Alpha Phi Alpha give an exhibition performance to start off the Neak Frasty '93 stepshow Saturday night in Bramlage Coliseum.

Several people traveled from out of town to see Neak Frasty. William Moten, senior in marketing from Southwest Missouri State, was in Manhattan for the first time.

"I'm impressed," he said. "I like step shows because of the originality people come up with," he said. Moten is a member of the Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity, but their group did not perform.

Ruby Dumesh is from New York City.

"I'm here taking a course at the American Institute of Baking, so I'm just here temporarily," she said. "I heard about this event from a couple of guys I've met, so I thought I'd come out and see what it was like. My sister is in a sorority, so I can tell her all about it."

Dumesh has been to step shows in New York.

"I like to see the choreography. It's all different.

"This is very quiet, very organized," she said.

"At the step shows in New York, you can always tell where all the groups are. They're usually in their outfits. They sit on specific sides, and they're always making noise. They're always rooting for their own groups," Dumesh said.

"I'm surprised to see this many people," Dumesh said, looking around the coliseum.

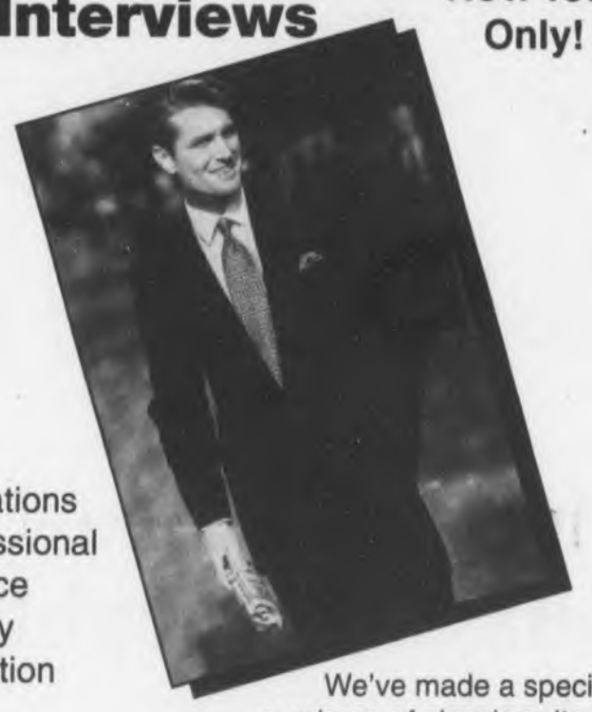
"I haven't seen this many people since I've been in Kansas," she said.

Rock-Wilder, Karl Burrell and M.D. are Omega Psi Phis. They came to step in the show.

"We are Omega Psi Phi fraternity incorporated," they said. "That means we are internationally known."

"We make noise when we step. You hear it when we step. We have the enthusiasm, the fire, the emotion when we step," Burrell said.

The Omega Psi Phis have been working for months to put their routine together.



"We make sure our show is right," they said. "When we step, we don't just represent ourselves. We represent Omega Psi Phi fraternity incorporated."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Dear Cassandra,

I hope I can provide an alternative to P.O.'d and other students in the same predicament, other than shooting the personnel in the Financial Aid Department.

My husband and I put him through school for six years and we know what it is like trying to make ends meet and deal with the Financial Aid Office, which has to juggle thousands of people each semester.

That is part of the reason we decided to start our own scholarship matching service.

Millions of dollars go unclaimed each year from private funding because people do not know the money exists or how to apply for it.

That is where we can help. A lot of the scholarships are not based on need or scholastic achievement.

Students fill out a one-page application based on their work experience, hobbies, group affiliations, religious background, etc.

Every profile is unique, just as every person is unique.

Applications are processed three times to ensure a match to every source possible.

Call us at 776-1962. Just like the Financial Aid Office, we are busy also, but if you have to leave a message, I promise our office will respond the same day or the next morning.

Cassandra, I want to thank you for allowing us to use your column as an outlet in order to reach and help so many people.

Signed,
A Helping Hand

Dear Hand,

Thanks for writing.

Unfortunately, your letter was a bit long for my column, but I included your phone number for any interested folks out there.

I also feel it's important to mention you said in your letter that your fee for this service "isn't even that much." I've heard of other scholarship matching agencies charging as much as $100 per application.

I would encourage students interested in Helping Hand's offer to ask specifically about the price of services. Just a thought.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Get motivated and go to at least half your classes this week.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Don't open that text book. It is not going to do you much good now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Beware of ordering out tonight. The delivery person may take an extra half hour.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Learn something new. Get that book you've been too embarrassed to buy.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Try a new exercise routine. If you don't have one, get one.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Reach new heights. Stand on a chair and get rid of that annoying spider web on the ceiling.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Make sure you changed all of your clocks from the time change.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be careful walking under trees on campus. The squirrels are running out of time to gather food.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make sure you have bourbon on your breath before you have that chat with your professor.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take the time to talk to that person you've been wanting to meet. You may be surprised by the result.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Check to make sure you know when your next test is. You just can't go drop the class anymore if you miss a test.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Try a new fashion statement. Buy a whole new wardrobe from a hospital supply outlet.

Eve's Plum doesn't go far with 3-song demo

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

Someone was actually deranged enough to name a band after the actress who played Jan on "The Brady Bunch." Eve's Plum recently released its first album, "Envy," on Epic Records. A three-song demo provides a sample of the band's style, or maybe of Sonic Youth's style.

All three tracks on the demo reek of Sonic Youth, perhaps because of murky, dissonant guitar and the presence of a female vocalist.

Singer Colleen's voice has the same half-sweet, half-savage quality as Kim Gordon's, and it's mixed over the same basic type of music.

The bass player, Chris, sets up the rhythm with relentless, throbbing changes that hang over drummer Ben's simple beats.

Guitarist Michael employs simple power chords and short, frenzied runs to create the feel of ... Sonic Youth.

Maybe it's just coincidence, but it's impossible to listen to Eve's Plum without making this comparison. This comparison, though, only detracts from the overall effect of the music.

The listener is forced to expect Sonic Youth-like sounds and emotions that never quite materialize.

It's kind of like listening to the Black Crowes and waiting to hear Keith Richards' or Mick Taylor's guitar playing. It's just not going to happen.

Perhaps the full-length album reveals other sides of Eve's Plum that are not evident on the demo. If so, it might be worth a listen. If not, don't bother. Go out and pick up a Sonic Youth disc.

Naked Soul strips styles from other bands

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

It seems to be the rule with the big success of grunge and the Seattle bands to rip off the sound of the bands at the forefront for financial gain.

In the spirit of Stone Temple Pilots, now comes Naked Soul, a Costa Mesa, Calif., three-piece band.

The band's debut release, "Visiting Your Planet," on Scotti Brothers Records, fails to satisfy, unless one has an appetite for plagiarism.

All of the musicians on the record are talented. However, their skill lies in copying others' riffs and lyrical styles.

Naked Soul transplants them into their own songs.

Urge Overkill, Dinosaur Jr. and Soundgarden are all perpetrated by Naked Soul, without remorse or credit.

The album opens with "Helicopter Man," a song that sounds like an almost direct copy of Urge Overkill's "Sister Havanna."

The rest of the record follows suit, with guitarist/vocalist Mike Conley doing a great impression of another guitarist/vocalist, J. Mascis from Dinosaur Jr.

It is always acceptable — and essential — to have influences, but a serious line is crossed when being influenced turns into duplication.

"Visiting Your Planet" seems to be a final nail in the coffin of grunge, an epitaph stating to the masses: "If anyone can throw some songs together, they can go out and get a record deal, and (in some cases) prey on the unsuspecting spirits of junior-high kids and robotically cause them to buy their product."

If this profit motive continues, the artistic quality of the alternative genre of music will undoubtedly continue in a tailspin, following the same crash course of glam rock and disco.

Naked Soul is just another unheard voice, failing to distinguish themselves from a thousand different bands covering rock songs in a thousand bars across America.

Health plan urged

another $200 billion in unnecessary costs in the health-care industry, Clinton said.

"The explosion of costs has resulted in the stagnation of wages and more of Americans' pay checks going to health care," she said.

She said the public needs to know more about their options.

"What does it mean when in Pennsylvania an operation costs between $21,000 and $84,000 with no difference in quality?" Clinton said.

"This blank-check attitude does not correlate with the quality," she said.

Clinton also emphasized the need for people to be partly responsible for their own health care by paying their part and by taking better care of themselves.

"The days of the free lunch must be over in our health-care system," she said.

"Some people pay a lot. Some people pay something, and too many pay nothing," Clinton said.

She said the president looked at the single-payer and individual-mandate reform approaches, but the employer mandate was the only system that would ensure universal coverage and keep the most of the current system intact.

"We want to do as little as possible to disrupt what has worked for most Americans," she said. "That is, they get their insurance through their employer."

Clinton said provisions had been made to help small businesses meet the health-care mandate.

She said those businesses that already pay a lot for employee health coverage will have lower costs immediately.

Companies with 75 employees or less that provide minimal insurance will be able to provide better insurance at a discount.

Businesses that pay no insurance will pay 3.5 percent of their payroll.

"The tragedy is that many small businesses can't insure themselves and their families," Clinton said.

Health-care coverage for businesses with many part-time or minimum-wage workers will be paying the equivalent of a 50-cent increase in the minimum wage to provide health care for their workers, she said.

The loss of jobs because of reform will be hard to predict, Clinton said, but there would be an increase in jobs in the health-care sector in the areas of home care, long-term care and from the newly insured seeking preventive care for the first time.

Clinton said the health-care package would stop people from having to quit their job and go on welfare, because there was no other way they could get insurance.

"People want to pay their share," she said.

Clinton said she would gracefully explore a meeting with the members to solve problems and produce a bill that would make good on health reform.

She also said she was willing to listen to honest debate and not what was being said for financial gain or motivated by special-interest groups.

After her speech, Clinton answered questions from members from the Kansas and Missouri congressional delegations.

U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., asked where the $124 billion in Medicare savings would come from.

Clinton said the savings would come from limiting the growth of the Medicare program. It has been growing at four times the inflation rate, and the Clinton plan would limit that growth to two times the inflation rate.

"We will still be pumping money into the system, but we are trying to get a handle on how it is spent," she said.

U.S. Rep. Jan Meyers, R-Kan., was concerned about the estimated one million people who would lose their jobs because of employer mandated health care.

Clinton said the number of jobs lost would not be that high. She said there was no perfect approach, and employer mandated health care would cost less than minimum-wage increases in the past.

In a press conference after Clinton's speech, U.S. Senate minority leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said there was still a lot of room for debate.

"Americans want competition," Dole said. "Americans want health care handled by the private sector, not the government."

Sen. Christopher Bond, R-Mo., said a Republican health-care reform plan would probably be made public in two or three weeks. He said the plan would cost about $200 or $220 billion and would provide health-insurance vouchers for those at the poverty level. Vouchers would be phased for those on the poverty border line.

The health-care conference was sponsored by the Columbia Institute, an independent public-policy group based in Washington, D.C.

Dole treads lightly with health plan

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GARDEN CITY — It hasn't been lost on Kansans like registered nurse Chris McKinney that Bob Dole has toned down his criticism of President Clinton when it comes to health care.

"I saw a couple of T-shirts that said, 'Dole, sit down and shut up!'" McKinney said, reflecting on the senior senator from Kansas who, as minority leader, is also the titular head of the Republican Party.

"I've wondered these past couple of months if maybe he's getting the message — people want somebody who's going to be part of the solution, rather than just fanning the fire," she said.

Judging by the response in a Garden City high-school auditorium, where McKinney and about 300 others gathered over the weekend for a health-care summit, Dole is doing a fine minuet, balancing a ready-to-compromise stand on Clinton's health plan with his role as GOP guardian against high costs, big bureaucracy and government mandates on business.

"He's being flexible," said Wendy Klamp, marketing director at a psychiatric hospital in Shawnee, Kan., who was at a similar forum in Kansas City, Mo., on Friday when Dole shared the stage with Hillary Rodham Clinton.

"That's good," said Klamp, who said part of Dole's softer touch on the issue may be the influence of his wife, American Red Cross President Elizabeth Dole.

Klamp, like many of the other Kansans who attended these summits, said she thinks the health system needs reform.

Klamp is relying on Republicans like Dole for protection against too much government intrusion that would ruin what's good about the current system.

"I'm very much for finding a way to cover everyone, but I know how inefficient the government can be," said Bill Schaetzel, a pathologist from Lawrence, Kan., who was trying to sell bumper stickers that said, "Health care expensive now? Just wait until they make it free!"

"I'm a big Dole fan. He knows it's such a big issue out in the country, you can't come at it as just an adversary," Schaetzel said.

Dole, since taking over as a spokesman for the Republican Party, has seemed to relish the role as chief adversary on the budget package and other initiatives.

Win marred by chaos

as a public address system alerted the goal-post celebration that people were injured.

School athletic director Pat Richter, who witnessed the crush of fans trying to reach the field, described it as a domino effect.

The people on the bottom had nowhere to go as people from the upper reaches of the student section pressed toward the field, he said.

"It's tragic. You can see the devastation, and it makes you sick."

"The game is insignificant," he said.

"People were pushing down. I was pushed down too, but the people in front were mainly the people who got trampled," Wisconsin freshman Jennifer Hartzell said. "Everybody rushed onto the field, and maybe seven people were on the goal post, rocking it."

The goal posts stood. They are specially designed to withstand assault.

Riseling said police, anticipating fans on the field if Wisconsin won, had been instructed to fall back and surround the goal posts, preventing spectators from injuring themselves by climbing on them.

"There are not enough police in all of Dane County to handle 12,000 surging people in that section of stadium," she said.

CATEGORIES
To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD
Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Wildcat Workout: Workout to Feed the Hungry

Friday, Nov. 19, 4:20 p.m.

Wildcats are encouraged to "Workout to Feed the Hungry" in November to fill the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Participants may bring canned goods for donation to the Flint Hills Breadbasket, November 15 - 19. The five sessions per day will be competing all week to fill their basket the fullest. A combined session on Friday, Nov. 19 at 4:20 p.m. will culminate the week activity. When you plan to work out during any of the sessions, Monday - Friday, 6:30 a.m., 11:45 p.m., 3:15 p.m., 4:20 p.m. or 5:30 p.m., bring your canned goods.

Pool Action

Noon Wildcat Waterworks Changes Time

To better serve the noon crowd at the Natatorium, the Aqua Aerobics previously scheduled Monday, Tuesday and Thursday at 12:30 p.m. will now be held at 11:30 a.m. Water exercise provides a great workout while decreasing the impact on the body and increasing opportunities for greater flexibility. Additionally, working with water resistance can increase muscle strength and tone.

Monday, Tuesday and Thursday evening sessions will continue to be at 7:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.

Weight Training Tips

1. Perform a few minutes of warm-up exercises (walking, jogging, biking) and then stretch out all major groups.
2. Lift the major muscle groups first. Progress to the smaller muscle groups. For example: Chest, Back, Shoulders, Biceps, Triceps. This way the smaller supporting muscles are not exhausted when you're ready to lift the major muscles.
3. Perform the lifts in the same order. This will provide a better judgment of how much you should or could lift each time.
4. Change your workout pattern every 4-6 weeks. This prevents monotony and burnout, as well as stimulating the muscles in a variety of ways.
5. Control the lift. Numerous studies indicate using less weight in a controlled manner improves strength more efficiently.
6. Remember to breath. Although this sounds funny, it is important not to hold your breath while lifting.
7. Never lift the same muscle groups within a 24 hour period. Your muscles need at least a day's rest to rebuild and get stronger. The exceptions are the abdominal and calf muscles.
8. Always remember to stretch after you lift. Weight training tears down muscles, then rebuilds muscles with more size and/or tone. It is important to stretch so flexibility is maintained with this size and/or tone.

If you would like more help or information on Weight Training, please call 532-6950 and set up an appointment with Corey Long, Exercise Consultant.

My Favorite Workout!

Debbie Folse, graduate student in Computer Education, exercises at the Rec as part of her workout. In addition to a good diet, Debbie exercises for an hour and twenty minutes, four days a week. She incorporates step aerobics, calisthenics, weight lifting and the sauna into her exercise routine.

"I work out because it makes me feel better about myself. When I work out, I am more productive. Being a graduate student requires a lot of energy. And you don't get much done if you don't feel good."

Outdoor Rental Center

The Outdoor Rental Center is now closed for the winter months. We will re-open on March 1. It will continue to rent outdoor equipment by special reservation. Call the Rec Services Office at 532-6980 and ask for Steve. Reservations may be made up to two weeks in advance. You must present a validated KSU student ID, KSU Faculty Staff ID, or current facility use card when making reservations and renting equipment.

Rec Check

Recreational Services has created a new "Auto attendant" Rec Check phone line. Rec Check still offers a recorded message, but with one major improvement. The new system allows the caller to choose which specific category of information they want to listen to by entering the number of that category. The new system is designed to save the caller time by allowing them to skip any part of the message they don't want to listen to. The new line has five major categories to choose from: Rec Complex, Pools, Exercise Sessions, Intramural and Outdoor Equipment Rental. The Rec Check phone number is 532-6000.

You Asked It!!

Q: There is construction equipment in the parking lots by the Rec Complex. What is happening; and more importantly, will it affect my use of the Rec?

A: Construction is beginning on the Rec Complex Expansion with the arrival of the contractor and equipment. Construction of a temporary parking lot into the playfields with the closing of the asphalt lot directly north of the Rec Complex is underway. Construction fencing will be placed around the area. By November 22, the main entrance to the Rec Complex will be closed, and entrance to the building will be through the east door. Construction will last approximately 18 months. Yes, there will be some minor inconveniences during the construction process, but NO, there will not be any change in the programs offered through Recreational Services. We know you will be satisfied with the end result. Your cooperation will be appreciated.

Entry Policies:

- Facility users must be affiliated with KSU - student, faculty/staff or alumni
- Cards are not sold to the general public
- Call the Recreational Services office at 532-6980 for details

RC - Rec Complex
P - Pools
ORC - Outdoor Rental Center

Pool use on T/Th, 5-6 PM, is shared with the Kinesiology Department. Use is restricted to adult, fitness swimming and water jogging only.

ANDREW TOMB

Art, science and expression were the subjects of a lecture and exhibition by internationally known artist Rm. Palaniappan.

Palaniappan, from Madras, India, presented a selection of his work in the Union Art Gallery Monday night.

He is visiting K-State as an artist in residence, and will be demonstrating his artistic process on Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, through November 12.

Prior to the inaugural show, Palaniappan presented the evolution of his work, commenting on the painstaking process he undertakes to create each one. Following the lecture, students and faculty were invited to a reception in the Union Art Gallery, where they were able to have one-on-one interaction with Palaniappan.

Palaniappan said he uses elements such as planets, technical documents and landscapes as subjects for his etchings.

In addition, he described the influences of his work as trying to document the images seen in everyday life.

"I like to do pictures of unknown things that humans cannot perceive," he said. "Due to advanced technology we are in a position to visually record information about the universe even though we have no personal or direct knowledge of its working."

Charles Stroh, professor of art, said it is unusual to have an artist of Palaniappan's caliber in residence at KSU.

"When you have an internationally known artist such as him here, it says a lot about the quality of our University," he said.

Stroh also said the University owns some of Palaniappan's work and plans to display it the new art museum when it opens.

ART DEMONSTRATION

■ Rm. Palaniappan will demonstrate techniques for producing prints Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings in the Art Building, Room 1.

■ Palaniappan's art will be on exhibit until Nov. 20 in the K-State Union Art Gallery.

Former senator to declare

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA— Fred Kerr of Pratt will make his formal declaration today as a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor in 1994.

Kerr, 52, who served 16 years in the state Senate, 1977-93, and did not seek re-election in 1992, will launch a two-day, 14-city announcement tour with a 7:30 a.m. appearance at a downtown Topeka hotel.

He will then go to Lawrence, Johnson County, Emporia, Wichita, Manhattan, Garden City, Hutchinson and Pratt on Tuesday, and to Dodge City, Colby, Hays, Salina and Pittsburg on Wednesday.

Kerr becomes the second major candidate to make a formal announcement. Secretary of State Bill Graves made a similar announcement tour two weeks ago. Other declared candidates are Lenexa Mayor Rich Becker, Pittsburg businessman Gene Bicknell and former Wyandotte County Sheriff Owen Sully.

There are three announced candidates for the Democratic nomination: former House Speaker Marvin Barkis, U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery and Kansas Rep. Joan Wagnon.

"I intend to work hard and earn the Republican nomination for governor," Kerr said in a pre-announcement statement. "Kansas needs a qualified governor who can put forth a comprehensive plan of action, work with the Legislature and get results."

He was Senate majority leader in 1989-93.

Privacy of diary debated

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A nervous Senate, debating sex, allegations of possible criminal conduct and the right to privacy, wrestled reluctantly Monday with a historic motion to enforce a subpoena for Sen. Bob Packwood's diaries.

The Ethics Committee cannot turn a blind eye to potential violations of criminal law and standards of conduct, Sen. Richard Bryan, the panel's chairman, said in asserting a need for the diaries.

Packwood had said earlier that his more than 8,000 pages of writings include entries on the sex lives of fellow lawmakers. He also said Monday that the diaries included references to history-making events and matters that "are very, very personal."

Even as he offered a last-minute compromise to a hushed Senate, Packwood described how he had put his innermost thoughts to writing, including family heartaches, disappointment, irritation with the car repairman.

He said a deal might be worked out if the committee would describe to him the potential criminal conduct it said it recently discovered in the diaries.

All eyes were on Packwood in the crowded yet hushed Senate chamber as he made his case.

By turns combative and accommodating, he accused his colleagues on the ethics panel of acting as prosecutor, jury and judge, but told the rest of the Senate the matter could be settled short of a showdown vote.

The debate focused on the clash between the ethics committee's determined inquiry — which began with allegations of sexual

Panel to discuss U.S. interventions

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Ethnic conflicts are erupting in many countries throughout the world and thousands of people are dying. What the role, if any, the United States should play in solving these conflicts will be the topic of a panel discussion at noon today in the K-State Union Courtyard.

"The panel participants will talk about our responsibility as a country and the ethics of sending troops into countries like Bosnia and Somalia," Gloria Rumsey, coordinator of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, said.

The panel discussion is in preparation for Ved Nanda's Lou Douglas Lecture scheduled at 7:30 p.m. Nov. 8 in the K-State Union Forum Hall. Nanda's lecture is titled "Ethnic Conflicts and World Order."

The panel participants will include Dale Herspring, head of the political science department, Talat Rahman, professor of physics, Becky Opsata, graduate student in speech, and K.J. Wall, senior in speech, Rumsey said.

PANEL DISCUSSION

■ The topic is ethnic conflicts, at noon today in the K-State Union Courtyard.

Panel participants will answer questions from the audience, Rumsey said.

Each participant was selected because of their expertise in the area of political science and the ethics of U.S. intervention into foreign countries, she said.

Rahman is a native of Pakistan and has first hand experience of U.S. intervention in third world countries, Rumsey said.

Opsata and Wall are members of the K-State debate team, which participated in a debate on this topic last spring, she said.

Greenpeace founder travels to promote cause

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

The environmental movement will make its way to K-State as part of the Annual Fall Lecture, sponsored by the Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas Committee.

Watson, a Canadian environmentalist, will speak about his experiences with environmental movements and various wildlife conservation issues Wednesday in the K-State Union Little Theatre.

"He does a college lecture circuit, that's how we heard of him," Jeff Strater, UPC program adviser, said.

"We talked with other universities, and they said he gives an excellent presentation, so we asked him to speak here."

The founding director of Greenpeace and founder of the Sea Shepherd Conservation Society, Watson has gained international renown for his work in wildlife conservation.

"We thought there would be people in this area who would be interested in what he has to say," Strater said.

PAUL WATSON

■ Watson will speak about the environment at 7:30 p.m. today in the K-State Union Little Theatre.

"The fact that he's one of the co-founders for Greenpeace and is a nationally recognized figure in conservation was another attraction."

Watson, the subject of several books and an upcoming motion picture, has authored three books and lectures worldwide on conservation and experiences.

Some of Watson's accomplishments include bringing an end to pirate whaling in the North Atlantic, successfully documenting illegal whaling in Soviet Siberia and interfering with the activities of sealing fleets on Canada's east coast.

"An good example of some of his experiences is the time he placed himself between a harpoon and a whale in an attempt to stop whaling," Strater said.

The Sea Shepherd Conservation Society, founded in 1977, has been at the front of the wildlife conservation movement, using public donations to operate and maintain the ships and boats used to fight illegal activities.

Watson has led the society into numerous confrontations, including sinking seven illegal whaling ships and a six-hour pursuit by Soviet Navy and Air Force in 1981.

SALARIES RAISE EYEBROWS IN D.C.

An embarrassment in any office, the publication of White House employee salaries angered some White House workers and was prime news inside the Beltway. In a comical understatement, White House press secretary Dee Dee Myers said the list "has created a little curiosity." Her salary: $100,000.

The list unveiled a White House pay scale that doesn't always make sense: Clinton's economic policy director, Wall Street millionaire Robert E. Rubin, makes $100,000, which is $5,000 less than his aide, Gene Sperling. Rubin, who originally was going to work for free, set his own salary and spread the extra salary dollars among his staff.

But no matter how the salaries compare in Washington, there will be little sympathy from a general public with a median household income of $30,786.

Columbia shuttle crew tested for reactions

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — Columbia glided to Earth under a rising sun and setting moon Monday after the longest space shuttle flight in history. Then its seven astronauts went to bed — sort of.

After 14 days in orbit, the crew was carried off Columbia on stretchers to preserve the effects of weightlessness for tests that will be conducted on some of them for up to 45 days.

Except for some experiments to measure reactions when the astronauts stand up, the crew was to remain prone much of the time after landing and during an afternoon flight to Johnson Space Center in Houston.

Bikers prefer safety program to helmet law

TOPEKA (AP) — Opponents to a mandatory motorcycle helmet law told a Kansas Senate committee Monday that the state should concentrate instead on safety programs.

"The most effective way to reduce injury is to reduce accidents," Roger McCollister, a lifelong motorcyclist from Topeka, told the Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee. "That can be done by better highway safety and education programs."

When the Legislature failed to approve a mandatory helmet law earlier this year, the state highway construction fund lost $1.9 million in federal money.

Rosalie Thornburgh, administrator of traffic safety at the Kansas Department of Transportation, told lawmakers that the money was diverted to state safety programs for the 1995 fiscal year.

Kassebaum: No state health bureaucracies

IOLA (AP) — Reforming the nation's health-care system is necessary, but establishing elaborate bureaucracies in every state is not, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum said.

Kassebaum told the Allen County Farm Bureau on Saturday she is skeptical about governmental control over health care and forcing employers to cover workers, echoing earlier comments made by Republicans at a health-care summit in Garden City.

"I don't think it is necessary to set up elaborate bureaucracies in every state to administer the system," said Kassebaum, R-Kan. "The alliances would create too much government control and micro-management."

Kassebaum said she'd rather require individuals to carry health insurance and create informal cooperatives among health providers. Such a system would be cheaper and more flexible, she said.

But reform is necessary because health-care costs keep wages down and make it more difficult for the United States to compete in the world market, Kassebaum said.

U.S. team attacked; Germans fear boycott

BERLIN (AP) — Members of the U.S. national luge team were attacked over the weekend in the eastern German winter resort of Oberhof by skinheads who taunted the team's only black member.

The team left the training ground a day early. They left behind a mayor worried that world-class athletes who come from as far as Japan might now shun Oberhof.

Mayor Harmut Goebel appealed to the U.S. team today not to pull out of a World Cup meet Jan. 14-16 in Oberhof.

"There could be nothing worse for us than a boycott," he said.

The region surrounding Oberhof has been hit hard by factory closings, and losing tourist revenue would be devastating.

The mayor apologized to the American luge team Saturday before the athletes departed for Austria.

Duncan Kennedy, a white luger who stood his ground Friday night to protect a black teammate and other team members when about 15 young skinheads chased them from the Kurparkklause bar, has a swollen nose, lumps on his head and bruised ribs.

River Phoenix's cause of death still unknown

LOS ANGELES (AP) — River Phoenix lay dying on the sidewalk while his brother pleaded with a fire-department dispatcher to send help for the actor, who collapsed outside a nightclub.

"You must get here, please, you must get here, please," his brother said. "I'm thinking he had Valium or something."

First, the 23-year-old actor was writhing on the sidewalk. Then he lay motionless, as if sleeping. Within an hour, Phoenix was pronounced dead early Sunday at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center.

An autopsy Monday was inconclusive, coroner's spokesman Scott Carrier said. Results of blood and chemical tests will take weeks, he said.

But paramedics were told the actor had been taking drugs, county fire Capt. Ray Ribar said.

"It was the classic cocaine overreaction — it just nails some people and stops the heart," he said.

Several yards away on a pay telephone, Phoenix's brother was frantically trying to get help.

CORRECTIONS

The Police Reports in Nov. 1 Collegian had an error in it. The report saying "At 2:55 a.m., The Riley County Police Dept. requested assistance on loud music complaint at the Sigma Kappa house, 1930 College Heights Road" should have read Kappa Sigma instead of Sigma Kappa. The Collegian regrets the error.

The Letters to the Editor on the Opinion page in the Nov. 1 Collegian had an error because of a production mistake. The letter written by Terry Colbert read "... through tenacious rhetoric of biblicism and secularism to the main point ..." The word tenacious should have been tendentious. The Collegian regrets the error.

Depot shows history of city

DAVID MAYES/Collegian

The Union Pacific Railroad train depot was built in 1901. The building has been unused since 1971 and may be destroyed because of the construction of a new bridge over the Kansas River.

PAULA MURPHY
Collegian

The building is solitary. It stands like an uneasy child, with hunched shoulders and downcast eyes.

Plywood has long since replaced polished glass. Traveling trunks and chests used to be stacked on the bricks that are now broken.

Passengers used to scan the tracks for a glimpse of the approaching train. It was once the hub of commerce, travel and development. Today, countless motorists pass it on Fort Riley Boulevard and don't give it a second glance.

Manhattan's Union Pacific Railroad train depot, southeast of the mall, is a relic of the past that represents the beginning of the city.

Manhattan was founded in 1855, but development was slow. By Aug. 25, 1866, the Union Pacific Railroad had established regular service to the area. Six railway lines linked Manhattan to Denver, San Francisco, Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago and Salt Lake City.

The first depot was a small 30-by-80-foot structure, hardly more than a shed. A platform was added as well as a ladies' waiting room.

With 20 passenger and freight trains passing through Manhattan each day, a new depot was soon needed.

March 1901 saw plans for a new depot that was estimated to cost $14,000. It was completed in late December and occupied the first week of January 1902. The total cost was $10,000.

This new depot was a source of pride for the people of Manhattan. It was essentially a status symbol for the town.

The one-story brick building had a red-tile roof. The two toilet rooms were adorned with marble trimmings. Bay windows and double doors added elegance. The front steps were made of shaved stone.

Conveniences such as telephones, electric lights and ventilating registers were included. The depot employed 30 men.

After nearly 40 years, the building was remodeled. The brick entry tower and chimney were removed with the installation of a new heating system. The interior was redecorated in gray, beige, orange and silver.

The 1938 renovations remained fairly intact until service was discontinued in 1971.

A small fire in 1981 mandated replacement of the clay tiles with asphalt shingles. Today the building lacks plumbing, wiring and fixtures.

Many depots have been sold by the railroad and destroyed. It is estimated that there are only 300 surviving structures.

"I get about eight to 12 inquiries each year about the depot," said Jeanne Mithen, Riley County Historical Society librarian.

She said the inquiries are from students researching it or from people who are interested in doing something with it.

"Some people have seen it for years and wondered about it. Others are new to town and want to find out what it is," she said. "I'm always on the lookout for new information."

The depot is now owned by the City of Manhattan. Since acquiring the deed, many ideas have been considered in using the depot. Suggestions include restaurants, museums, a visitors' center and a railroad hobby shop.

"The future of the depot will depend on the bridge project," said Karen Davis, assistant director of community development. "The Kansas Department of Transportation is in the middle of plans for constructing a new bridge over the Kansas River."

"The depot will essentially be in the middle of an on-ramp to the bridge. That means access would be restricted severely," she said.

Many proposals have been discouraged because of this lack of access. An architect and a real estate agent evaluated the property and have determined that any retail venture would be difficult.

"They suggested that we wait until the property for the bridge has been acquired and plans have been finalized. Then we could seek proposals for use of the depot. There might be some public uses that would be feasible," she said. "It's important for the City of Manhattan to keep the depot, from a historical standpoint."

My thighs are too fat!

Do you think your thighs are too fat? Is your nose too big? Would you have more fun if you were blonde? Are you aging "gracefully"?

Everyday women receive messages from society, our families, and ourselves about how we should look. We constantly compare ourselves to an "ideal," and we always seem to fall short. And, very often, our self-worth is defined by not how we look to others, but how we think we look.

The Body Betrayed: Body Image in Women's Lives, a free public program sponsored by The Women's Program at Menninger, will feature panel presentations on:

- how culture influences women's self-esteem
- body image & eating disorders
- body image & sexuality
- how a woman's body ages

The featured presenters are: Linda Sebastian, MN, ARNP; Kathryn Zerbe, MD; Faye Heller, RN, MN, ARNP; and Nancy Jones, MSW. Reservations are recommended.

A reception and book signing with Kathryn Zerbe, MD, author of the recently released book, The Body Betrayed: Women, Eating Disorders, and Treatment will follow the program.

Ignoring Phelps can hurt him more than any sustained rhetoric

K-State has created a monster.

We watched as Topeka pastor Fred Phelps and his followers protested outside McCain last month before Pat Robertson's Landon Lecture.

We answered his childish shouts with our own.

And we gave Fred the attention he so feverishly desires.

This summer a Collegian editorial stated the best way to deal with Fred was to ignore him. Our words went unheeded, even by our own newspaper, which has covered Fred's every on-campus utterance.

But we didn't stop there.

We invited Fred back for a stint on KSDB-92 FM's "Purple Affair" talk show, going so far as to let him pollute our airwaves for two hours.

Phelps recently announced, via one of his trademark faxes o' profanity, that he will return to Wildcat land for Jesse Jackson's Nov. 29 Landon Lecture.

He wants us to do what he cannot — listen to another perspective (his) and consider it before attacking it systematically.

Would Fred and his group still drive up for a monthly hate-in if they knew ABC, NBC, CBS, ICU and UKNOWWHO were turning the other cheek?

At the risk of receiving a lifetime of profane and asinine faxes, we still believe the best way to deal with Fred Phelps is to ignore him.

It's small things that solve problems

LAJEAN RAU

Something struck me like a bolt of lightening this weekend. I was watching a TV news report on the health-care problem and the president's plan to fix it.

Brow furrowed, eyes squinting, my head tilted curiously to the side like a dog trying to make sense of the racket coming out of its owner's mouth, I attempted once more to understand the problem. I've felt guilty for months for not comprehending it, for not having an opinion on the issue of the decade.

And something hit me.

Maybe I don't understand just how our country came to spend 30 percent more then any other country per capita on health care, while quite a lot of people still don't receive proper care. How millions of dollars are wasted every year because of unneeded and unrequested tests and ridiculous amounts of paperwork.

How we pay more for drugs in this country than anywhere in the world. How hospitals are practically going out of business, despite the high costs of their services, to pay for the care they give to people who can't pay for it.

I can see the problems, and I can feel them when I pay my health insurance and pay for doctor visits and prescriptions. But I can't fathom how it's gotten so bad.

And for as much as I don't understand the problem, I sure as heck don't understand the solution. I've seen that big book floating around on C-Span, "The President's Health Care Plan." It scares me.

I've read article after article trying to make sense of Hillary and Bill's reform plan. And every time I think I've gotten a handle on it, the rules and the statistics seem to change.

What hit me was that no matter how much I don't understand about this obviously complex problem, I do understand one thing.

The federal government mismanages and wastes more money than anyone I can think of. What makes people think the same institution that racked up an inconceivable national debt can fix our system of health care?

It's really kind of funny.

The same people who get lambasted daily in the media for fraud, mismanagement, waste and spending more on all sorts of things than any reasonable individual or business would have spent are going to make a huge, multi-faceted industry run better?

I, for one, though thrilled that the President has acted, and bravely so, feel something closer to terror than relief at the thought.

As I sat on my couch, flipping the channel without guilt, now that I had finally arrived at an opinion about health care, instead of "Full House," or something else mindless and blissfully ignorant, I happened across a program about juvenile crime.

Another cheery subject.

I picked up the USA Today I had bought earlier, again looking for mindless diversion, and there it was again — the juvenile crime epidemic. It seems 73 percent of people polled say that juveniles should be tried and treated as adults — put them in jail, for a long time, they say.

It went on and on. And that same realization hit me. Why, when states like Wisconsin and California have seen their violent crime rates increase dramatically along with the incarceration rate, do people think that's the solution?

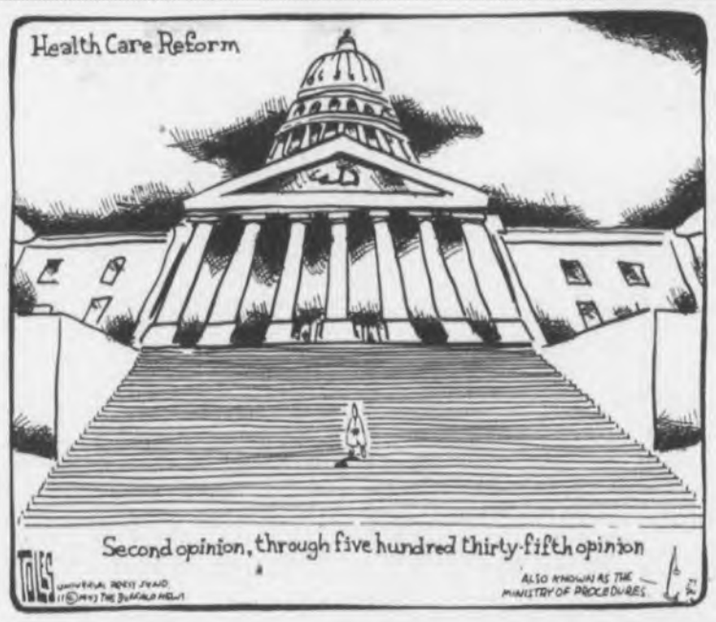
Why, when we have more people in jail than ever before, do people still not feel safe?

And like a light bulb appearing over my head, I saw the problem and solution as clear as day.

The bigger the program, or the plan or the solution, the less it works. Kind of like the difference between cafeteria food and a homecooked meal. The lasagna my mom put her heart into for my family was always better than the slop we got at school. And, for all I know, it was the same recipe.

The Constitution that we have been using for a couple of hundred years is about the same size as the table of contents to "The President's Health Care Plan."

Enough already. Everyone knows what works well — whether we're talking about health care, the prison system, or our nation's high schools, which are also in crisis. It's called good old competition and individuals with a desire to make a difference.



You can't turn on the television without seeing an inspirational piece about some hospital that has beat the rap, one that is prospering rather than going broke. Or a program about some boot camp for juvenile offenders that has like a .01-percent recidivism rate. Or some private, or public, high school that sends 98 percent of its students to college.

Let's clue in, people. Small-scale efforts like these, run by people with creativity and sincere concern, work. Obese government programs usually don't.

If the government wants to do something, maybe it could reward the people who are making a difference and spread their ideas around.

And this coming from a Democrat. They'll probably revoke my membership.

▶ GOAL POSTS

Grab a real clue and leave the posts up when K-State wins

Editor,

We would like to express our disapproval of the K-State fans' actions following our victory over the University of Oklahoma in which the goal posts were torn down.

Not only is this a waste of needed resources, but it is an embarrassment to K-State. I am an alum now living in Nebraska. The frequency of tearing down goal posts is a source of humor for Nebraskans who feel we must be desperate for victories. We feel that the K-State football team has earned the respect of other teams in the Big Eight and nationally, as our rankings illustrate. We believe the same respect should be shown by the K-State fans.

Tearing down the goal posts is in essence sending the message that we do not expect our football team to win. Show your enthusiasm, pride and appreciation of our football team, but leave the goal posts standing.

▶ GUNS

Pistols are scourge of any convenience-store employee

Editor,

I would like to respond to Tad Musselwhite's column in the Oct. 26 Collegian by preparing some alternative views on gun control that some people might not have thought about.

Having worked in the Kansas City convenience-store industry for four years, I can tell you that I and many of my friends are in favor of some kind of gun control. Specifically, controlling hand guns. Anyone who has worked for a convenience store for any amount of time has been robbed.

When the police apprehended the individual that robbed me, I was very pleased to hear that he had just been released on probation three weeks earlier from a string of armed robberies that occurred during 1990, and that I was the twelfth one he had robbed since his release.

If you would indulge me, it has been my experience that this is how much of the lawlessness occurs with the use of handguns. You are standing there minding your own business when an individual confronts you with a gun, robs you, then flees. Once the person flees, it would be possible for you to then draw your gun and shoot the assailant in the back.

There is truly only one applicable situation where you can defend yourself with a gun and that is when you see your attacker coming. This is generally not the case. I personally don't want Joe Public, who has no idea how to shoot a gun straight, packing a piece.

I am very much in favor of the Second Amendment. In keeping with the intent of the framing of the Constitution, I feel that anyone should be able to purchase a Kentucky long rifle any time. Heck, they can throw in the musket balls for free.

As a suggestion for all of you "avid hunters" out there who feel that you need a handgun to hunt with, I feel that you are in error. While I know that it is very exciting to shoot a deer or turkey from 1,000 yards away with a high-powered rifle, I would challenge you to try something a little more difficult, like a musket. You only get one shot and have to get pretty close, but you can still drink the blood or whatever it is that you do once you are through shooting the animal.

I urge all people, pro or con on gun control, to look at it in an objective manner, whether you have been victimized or not. Please, think about the situations that could occur where you would defend yourself with a gun and then make a decision as to whether or not handguns should be as widely available as they are.

Cracks riddle old debate

NOBODY WANTS ABORTIONS TO OCCUR, YET THEY REMAIN THE MOST COMMONLY PERFORMED SURGICAL PROCEDURE IN AMERICA.

Age-old yammering not helping; it's time to find a real solution

I am personally so tired of the abortion debate I could spit. So is everyone else. If either one of my opinion editors knew I was writing this, there would be much gnashing of teeth, rolling of eyes and then a petulant whine of, "Oh, I hate that topic!"

But I'm doing it anyway. I'm doing it not to rehash the old arguments, but to maybe tell a few people something they didn't know. It's relevant no matter what side you're on. It will please you, anger you or in some cases just plain scare the hell out of you, depending on how you feel.

The key to the abortion debate lies not in the courtroom, but in the streets. Law is not important when its effects are confined to the courtroom and the library. And the pro-life movement knows it. True, they'd love to see Roe v. Wade overturned, but until that happens they have found another way to win that I never thought they'd accomplish. But they just might be accomplishing it.

When the fight to legalize abortion prevailed, it prevailed through the use of the court system. Today, terrorists break windows in clinics, pour in butyric acid and then watch from afar as whoever opens the door is greeted by a blast of potentially deadly gas and then taken to the hospital. Last year, that tactic was used 73 times. No arrests have been made. Such is the manner in which the extremists who hide under the name "pro-life" hope to prevail.

As one doctor said, if that many McDonalds were attacked in that period of time, the government (and the public) would intervene. But there is an apathy about abortion in this country, an information overload perhaps. It makes you want to stop caring, either way, no matter what side you're on. You just want everyone to shut up about it.

SARA SMITH

Abortion, as a social issue, is deeply disturbing. That is the understatement of the decade, I know. The mention of abortion makes me want to crawl back under the blankets and let someone else figure it out.

When I wake up, the rainforests will be replenished, racism dissolved and somebody will have figured out this abortion thing. But that's not going to happen, and there's no decent rationalization for tiptoeing around the issue.

It's a real problem. Nobody wants abortions to occur, yet they remain the most commonly performed surgical procedure in America. Something is seriously flawed in the execution of the two sides of the debate. Nothing is changing.

No matter how much birth control we pass out, no matter how many abortion doctors retire out of fear, 1.6 million women slip through the cracks each year and make the decision to terminate their pregnancies. It's too late for them. Abortion is not pretty. It is not a quick and easy solution. For that many women, something told them that abortion was the only solution.

And instead of offering a viable alternative, Operation Rescue takes down license plate numbers of cars at clinics and harasses whoever answers the phone.

Instead of comfort being given to a confused teenager, doctors are shot and threatened and their children intimidated. Meanwhile, 1.6 million women and girls are lost. Somewhere in the huge crack between Planned Parenthood and Operation Rescue, 1.6 million women slip through.

That is a crack that is 1.6 million times too big.

Brewery serves classic, new ale

WILLIAM MCKEEN III
Collegian

REVIEW

An American tradition destroyed during prohibition, the brewpub, is quickly making a comeback across the United States.

Little Apple Brewing Company, 1110 Westloop Shopping Center, is the newest member of the age-old tradition of making regionally brewed beer.

"People's tastes are going back to the good old days," Ian West, overseer of the restaurant part of the brewpub, said.

West, a native of England, said the Real Ale movement in England is quite similar to what is going on in America.

"People were getting tired of watered-down commercial beer, and they wanted a return to the brewpubs of the old days," West said.

The microbrewery/brewpub movement began on the West Coast and has found its way across the country and now to Manhattan, West said.

In addition to the food it serves, Little Apple brews four types of beers on a regular basis: Aggie Wheat, New Boston Bitter, Big Red Ale and Black Squirrel Stout.

Andy Allison, co-owner and co-brewer, said Little Apple brews seven barrels of beer at a time, which comes out to about 225 gallons.

"The whole brewing process takes 12-15 days depending on the beer," Allison said. "So if we really pushed it, we could possibly brew 1000 barrels."

Along with the basic menu of beers, Allison said the pub plans to have specialty beers throughout the year.

"There is definitely a wave of support moving across the country for microbrewery-made beer," Allison said. "The number of microbreweries has quadrupled in the last four years."

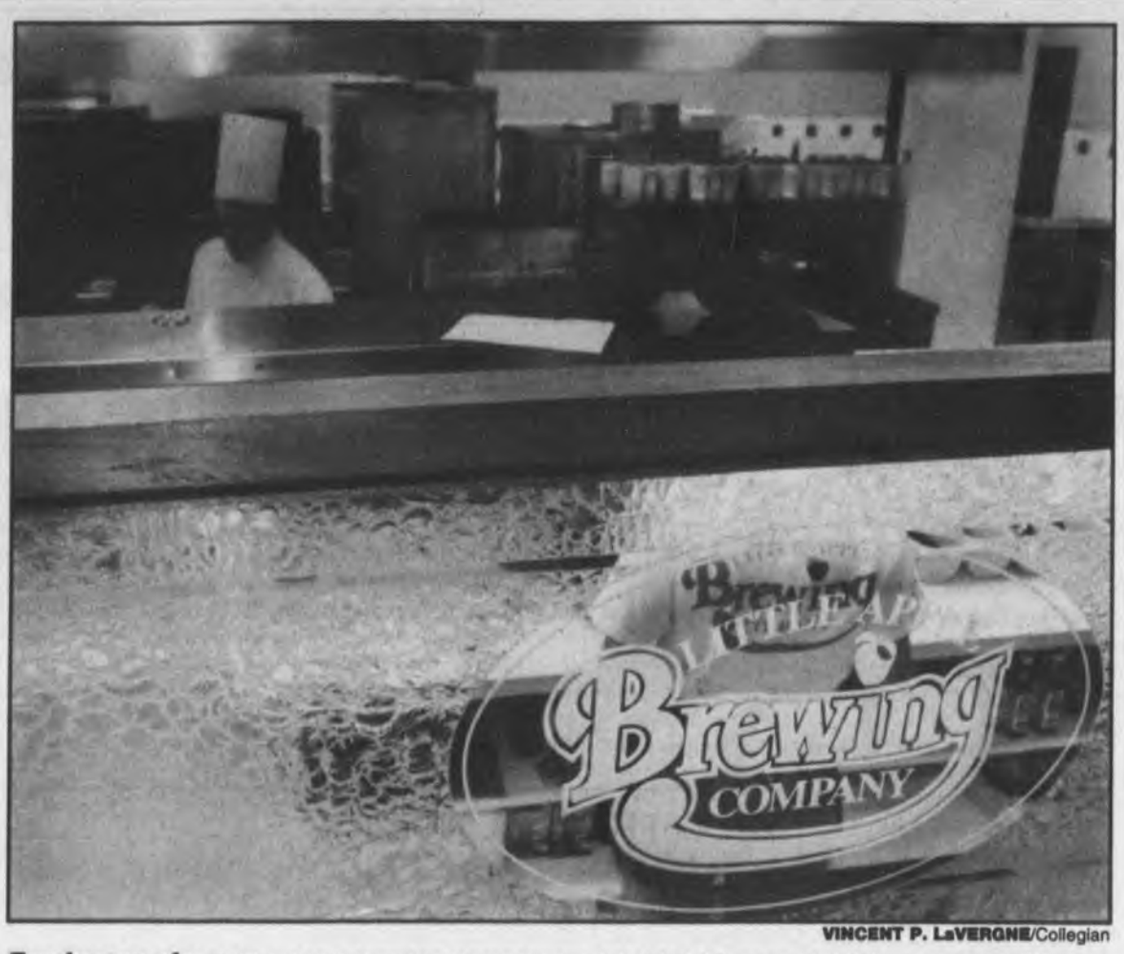
Although microbreweries sell the same type of beer, West said the taste is never the same.

"Whereas with the rest of commercial beer the taste is always the same, with hand-crafted beer there will always be a slight variation," he said.

"We try to create something unique," he said.

The beer isn't the only thing that makes Little Apple a different type of place to drink or dine.

The restaurant offers both a lunch and a dinner menu along with a varied assortment of appetizers.



The list of fresh-made items is made up mainly of traditional American cuisine, but there is a smattering of European foods such as the beer-steamed bratwurst and the ploughman's platter.

"We are trying to make honest-to-goodness American food," West said, "but we do have a few European items."

The tradition of recreating an old type of brewpub carries over to the decor of the restaurant.

West said the tables are hand-made.

The cappuccino machine was found in an old Kansas City warehouse, and the 60-year-old wooden timbers on the floor were taken from buildings in some nearby Kansas towns.

VINCENT P. LaVERGNE/Collegian

Employees of the Little Apple Brewing Company work behind the open-air kitchen in preparation for the evening customers. The restaurant, which also houses a self-contained micro-brewery, opened Friday and is located in the Westloop shopping center.

ECONOMY

Speaker backs spending reform

U.S. must stop focusing on military spending

CORI CORNELISON

The president of the Institute for Space and Security Services said the United States must do its part in diverting the economy away from military spending.

During his speech Monday night at the First Congregational Church, Robert Bowman said those who say defense spending is good for the economy are wrong.

"There is no truth in that," Bowman said. "Jobs are good for the economy."

Bowman asked the audience to imagine what the U.S. economy would be like if everyone had jobs and were not afraid of losing them. Everyone would spend more money, he said.

"The reason spending appears to be good for the economy is because it appears as an excuse for federal government to give jobs," he said.

"It's time for an end of politics of division. It's time for Americans to quit fighting each other and get back to work."

ROBERT BOWMAN
PRESIDENT OF THE INSTITUTE FOR SPACE AND SECURITY SERVICES

Bowman said the United States lost the Cold War because it focused on military spending.

"The Cold War is over, and we lost," Bowman said. "We lost $10 trillion dollars we spent on the Cold War."

The $10 trillion dollars spent on military spending is enough money to buy everything in the United States except land, Bowman said.

"Since we spent $10 trillion dollars on it, everything in the country is one generation older then it needs to be," Bowman said.

The United States also lost 100,000 young men's and women's lives, invincibility and innocence during the course of the Cold War, Bowman said.

Bowman said the United States had another casualty in Vietnam — prestige.

"I think it's time for Americans to be the good guys once again," Bowman said.

Bowman said the United States needs to quit selling weapons to the Third World. Instead of being the source of death and destruction, he said there are more legitimate uses for the armed forces.

The armed forces should have more legitimate missions concerning the defense budget, he said.

The U.S. armed forces should focus on deterring the use of nuclear weapons against the United States, defending U.S. shores and borders from foreign invasion, assisting the United Nations Military Staff Committee in main-taining peace and engaging in humanitarian and relief efforts, Bowman said.

"We have to take the peace dividend and reinvest it in things that need doing," Bowman said. "People want to work on things that enlarge the pie we all have to share."

Bowman said the United States can not achieve this without working at a national level.

"It's time for an end of politics of division," Bowman said. "It's time for Americans to quit fighting each other and get back to work."

Inmate appeals death sentence with new evidence

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Witnesses have come forward to say death row inmate Lloyd Schlup is innocent of a 1984 state prison slaying, but their testimony might be too late.

Schlup, 32, of Sedalia, is scheduled to be die by injection Nov. 19. A new, more strict standard for getting an appeals hearing could keep his lawyer from presenting new testimony before his execution date.

Schlup was convicted in the 1984 stabbing death of prison inmate Arthur Dade, but witnesses have come forward since then to say Schlup could not have participated in the murder. Surveillance film also appeared to show Schlup in a prison cafeteria line when Dade was stabbed.

Sean O'Brien, director of the Missouri Capital Punishment Resource Center and Schlup's lawyer, said he would file a request to reconsider Schlup's case.

Ochs receives weekly award in split vote

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State defensive end Dirk Ochs was named the Big Eight Defensive Player of the Week Monday.

Ochs sacked quarterback Cale Gundy twice, caused one fumble, had a total of six tackles and was credited with two quarterback hurries in the Wildcats' 21-7 win against Oklahoma Saturday.

The victory ended a 23-year drought against OU and moved the Cats to 6-1-1 and tied for second in the Big Eight with Colorado.

Dirk Ochs

The K-State defense had four sacks in the contest, the most this season for the Cats.

The Sooners averaged 187 yards rushing per game going into the game, but the Cats limited them to just 58 yards.

"Our defensive line has really come into its own," Coach Bill Snyder said.

"I think they did a wonderful job in taking away the running game."

The sophomore from Overland Park, Kan., won the award in a split vote over cornerback Kevin McIntosh of Missouri. McIntosh intercepted two passes and made 11 tackles in the Tigers' 37-34 victory against Iowa State.

Running back Joe Freeman of Missouri rushed 31 times for 182 yards and two touchdowns and on Monday was named the Big Eight Offensive Player of the Week.

Big Eight games no longer blowouts

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — It isn't just the coaches' imagination. Games in the Big Eight really are getting closer.

In 28 Big Eight games in 1987, league research revealed the average margin of victory was 27.43 points.

Only four games were decided by single digits.

So far this season, only two of 16 Big Eight games have been decided by more than 21 points, with the average margin being a shade better than 13 points.

Six games have been single-digit wins and losses.

It's probably just another sign of how once downtrodden programs such as K-State and the University of Kansas have risen to competitive levels.

The days of the automatic blowout whenever an upper echelon team meets somebody from the lower division are over — at least for now.

There's still no better sign of this than No. 18 Kansas State's 21-7 victory over No. 20 Oklahoma last week.

"We knew Kansas State was a good team," Oklahoma coach Gary Gibbs said during Monday's Big Eight coaches teleconference. "We knew it would be hard-fought.

"When you evaluate the tapes and you see the mental mistakes and turnovers and penalties, you understand why you weren't successful," he said.

"We had a great week of preparation. We just didn't do a good job on Saturday."

One of the most historically lopsided series in Big Eight history resumes this week, however, when No. 6 Nebraska visits KU.

Year after year, the Cornhuskers seem to demolish the Jayhawks whether KU has a good team or not.

This year, the Huskers catch KU at a time when the injury bug is even biting the coach's son.

Patrick Mason hurt his knee in a junior-varsity high-school game in Lawrence recently.

"He was in there with his leg all wrapped up," coach Glen Mason said.

"I'm looking three or four times before I cross the street and making sure I hold onto the rail when I walk down stairs. It seems like no one's safe around here."

At least the Jayhawks are down to only their second team quarterback. Pity the poor Oklahoma State Cowboys, who were reduced to using Andy Loveland on Saturday against KU. Loveland's only previous experience this year was on special teams. That the Jayhawks prevailed by a touchdown hardly seemed surprising.

"He was informed about 3 p.m. Friday he was going to be the starter," Oklahoma State coach Pat Jones said. "Andy is a guy we've always had a lot of regard for as a person. He's had his ups and downs. But given such short notice, the guy played admirably.

"We're a long way away offensively," he said. "But Andy did a pretty good job of things. He played within himself, made a couple of pretty good throws, a couple of pretty good scrambles. He's stayed upbeat, and he was a good team guy. He's the epitome of that, and I'm proud of him."

The Cowboys this week play host to No. 23 Colorado, but they may be catching a break. Last week the Buffs suffered a disappointing loss to Nebraska that probably took them clear out of the Orange Bowl picture.

"We always have an emotional letdown after we play Nebraska," Colorado coach Bill McCartney said.

"It's a bonafide concern."

Cyclones' option offense creates a potential menace

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Iowa State has the type of offense that seemingly drives defensive coordinators crazy. Just take Saturday's game at Missouri for example.

Against the Tigers, Iowa State used a combination of different formations to rack up yardage — primarily on the option. The Cyclones finished the game with 243 yards rushing but lost to the Tigers 37-34.

Missouri coach Bob Stull said the option attack is tough to defend.

"They've been a pain in the rear for a long time," Stull said. "That option attack they run gives you a lot of problems. The only thing that's stopped them in the past is themselves."

Executing their offense out of the wishbone with the no back and wing formations, the Cyclones rushed for 39 times compared to just 19 passes. The most successful play for Iowa State came out of the no back formation.

The Cyclones would line up with the fullback in the back field. Then, the fullback would motion out toward the side-line, and the quarterback would take the snap and execute an option route.

At the snap, the wingback would take three steps backwards and allow the quarterback to catch up with him. Then, the combo would run the play like a normal option between the quarterback and the wingback.

Iowa State running back James McMillion said the Cyclones had great perimeter blocking that helped them with their option attack.

"We had some success running some dives," McMillion said.

"Our perimeter blocking was great, and that allowed us to run the option effectively."

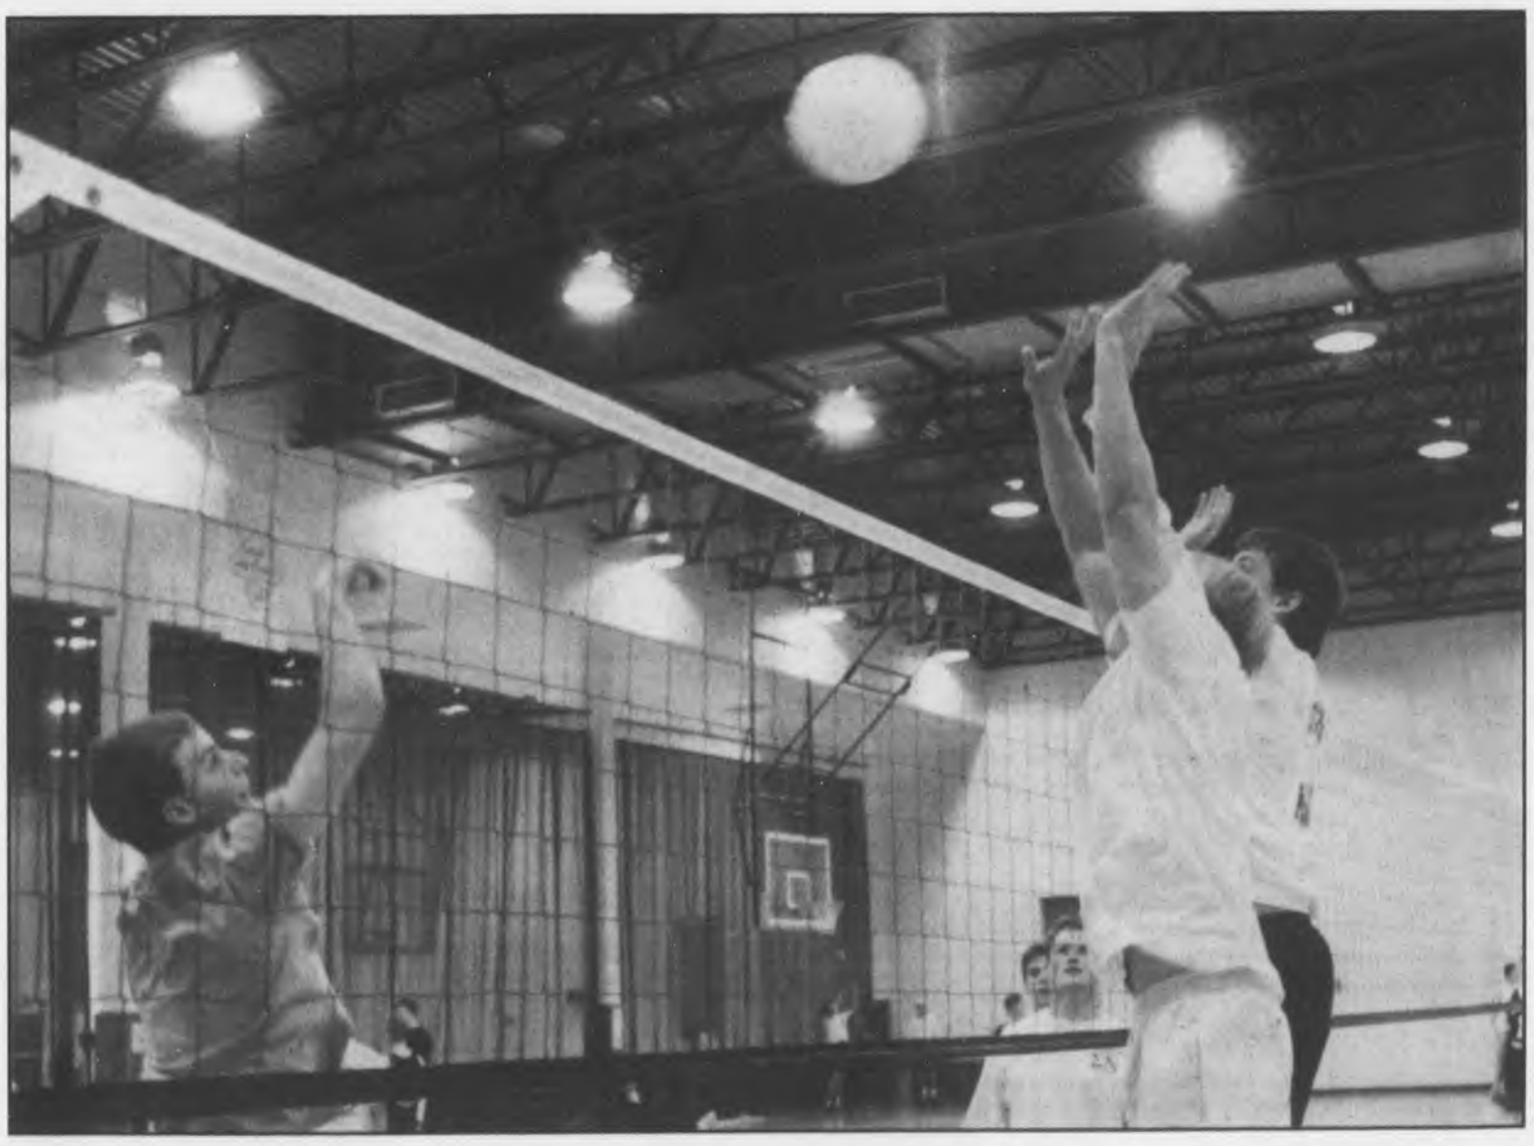
At the quarterback position, Iowa State used two different players for various types of offensive attacks. Both Bob Utter and Todd Doxzon shared playing time on Saturday against Mizzou.

Against the Tigers, Doxzon rushed for 51 yards on 15 attempts, and Utter had 10 completions out of 15 attempts for 98 yards.

"Obviously, offensively we did pretty good with the exception of some mistakes," Doxzon said. "My head wasn't totally in the game."

Doxzon also directed two third-quarter drives that brought the Cyclones from 10 points down to four ahead at 31-27, but he was replaced by Utter on the final Iowa State offensive drive.

Place-kicker Ty Stewart is also an important part of the Iowa State offense. Against the Tigers he kicked four field goals — including a 58-yarder that tied the school record for the longest field goal.



It was Stewart's second 58-yarder this season, and it is also the longest field goal in Division I football this season.

Against the Tigers, with 36 seconds left on the clock, Stewart tied the score at 34-34 with a 25-yard field goal on fourth down and goal.

"My job is to keep my team from losing, and I stick with my decision. If we had been fourth and one or two, we would have gone for it, but on fourth and eight we are not going to go for Cinderella."

Mizzou then came back and kicked a 40-yard field goal with no time on the clock to win the game 37-34.

"Missouri did what they had to do to win in the time that they had," Walden said. "Hooray for Missouri. They deserve it."

Buffalo topples Washington 24-10

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — The sweep is complete.

The Buffalo Bills beat the Washington Redskins 24-10 Monday night to give them victories this season over the teams that beat them in the last three Super Bowls.

Andre Reed had 159 receiving yards and a touchdown, and Thurman Thomas ran for 129 yards and a score. The Bills (6-1) piled up 397 yards against the Redskins (1-6), who entered the game with the NFL's next-to-worst defense.

Jim Kelly completed 18 of 24 passes for 238 yards and two touchdowns, and Buffalo intercepted Mark Rypien four times.

In handing Washington its sixth-straight loss, Buffalo exacted some revenge for the 37-24 loss to the Redskins in the 1991 Super Bowl.

Buffalo already has a 13-10 victory over Dallas, which beat the Bills 52-17 in last season's Super Bowl, and a 17-14 victory over the New York Giants, who started the Bills' title game losing streak three seasons ago with a 20-19 win.

The Bills, leading the league with 24 takeaways going into the weekend, used two interceptions by Nate Odomes to take control of the game in the third quarter.

In all, the Bills stopped four consecutive drives by intercepting Mark Rypien. Darryl Talley and James Williams got the other picks.

Trailing 14-10 at the half, the Redskins drove into Buffalo territory at the start of the third quarter before Odomes picked off Rypien at the Buffalo 22.

Thomas then carried the ball eight times in a 12-play drive that ended with his 1-yard touchdown run.

The Redskins drove into Buffalo territory on their next possession and kept the drive alive by converting a third-and-20 to the Bills' 28. But on the next play, Odomes picked off Rypien again, this time in the end zone.

The Bills took that interception and drove for a 45-yard field goal by Steve Christie.

Reggie Brooks was the star for Washington, carrying 24 times for 117 yards and a 7-yard touchdown. Washington's other score came on a 19-yard field goal by Chip Lohmiller.

Redskin cornerback Darrell Green slipped on the slick artificial turf to set up the first score of the night, Kelly's 65-yard pass to Reed.

When Green slipped, Reed was open at his own 40. Safety Brad Edwards missed a tackle there, and Reed went down the sideline to give the Bills a 7-0 lead six minutes into the game.

The Redskins ran Brooks six times on their next drive, with the final run going for 7 yards and the tying touchdown. It was Washington's first touchdown in the first quarter all season.

The Bills drove 80 yards to go back out in front 14-7. The drive ended when Kelly found Billy Brooks on a quick slant for an 11-yard scoring play.

On Washington's next possession, the Redskins moved to the Buffalo 18. Lohmiller kicked a 36-yard field goal, but the Bills were called for roughing the kicker.

Buffalo lineman Bruce Smith had his 100th career sack in the fourth quarter.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶RUGBY TEAM DOMINATES KU 36-6

The K-State men's rugby team brought the Governor's Cup back to Manhattan Saturday by ousting Kansas 36-6.

After losing to the Jayhawks last year, the Cats recaptured state bragging rights in the always-heated rivalry.

"This is one game we don't have any trouble getting up for," Jeff Smith, team president, said. "Especially after losing to them last spring.

K-State dominated from the start, with Dow Richards connecting on a three-point penalty kick and Mike Skahan scoring the first of his three tries to give the Cats a 10-0 lead early in the game.

Eric Saatholf said the Cats displayed cohesiveness and team unity throughout the contest.

"We played like a well-oiled machine, with each player being a part, working together to play as one," Saatholf said.

Matt Smith and Kelby Hardkutt each added a try for the Cats, giving them a 36-0 advantage before Kansas scored late in the game.

"I thought it was going to be a close game," Mark Fleury said. "I was kind of surprised."

"It was a big confidence-builder for us," he said. "We were kind of on a losing streak, so it was a turnaround for us. Everybody was up for the game."

▶HOLMES: MORRISON UNDEDICATED

SCOTT CITY, Mo. (AP) — Veteran boxer Larry Holmes took a shot at fallen World Boxing Organization champ Tommy Morrison, calling him an undedicated and undisciplined fighter.

Holmes was in Scott City, south of Cape Girardeau, promoting a riverboat gaming operation on Monday. He said Morrison lost his bout last weekend against little-known opponent Michael Bentt because Morrison can't fight back.

"Tommy never had the ability to take a punch," Holmes said. "You got to be able to take a punch."

Bentt scored a technical knockout over Morrison Friday in the first round of their fight in Tulsa, Okla. Morrison, of Leawood, was knocked down three times, ending the fight just 93 seconds into the round.

Holmes and Morrison have never fought. Holmes currently has an offer on the table to fight heavyweight George Foreman. There's no official word on that bout.

Yolanda Gray, senior in veterinary medicine, checks on Argus, a beagle that is recovering from back surgery.

For vet students, Animals are a way of life

Alan Myers, senior in veterinary medicine, begins to fill out paperwork in preparation for a bill for a dog. The dog is in the intensive care unit in the small animal hospital.

On one side of the waiting room, a Dalmatian whined plaintively while his master soothed him, and in a corner, an older couple awaited the latest news on their pet collie.

Each year, people from Kansas and surrounding states bring their pets to be treated in K-State's small animal clinic. The clinic is a valuable learning tool for professionals and students alike.

The internship program at the center attracts many practicing doctors back to school to specialize in a certain field of treatment.

Steve Peterson, a doctor of veterinary medicine for five years and an assistant instructor, is interning at the clinic to learn more about surgery and optometry.

"We can get a lot of things done here, like CAT scans," Dr. Peterson said. "Other institutions don't have that. It's a good program."

He went through an application process that enables prospective interns to rank schools in an order and then matches them with the best school for their specialty.

Besides learning their specialized field, interns assist students who are majoring in veterinary medicine.

"The students make the diagnoses, and we steer them in the right direction," Peterson said.

Alan Myers, senior in veterinary medicine, is training to become a practicing doctor.

"We're given a lot of responsibility in making decisions," Myers said.

Students spend the first three years in classrooms learning about medicine before getting hands-on experience their senior year, which is spent diagnosing and treating animals, Myers said.

Yolanda Gray, senior in veterinary medicine, said she values the experience she receives in the clinic and the classroom.

"We refer back to our books a lot. You sort of lack a sense of security," she said. "There's always the question of whether you're doing things right."

Students are required to take eight rotational blocks in a specific field, like radiology or cardiology, that last six weeks each. The student chooses only three, and the rest are assigned by the clinic.

Alan Myers takes the pulse of a dog in the intensive care unit. Myers was finishing his last day in one of several six-week-long rotations.

Gray said an emotional attachment may occur between students and their patients.

"I do it for the love of animals," she said. "It's sad to see them go home or if they die or get euthanized. You've spent a lot of time and care on them. It's difficult to deal with at times."

Myers said long days are spent in caring for the animals brought to the clinic, some of which are strays that might need attention.

Students usually spend 10 to 12 hours a day at the clinic and serve a night oncall.

"Several nights you might have emergencies," Myers said. "It all depends on the case load. Sometimes you feel like you just can't function."

Supplies for an intensive care patient sit in a basket ready for emergency use. Each patient has its own basket of supplies.

Timothy Newman, sophomore in graphic design, brought his two dogs, Ouija and Kula, to the small animal clinic for a routine examination.

He first visited the clinic when Kula received a scratched eye as a puppy.

"The students I've dealt with were very professional. They're well supervised," Newman said.

Contrary to popular belief, services at the small animal clinic are not free. A regular examination costs $15, and an emergency will require a down payment of $40. Five dollars is also required when leaving a stray.

Dr. Peterson says some people just don't understand the clinic cannot afford free treatment.

"We won't see animals for free. That's just not the case. Compared to other doctors, it's incredibly cheap. K-State is one of the top veterinary schools in the United States. We have good facilities here and good availability," Peterson said.

Gray said she could not see herself in another field.

"It's great to know you made life better. You made a difference," she said. "The owners are thrilled, and you have a great satisfaction because of what you've done."

Students represent K-State to alumni

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

Promoting K-State is the objective of Student Alumni Board.

Since 1982, the group has represented K-State through college nights with high-school students, alumni reunions and involvement in Family Weekend and All-University Open House.

SAB is affiliated with the KSU Alumni Association and serves as their student arm, Becky Klingler, director of constituent programs, said.

SAB members are chosen in the spring and must be nominated by faculty members or by contacting the Alumni Association themselves. First the applications are screened, and then perspective members are interviewed by the current members before the final selections are made. Only about eight new members are selected each year because students can remain SAB members throughout their K-State career.

"We look for students who are comfortable speaking in front of a large group as well as one-on-one communication," Klingler said. "We need someone outgoing because they are going to be walking up to total strangers and introducing themselves."

The enthusiasm of SAB members not only brought Ashley Broeckleman, sophomore in education, to K-State, but it also prompted her to become an SAB member.

"I remember how impressed I was with them at a college night, and the students who talked to you were really excited about K-State," Broeckleman said.

SAB members are required to attend four out of the eight college nights they schedule each year. But before they meet perspective students, they are taught communication skills during their weekly meetings, and they learn about the various departments and programs at K-State.

Klingler said the members learn about everything from financial aid to admissions policies, but if they don't know the answer to a perspective student's or parent's question, then they make sure to find someone who does.

"I think they are well trained and articulate. We really work on the fact that they need to welcome prospective students and parents like they are welcoming them into their home," Klingler said.

SAB is a time commitment, but Broeckleman said it is worth the effort.

"Sure, you may be leaving for a college night at two in the afternoon and not get back until midnight, but I think it's a really great honor to represent K-State, and I'm willing to commit my time to it." Broeckleman said.

During the college nights, SAB members not only inform high-school students about K-State facts, but also about the transition from high school to college.

"I've had people ask me things like, 'so are you really into 2 a.m. studying?' Things like that really break the ice," Broeckleman said. "But we try not to talk about Aggieville. We promote the idea that academics come first."

Klingler said SAB members are able to promote these ideas to high-school students because the students are more at ease speaking with them.

"High-school students are shy of people they consider to be adults, so they feel more comfortable talking to students. They get to the heart of college life," Klingler said.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Dear Cassandra,

I need some reassurance. My dilemma deals with what I consider to be "the indecent exposure of bare feet."

It seems to be prevalent for men and women alike on this campus to expose their little piggies, which I find completely repulsive.

What compels people to bare it all? Am I the only one who sees feet for the disgusting, stinky, sweaty germ factories that they are?

I know this problem may sound ridiculous, but I can't help seeing feet for anything else. Please tell me what to do to keep from being completely grossed out at the sight of fellow K-Staters' feet.

Signed,
I.P. Freely

Dear U.R. Weird and Obviously Bored,

It's a tragedy the only feet you've encountered previously are disgusting, stinky, sweaty germ factories. Um ... I'm not sure who you've been hanging around, but, uh, you may want to reconsider your acquaintance with them.

But hey! To keep from being "completely grossed out" by bare feet, I have some special advice: The next time you see the offending body parts, scream loudly and beat your chest. Pull your hair and start foaming at the mouth. While you may not overcome your fetish, the offensive feet will surely back away in fear.

Dear Cassandra,

I come to you with what sounds like a silly problem but is really very serious.

I really enjoy eating Ramen noodles as a snack at night. My roommate, on the other hand, hates the stuff. He always complains about the "awful smell" that it causes. Cassandra, don't I have the right to eat what I want in my own room? Please settle this dispute for us. I would really appreciate it.

Signed,
Very Hungry

Dear Very Hungry,

It's a free country, man. You can eat whatever you want whenever you want. Burn some incense while cooking your Ramen. Or maybe send your roomie out to borrow an egg from the neighbors while you cook and eat it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Take time today to call an ex-lover. Taunts about sexual inadequacy would be in order.

My Sister's Machine mimics Soundgarden tunes

HAROLD RING
Collegian

My Sister's Machine does everything it's supposed to do. What it's supposed to do, judging from the album "Wallflower," is make everyone think this is Soundgarden around the release of "Louder Than Love."

REVIEW

Where is My Sister's Machine from? You guessed it — Seattle. Nick Pollock, the singer, played in an early version of Alice and Chains.

"Wallflower," the second album for My Sister's Machine and released through Chameleon Records, fails to break new ground. Machine's first album was "Diva" on Caroline Records in 1992.

The first song on "Wallflower" — "Inside Of Me" — starts with a heavy bass riff. This is probably the best song on the release. Other notable songs are "Steamy Swamp Thang" and "This Is Fear."

The album is split into two different themes. One half of the split deals with personal issues, and the other deals with environmental issues. Sounds pretty trendy, doesn't it?

This album is annoying. It has all the wailing guitar solos and whiny vocals that anyone could ever want. The singer sounds like he sings through effects. This band is trying to sound angry, but they just come off sounding lame. This is just another band trying to cash in on previous grunge bands' successes.

The sludgy grind of these bands are taking over more and more of the listening public. Next stop for My Sister's Machine will probably be MTV's "Headbanger's Ball" and then regular rotation. MTV seems to have a way of making mediocre artists popular.

My Sister's Machine can play. They just picked the wrong style. The potential of this band is amazing. The band said they grew with album. Let's hope they grow away from the Seattle scene on the next one.

It's been said a million times before, and it bears repeating again: "Do something original."

In the end we should all "just say no" to grunge.

Hey, Linus! It's the return of the Great Punkin.

Halloween's excitement will be resurrected with the soul-pleasing groove of Punkinhead.

Coincidentally, the group's latest album, "New South Soul," was released last Halloween.

Andrew Holm, senior in psychology and the show's promoter, said the Punkinhead sound is a cross between funk and soul.

"They play down-home funk," Holm said.

Punkinhead features several flavors of music including, but not limited to, soul, R&B, funk and gospel. Their blend of soulful harmonies have drawn comparisons to famous musicians such as James Brown, Sly Stone and George Clinton.

PUNKINHEAD
■ Playing at 9 p.m. tonight at Last Chance. Admission is free.

Led by vocalist/guitarist Paul "Tater" Boatright, the five-piece Fayetteville, Ark., natives will return to celebrate the one-year anniversary of their album, "New South Soul."

Joining in the festivities are keyboardist Shecky Mills, drummer Chuck Platt, trumpeter Steve "Chedda" Setser and bassist Chad Tolton.

To further support their album, Punkinhead will showcase songs from "New South Soul" as well as new material for the next album.

Locally, Punkinhead has been in rotation at both KSDB 91.9 FM and KMKF 101.5 FM during the past year.

Steve Anthony, disk jockey for K-Rock, said Punkinhead is featured on the station's new-music show, and said he feels their live material will be very entertaining.

Man kills 2 in land dispute

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEWBURY, N.H. — A selectman's son involved in a land dispute with the town opened fire inside the municipal building Monday, killing two employees and critically wounding a third before shooting himself, authorities said.

John Albro, 38, walked into the one-story converted schoolhouse and began firing a .45-caliber submachine gun and a semiautomatic .22-caliber handgun, authorities said.

"He came in with an idea fixed in his mind that he was going to take action," Attorney General Jeffrey Howard said. "They did attempt to dissuade him, but there was no doing that."

Mary Beth Swanson, a receptionist, and Susan Webster, a secretary, were killed, Howard said. An administrative assistant, Carole Hockmeyer, was in critical condition at New London Hospital.

Albro was in critical condition at Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center in Lebanon with a gunshot wound to the head.

Gov. Steve Merrill, who toured the scene, said Albro had a history of troubled behavior.

"I don't know to what extent he knew the victims, but in a small community, chances are very, very strong that he knew them," Merrill said.

Newbury, a resort community with about 1,350 residents, is located on Lake Sunapee about 30 miles northwest of Concord.

"It's normally very quiet here," said town librarian George Beal, who was startled by the crime scene as he arrived to open the library next door. "It's a small town. We haven't had anything like this before."

Albro is the son of Egbert Albro, one of Newbury's three selectmen, Howard said. Selectmen work only part-time, and the elder Albro was not in the building at the time.

The younger Albro had sued the town over 16 parcels of land he bought at a tax sale in 1985. Pre-trial motions in the case were to be heard Monday.

Scholarship offers experience in research

TARA EUBANKS
Collegian

The center for Basic Cancer Research is now accepting applications for $500 scholarships awarded to the students with the most creative and sophisticated cancer research projects.

This series of scholarships has been given at K-State for more than a decade. All of the money received is from private donors across the United States.

During the past 10 years, K-State has received more than $82,000 in private gifts for the cancer research awards.

This is basically a call to students involved in health-related degrees to find a faculty sponsor for their project, Terry Johnson, director of the Kansas State University Cancer Center, said.

Faculty advisers will help the students create and discuss possibilities for the student's proposal. The students must have an adviser to be eligible for the award.

APPLICATIONS

■ The deadline for applications is Dec. 3. They can be picked up at Ackert Hall in the Department of Biology.

"Basically, what the faculty member provides is ideas and guidance to the student," Johnson said.

The $500 will go directly to the student as a salary. All supplies and extra costs are taken care of by the sponsor of the student.

The projects concerning cancer research take place in 20 different kinds of labs on campus. Each laboratory has a specific area of cancer studies.

"Since there are over 100 kinds of cancer, we get a good variety of projects. Many are on the cutting edge of cancer biology," Johnson said.

Students will receive no K-State credit for their research, but it will enable the students to possibly get published in a medical journal and play an important role on a scientific research team.

"In many cases, students are able to get their proposals and research published, giving them much prestige," Johnson said.

"This opportunity is a very unique and rewarding one — it's great for the individual who needs a spark of motivation in their chosen field," Johnson said.

CATEGORIES
To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD
Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Conference to focus on rural community caregivers

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

There may be as many as 4 million people with Alzheimer's disease in America today. That means at least that many people care for those who are ill.

For those people, the caregivers, there will be a conference on Alzheimer's and Related Disorders Thursday in the K-State Union.

Registration and check-in will begin at 7:30 a.m., and there will be various sessions on Alzheimer's and related topics throughout the day.

Marilyn Woodward, program coordinator in the division of continuing education, said 160 people are registered.

"The majority are professional caregivers," she said.

Lynn Norris-Baker, director of the KSU Center for Aging, said these caregivers are the target of the conference.

"The intent is to make information available to caregivers in more rural communities," Norris-Baker said.

"We want to reach out to rural areas in the vicinity," Norris-Baker said.

Norris-Baker said Alzheimer's will most likely strike those over the age of 85.

"One in four people over the age of 85 is likely to experience dementia," she said.

Alzheimer's is a form of dementia.

Dementia, as defined in a brochure produced by Center for Aging, is a collection of symptoms having to do with the loss of mental abilities, such as thinking, remembering and reasoning.

Among the subjects to be talked about at the conference are dealing with the changes Alzheimer's will bring, legal issues relating to Alzheimer's, and coping with caring for someone with the disease.

Woodward said students wishing to attend the conference may do so, but the conference is directed toward professionals.

"It's not really geared for students," Woodward said.

"Most students attending will be gerontology students," Woodward said.

Woodward said students wishing to learn more about caring for someone with Alzheimer's may attend the Caregivers Fair on the same day in the K-S-U Ballrooms of the Union.

Admission is free, and 23 caregiver agencies will be represented.

Proposed amendment to give parents educational authority

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — A Wichita-area Christian group is pushing for an amendment to the Kansas Constitution that would guarantee parents primary control of their children's education.

"This is a parental freedom amendment," said Jim McDavitt, a Valley Center insurance agent and executive director of the Kansas Education Watch Network, KEW-Net.

"There's nothing in writing currently that acts as an arbiter between the government and the people saying that the ability to break an impasse lies with the parent," McDavitt said.

"There's a lot of controversial material coming over the top of the spillway. We want to be able to say 'wait a minute.'"

But at least two State Board of Education members said despite the amendment's seemingly innocuous wording, the change would be dangerous and could allow parents to treat children like property.

"Schools and the state do not have children. Parents do."
SEN. TODD TIAHRT
R-GODDARD

KEW-Net wants to add a phrase to a section of the constitution that sets out the Legislature's authority over education.

Any legislative actions would be subject, the change reads, "to the fundamental rights of parents and guardians to exercise the primary control of the education and upbringing of children."

Several legislators predicted the amendment is unlikely to get the two-thirds majority in each house of the Legislature needed to put a suggested constitutional change before voters. But supporters say the amendment is a needed affirmation of family values.

The change would also insert the word public in a couple of places, implying the Legislature's area of responsibility should not include private and home schools.

Sen. Todd Tiahrt, R-Goddard, who supports the amendment, said parents do not want the state looking for problems where none exist.

"We need to get the record straight. Schools and the state do not have children," he said. "Parents do."

New troops set camp in Somalia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — American reinforcements moved into their new home Monday, a featureless sprawl of desert scrub dubbed Victory Base.

They hope to spend a quiet few months just outside Mogadishu. If they're lucky, they'll leave a peaceful Somalia by March 31. If they're not, they'll be called in to back up U.N. troops in trouble.

President Clinton's special envoy to Somalia, Robert Oakley, arrived Monday to try to promote a political settlement to the country's clan warfare. He is expected to leave Thursday to drum up support among East African leaders for an African solution to the crisis.

But while Oakley was looking for political solutions, U.S. reinforcements were thinking military. They packed weapons, ammunition, duffel bags, cookwear, folding chairs and other equipment onto 400 wheeled and treaded vehicles for the 12-mile journey from Mogadishu to Victory Base.

The troops and vehicles made the trip in 11 groups, winding along a route that military engineers completed only days earlier.

"We're going to be sucking a lot of dust," one soldier said of the road, which is only paved about half-way through.

The desert-sand colors of the convoy blended almost perfectly with the landscape, but the noise of the armored vehicles brought people to the roadside. Some waved, and a couple of others flashed peace signs. Others watched sullenly, occasionally shouting.

In a stark contrast, pitted buildings and bits of garbage lined the right, and the deep blue of the Indian Ocean churned into surf on the left. Six U.S. warships — the amphibious home to fighter jets and Marines still waiting offshore — were barely visible on the horizon.

For many of the soldiers, this was their first glimpse of Mogadishu's scarred and chaotic streets.

Their glimpse was just that: The route was chosen so it passes only on the barest edge of the city. Many of the people they saw were picking through mounds of military refuse.

Along the way were new checkpoints, one where the sandbags were still being stacked, with American flags snapping in the strong breeze.

As in most homes, one key for choosing the site was location.

Victory Base is far enough away as to be almost unobtrusive to most city residents at a time when the United Nations is trying to avoid confrontation with the locals. But it's close enough that Abrams tanks and Bradley troop carriers can roar in quickly in an emergency, trampling their way cross-country if roads are blocked.

There was little there other than hardy shrubs and the battered walls of several roofless buildings when the troops arrived. Within hours, tents were up, along with security patrols. Sledgehammers battered new doors in the buildings. Trucks hauled away loads of dry brush.

Mogadishu has been largely quiet following an outbreak of shooting last week. The fighting shattered a 19-month truce between Mohamed Farrah Aidid, who controls the southern half of the city, and his clan rival, Ali Mahdi Mohamed, who rules the north.

The American soldiers had a brief alarm when an explosion sent thick smoke into the sky nearby. Thinking it was a mortar attack, they quickly checked by radio. No, they were told, it was just a weapons-disposal team blowing up an 82mm shell they had found.

Cigarettes go to court

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court agreed today to decide what states can do to stop people from avoiding cigarette taxes by buying cigarettes on Indian reservations.

The court agreed to hear New York officials' argument that federal law lets states regulate and limit wholesale suppliers' sale of untaxed cigarettes to stores on Indian reservations.

New York officials estimate the state loses about $65 million in tax revenue each year because non-Indians buy untaxed cigarettes on Indian reservations.

The state commissioner of taxation and finance adopted rules in 1988 that allow stores on Indian reservations to sell only as many untaxed cigarettes as are needed to supply the reservation population. Any sales above that amount must be taxed, and all non-Indians are supposed to pay the tax.

Those stores' suppliers are required to get a copy of an Indian reservation store's tax-exemption certificate, keep accurate records of sales to such stores, and get approval from the state or the tribe for the amount of untaxed cigarettes that may be supplied to a store.

Cigarette wholesalers Milhelm Attea & Bros. and Elias H. Attea challenged the regulations in state court, contending the regulations were pre-empted by the federal Indian trader law.

Following an initial set of rulings set aside by the Supreme Court, New York's highest court ruled for the wholesalers last June.

The Royal Purple
All-American and Pacemaker Finalist
Associated Collegiate Press

K-State's Royal Purple yearbook received an All-American award with five marks of distinction from the Associated Collegiate Press.
Winning the honor for the Royal Purple was its 1992-93 staff, led by editor Kim Hafner, a native of Topeka.
ACP judges yearbooks from across the nation, but less than 30 of those receive the title, All-American, and less than ten of those earn five marks of distinction. Publications are judged in five categories — concept/essentials, coverage, design, writing/editing and photography.
Marks of distinction are given for exemplary work in the area judged, represented by strong theme or other unifying element, personality and attention to details. In each of the five categories, the Royal Purple received a mark of distinction and a rating between "very good" and "superior."
The All-American honor puts the Royal Purple in the running for the Pacemaker award. Only seven to 10 schools receive the Pacemaker each year. The Royal Purple has been a Pacemaker recipient 10 times since 1980.
Among the other schools with All-American yearbooks are the University of Illinois, the University of Northern Alabama, the University of Southwest Louisiana, Midland Lutheran College, the University of Georgia, Northeast Louisiana University, Northwest Missouri State University, Culver-Stockton College and Southern Methodist University.

The U.S. Secretary of Agriculture will present a Landon Lecture in December.

Mike Espy's speech will be at 10:30 a.m. on Dec. 9 in McCain Auditorium, Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture Series, said.

Espy represented the Second District of Mississippi in the U.S. House of Representatives from 1986 until he accepted the position in Clinton's cabinet.

LANDON LECTURE

■ Mike Espy, secretary of agriculture, will give a Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. Dec. 9 in McCain Auditorium.

During his service in Washington, he served on the agriculture and budget committees. He was also chairman of the Domestic Hunger Task Force of the Select Committee on Hunger, the Lower Mississippi Delta Caucus and the Natural Resources, Community and Economic Development Task Force of the House Budget Committee. Espy also served as majority whip at large.

"We try to get two members of the cabinet every year, and it is only fitting that we got the Secretary of Agriculture because agriculture is so important to Kansas," Reagan said.

The Department of Agriculture administers programs in an effort to keep a safe, abundant and reasonably priced food and fiber supply. The agency's mission also includes domestic food assistance, education and research agricultural marketing, meat and poultry inspection, forestry and rural development.

The Landon Lecture Series is a memorial to Alf Landon, former Kansas governor and Republican candidate for president in 1936.

Fred Kerr, former Majority Leader of the Kansas Senate, announces his candidacy for governor of Kansas at the Manhattan Municipal Airport Tuesday afternoon. During his announcement, Kerr talked about his "Straight Talk for Kansas" plan. The plan covers three areas: governement efficiency, quality jobs and the quality of life.

Pratt man joins race

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

Former Kansas Senator Fred Kerr of Pratt announced his candidacy for governor Tuesday afternoon at the Manhattan Airport.

"As governor, I can immediately change the 'business as usual' attitude in state government," Kerr said.

His 16 years of experience in government and his background in farming uniquely qualify him for the job, Kerr said. He served as the Senate Majority Leader from 1989 to 1992.

"I can work with the Legislature to get results."
FRED KERR
FORMER KANSAS SENATOR

"I have shaped laws as a legislator and then lived with them, running the business of our family farm. I have served in the Legislature and been elected a leader of the Kansas Senate. I can work with the Legislature to get results," Kerr said.

A group of supporters applauded Kerr's announcement inside the crowded waiting room.

"I'm behind Fred all the way. I told him a year ago that I'd support him if he ran. He was an excellent leader in the Senate, and he knows Kansas," Dixie Roberts, Manhattan resident, said.

Kerr said he will deliver his specific plan for reshaping Kansas' government over the next nine months. His plan is titled "Straight Talk for Kansas." He said the plan encompasses three broad areas.

"The first is making state government work more efficiently. The second is in creating quality jobs through business-friendly policies, tax stabilization and superior educational preparation. And the third is in restoring and improving the quality of life for all citizens," he said.

Merrill Werts, former state senator representing Riley and Geary counties, showed his support for Kerr.

"He earned his spurs in the Kansas Senate. He learned how government functions. He learned it the hard way. He served on committees. Finally he became chairman of probably one of the most powerful committees: the Committee on Assessment and Taxation.

Kerr did well enough to be elected Senate majority leader, Werts said.

"The majority leader has to make the system work. Fred learned how the system works, and he made it work," Werts said. "I can't think of anyone in Kansas today who is better qualified and can do a better job."

Kerr is a fiscal conservative and said he opposes taxes on professional services. He said he wants to create tax stability, which would attract businesses to Kansas. He wants to eliminate unfair tax provisions.

He said his government efficiency package will reduce obstacles to business and increase private job opportunities.

"I do support adoption of the North American Free Trade Agreement, and I will work to develop more exports of Kansas products to Mexico and Canada," Kerr said.

Kerr cited two examples of his ability to initiate creation of Kansas' jobs. They are the Value Added

KC expert predicts problems in NAFTA

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

The North American Free Trade Agreement is a bad deal for the environment, said a Kansas City expert on the environment and how it is affected by industry, in a speech Tuesday.

Craig Volland, president of Spectrum Technologists Inc. and co-coordinator of the Greater Kansas City Greens, a ecological group that deals with connections between ecological and social issues, spoke to an audience of about 70 students and faculty Tuesday in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

Volland, speaking at the invitation of Students Acting to Save a Vulnerable Environment and the Student Coalition for Peace and Justice, said before NAFTA there had never been a serious discussion of how we conduct our trade negotiations.

"One thing I like about NAFTA is that it has stimulated a lot of debate on national trade," Volland said. "Like apple pie and mother, the idea of free trade has been sacrosanct."

Many economists attributed the Great Depression to restrictions on trade and high tariffs and, in response, the General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs was set up in 1948 for the express purpose of reducing tariffs and stimulating international trade, he said.

Problems arose when GATT began dealing with non-tariff issues such as environmental standards and immigration, Volland said.

As an example, he said the dispute resolution panels of GATT threatened to overturn the United States' prohibition of tuna caught by fishing companies who practice the widespread slaughter of dolphins. This was because GATT said countries could not use trade measures to protect wildlife or the environment.

"Basically, what NAFTA is all about is not about loss of jobs, although that's important. Primarily, the issue of NAFTA is a question of democracy and balancing economic growth with a downside," Volland said. "There will be some serious trade-offs between economic growth and the environment."

Volland described Mexico as one of the world's biggest environmental messes. Mexico's environmental laws are not as strong as the United States, and some are entirely unenforced, he said.

President Clinton's environmental side-agreement does not address enough of these problems, Volland said.

"The side-agreement dealt with enforcement of Mexico's existing laws," he said. "There are no legal sanctions if they want to eliminate some of those laws.

Novelist employs Chicano heritage

Anaya breaks new boundaries with his style

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

For Rudolfo Anaya, the discovery of his cultural identity has been the backbone of his writing.

Anaya, a New Mexican fiction writer, presented an informal discussion about writing and culture to about 35 people Tuesday afternoon in Union 206.

Anaya makes his home in Albuquerque, where he writes full time and is professor emeritus at the University of New Mexico.

His novels include, "Bless Me, Ultima," "Heart of Azlan," "Tortuga" and "Albuquerque," which was published last year.

Anaya said he grew up in a non-English speaking, Mexican American family in the small community of Pastura and turned this experience into literature.

"People term this as finding my voice," he said.

Throughout his college years, he said he had never read a novel by a Mexican American writer and was never exposed to his culture. The works he did read were mostly by American writers, such as Ernest Hemingway.

"I couldn't use those writers to imitate," he said.

Anaya said in the mid-1960s, the Chicano community in large cities such as Albuquerque began to lose touch with its culture. However, he was able to stay in touch because of his upbringing in a small community.

Later, Anaya and others were a part of the Chicano Movement, in which an increase in Chicano writers occurred.

"We took up the identity and began to flood the public with our work," he said.

Later, as a high-school teacher, Anaya was able to write his first book, "Bless Me, Ultima."

Anaya said the novel was a rite of passage, and chose to create a book different from any book of this kind.

He did not want it to be like a "Huck Finn" novel, he said.

Anaya said when developing his title character, Antonio, he wanted him to have "some kind of awareness and growth."

"He was going to be different," Anaya said.

He said his cultural background became the key ingredient in making this novel different, and he began exploring the world view of beliefs and values.

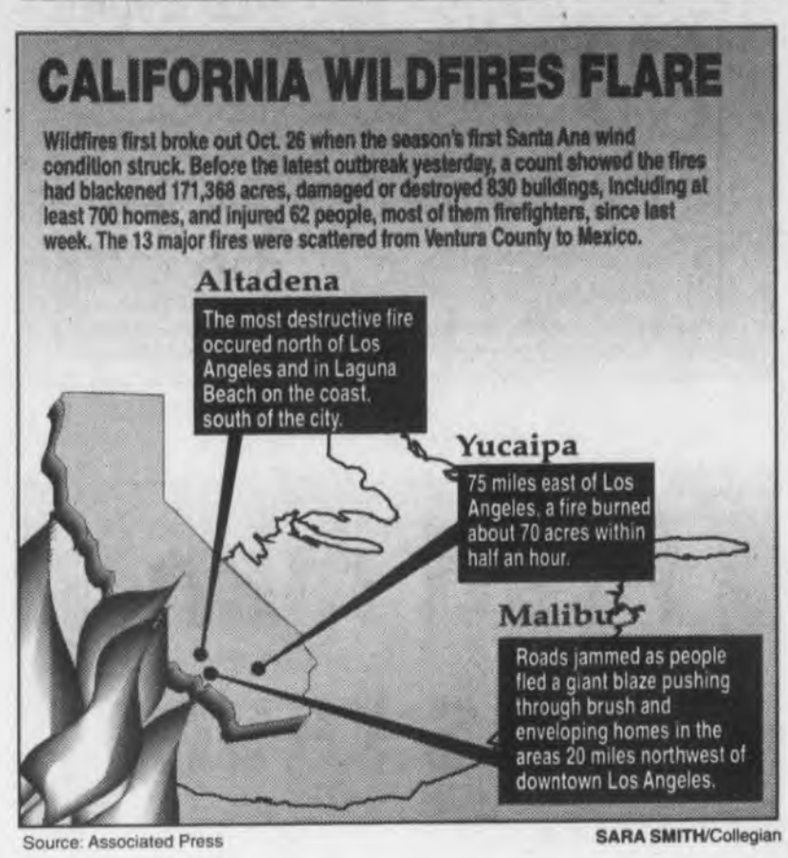
"Albuquerque" is Anaya's most recent novel. The book is about a Golden Glove boxer who discovers he is adopted. His adoptive mother dies of cancer before he is able to find out the identity of his real mother. This leads to a search for her and the people he encounters along the way.

He said when he writes, his perspective on who he writes for differs at every point in writing.

"I think what every writer wants to say is that 'I write for the world,'" he said.

Anaya said he feels writers want to teach everyone and move across the boundaries.

He said he was hesitant to publish "Bless Me, Ultima" because the book was personal and intimate to him. He said he believes this the basis for writing.



"That's the purpose of literature — to do that revelation."

Congress allocates funds for rail repair

ELWOOD (AP) — A $1 million federal grant has been approved for the Northwest Kansas and Missouri Railroad to rebuild its flood-damaged track between Elwood and Wathena.

Bob Thompson, general manager for the short-line railroad, said he hopes to have construction under way this month, with rail service between St. Joseph, Mo., and Marysville, restored by January or February.

"Things are looking much brighter," Thompson said. "The funds have been allocated by Congress, although the Kansas Department of Transportation does not have the money yet. We can begin to see the light at the end of the tunnel."

The rail line was destroyed by the flooding Missouri River as water flowed through Elwood.

Several sections of the rail were left suspended over small lakes. Tracks also were dragged out of alignment, and large tree trunks now fill the right of way.

After the floodwaters receded, the railroad was unable to reach St. Joseph, but was still providing rail service between Marysville and Wathena. Another flood in September damaged the Peters Creek bridge.

Disabled U.S. veterans receive pension bonus

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House approved a 2.6-percent cost-of-living raise Tuesday for the 2.2 million veterans receiving compensation for disabilities resulting from military service.

The bill, supported President Clinton, now must go back to the Senate, which had passed a version without some amendments attached by the House.

The bill provides a cost-of-living adjustment, or COLA, based on the estimated rate of inflation. The new payment rates would go into effect Dec. 1.

It also raises compensation rates for widows and children of veterans who died of service-connected causes by 2.6 percent.

The Department of Veterans Affairs is expected to pay $10.4 billion in compensation in fiscal year 1994 to veterans who contracted a disease or suffered an injury in the line of duty during active-duty service.

The bill also states that spouses of deceased veterans who lost their benefits when they remarried can resume receiving benefits and are eligible for burial at a national cemetery if their subsequent marriage ends.

Packwood's diary still sought by Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bob Packwood struggled to sell senators a compromise today and avert a showdown on a subpoena for his diary in a controversy expanded to include possible official misconduct as well as sexual harassment.

As senators sat grim-faced through a second morning of debate, Packwood disclosed the ethics committee had found diary entries suggesting he solicited lobbyists to hire his wife.

"The issue was employment opportunities for my wife and whether there was some quid pro quo in legislation or anything like that," Packwood said.

Packwood offered — and the ethics committee chairman urged rejection of — a compromise that would restrict the diary subpoena to a review of sexual misconduct, intimidation and job offers lobbyists made to his wife.

Packwood said he would turn his entire diaries over to a neutral third party , former U.S. Appeals Judge Kenneth Starr.

28 killed in bloody Algerian security raid

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Security forces tracked down and killed 17 Islamic militants in one of the deadliest encounters during nearly two years of civil strife, authorities reported Tuesday.

Eleven more armed militants were killed in five smaller operations during the past two days, officials said.

The major raid took place late Sunday and early Monday in the Djebel Bouzegza area, 40 miles east of Algiers. Authorities said security forces seized hunting rifles and automatic pistols.

It was the highest death toll in a single security force operation since March, when 26 militants were reported killed in a search following an attack on a barracks in which 18 soldiers died.

JCPenney DOING IT RIGHT

Kelley Bennett, freshman in arts and sciences, listens to comments about her part in the play "Empty Pages" Sunday afternoon in the Purple Masque Theatre. Bennett and other participants of Playwright's Stage discussed the play after reading it aloud.

Stage provides feedback

Playwright's Stage takes an unpolished script, and with a staged reading, transforms the script into an experience for the audience.

A staged reading involves actors reading from a script while using no props and minimal blocking.

"These plays aren't ready for full dress. We need some kind of a stage to provide a place for the in-between process," Norman Fedder, professor of theater, said. "On paper, a play can read well, but it may not play well. Just the process of listening can be constructive."

Upon completion of the reading, the audience participates in a discussion, Fedder said.

"We try to provide an atmosphere of constructive criticism," Fedder said. "It is meant to spur creativity. It is not a bitch session."

Charles Bland, graduate student in speech, whose play "Empty Pages" was read Sunday, said hearing his play read and the discussion that followed was beneficial.

"It is good for a playwright to hear their work. The Playwright's Stage provides an opportunity to hear from a dozen or so people in one swoop," he said.

"You are opening up yourself to criticism as well as kudos," he said.

Ryan Ritter, graduate student in English, directed "Empty Pages" and also had his one-act play, "Betrayal," read Oct. 17.

"I came away from the discussion with a very positive feeling," Ritter said. "I also found that I have major revisions left."

Playwright's Stage plays helps playwrights elevate their scripts to the level desired for a full-blown production, Fedder said.

Charlotte MacFarland's "A Gathering of Fools," which will play in Nichols Theatre next week, was read at Playwright's Stage. In addition, "The Beautiful People," by James Edward Norman, which also was rooted in Playwright's Stage, will be produced in the Purple Masque Theatre this week.

Besides benefiting the playwright, Playwright's Stage is an outlet for people to stay involved in theater without an extreme time commitment.

"This gives me a chance to stay involved with theater, combine my love for writing and acting without a heavy time commitment," Ritter said. "There is roughly about six hours of rehearsal time involved in a stage reading."

This also offers a different creative venue for those interested in acting or directing, as many participants have filled many roles.

Sarah Greenwood, graduate student in English, has been involved for three years.

Her one-act play, "Atonement," was read earlier this fall, and she has acted and directed as well.

Greenwood said the experience of acting offers a different creative venue.

"Acting in them is kind of kooky," Greenwood said.

"You get to do a lot of voice variation because you are reading and don't have to worry about remembering your lines or blocking," she said.

Playwright's Stage is sponsored by the Student Association of Graduates in English and Theta Alpha Phi. It takes place at 2 p.m. every Sunday in the Purple Masque Theatre.

Greenwood said Playwright's Stage averages a dozen audience members, but more patrons would certainly spur more discussion.

"We would love to have more audience members," Greenwood said. "We adore them. This is a wonderful alternative Sunday afternoon activity and, hey, it's free."

Center in Manhattan, which assists small businesses by processing agricultural products in Kansas, and the eight-year highway program that created jobs and improved highway safety.

"An educated work force attracts quality jobs. As governor, I will continue to challenge and to support a top-notch educational system," Kerr said.

He said improved education will produce a better work force to compete worldwide while improving the quality of life for all.

Kerr said an increased emphasis on vocational and technical skills at the higher educational level would be one of his goals. He supports the merger of vocational- technical schools with community colleges.

In the public schools, Kerr said he wants to increase math and communication skills.

"I support admission standards for entrance to our universities, a concept which I believe will improve high school performances and will more accurately allow students to launch a successful college experience," Kerr said.

He said he supports the Kansas Board of Regents policy that favors certain requirements for English, math and science standards for university admission. He said students wishing to return to school at age 21 should be admitted. Kerr said he is concerned about the trend of state-assisted education while students shoulder more of the costs.

"To substantially increase state support of education would mean more taxes, and that's counter-productive to creating the jobs we want. So, it's a Catch 22," Kerr said.

On issues dealing with the quality of life in Kansas, Kerr said he wants tougher violent-crime laws, more support for senior citizens to live as independently as possible and a health-care plan focused on prevention.

"Our demands on government must be reduced, and we all must increase our efforts to address society's problems in our own communities," Kerr said.

Commission hears golf course plans

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

Discussion of a proposed nine-hole golf course continued at the Manhattan City Commission meeting Tuesday night.

Joe Knopp, attorney for KanGolf, said the remaining issues restricting the finalization of the project dealt with water rates, road improvements and signage.

Mayor Roger Maughmer said he was concerned that KanGolf had not been communicating with the city staff about problems connected to the proposal.

"We're all trying to make it work somehow, just within our comfort zone," Commissioner Helen Cooper said.

In other business, the commission passed a resolution 5-0 regarding the regulation of cable television rates following guidelines outlined in the Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992.

"This is just paving the way if we need to regulate rates in the future," Kerry Bowse, assistant to the city manager, said.

The city will now be able to determine the fairness of cable rates in Manhattan. They will be able regulate basic cable service rates and related equipment, installation and service charges of any cable television system operating in Manhattan. The city will not be able to regulate expanded basic cable or premium channels because this type of regulation is handled through the Federal Communications Commission.

Another resolution passed 5-0 by the commission regarded improvements on Browning Avenue between Kimball Avenue and Snowbird Drive.

In the Oct. 19 meeting, questions had been raised by residents of Browning Avenue concerning drainage problems and assessment.

Maughmer said he was reluctant to pass the resolution because of its above-average cost for street repair.

Uncle Sam throwing curve over helmets

Once again the government has decided to tell people how to live their lives.

A law is being pushed through the Kansas Legislature that would require all motorcyclists to wear helmets. This law is the result of Kansas losing $1.9 million from the State Highway Fund last year. Kansas may lose another $3.1 million next year if a helmet law is not passed.

Current Kansas law requires all motorcycle riders under the age of 18 to wear helmets.

The argument to increase the scope of the law is motorcyclists are likely to be more seriously injured if they are in an accident without a helmet.

This is common sense. Something the federal government has decided the people of this nation do not have.

Now, the Legislature is overstepping its boundaries in believing it has the power to protect people from themselves.

Many may argue taxpayers will be forced to flip the bill for the helmetless victims. Victims whose hospital bill probably wouldn't have been as high if they had been wearing a helmet.

Here is where the government should be allowed to step in and refuse treatment of good old American socialized medicine. This way it will not come out of the taxpayers' pocket but the victims'.

The idea is not cruel. It is only allowing people to think for themselves and accept responsibility for their actions.

One of the scariest parts of getting the law passed is the comment from Pat Poull, representative for the Head Injury Association of Kansas.

"It's not about personal freedom," he said.

If government does not consider personal freedom when creating a law, it is time for the people to consider creating a new government.

Let the people choose whether or not to have the law. And not under pressure from federal government blackmail to do it.

Impairment doesn't dictate life

BROOKE GRABER
GUEST COLUMNIST

Cliff Mores, president of the Colorado Association of the Deaf, summed it up when he said, "It's time for the public to respect us as deaf people, not as handicapped people."

I wholeheartedly agree. I am hearing-impaired. Deaf. Handicapped. Or, to be politically correct, "physically challenged." No matter how you phrase it, without my hearing aids, I cannot hear a thing.

My hearing loss is the only remaining side effect of a premature birth. I never learned to sign, opting instead to read lips.

I worked with a speech pathologist for years and continue to see an audiologist on occasion. My speech pathologist helped me to learn to speak correctly. Her services were successful, for the most part. Occasionally, people ask me where I'm from, trying to place the "accent." That's no accent. That's a speech impediment, or lisp.

I do not consider myself to be a member of the deaf community. I am a member of the diverse community we call a "population." A population is composed of many individuals, all with their own unique physical characteristics.

Cochlear Corporation, a company located in Englewood, Colo., has started manufacturing cochlear implants to restore hearing in deaf people. The implants are electrical devices that are surgically placed in the ear and produce sound by converting sound waves into electrical impulses, transmitting them to the inner ear.

Many deaf people are opposed to the implants because they are permanent and no studies have been conducted to see what long-term effects the implants have on a hearing-impaired patient.

I would not have the surgery because deaf is my natural state. I feel much more comfortable without my hearing aids.

Dr. Samual Selesnick, an assistant professor of otolaryngology and surgeon at New York Hospital Cornell Medical Center, has defended Cochlear, saying, "...what is the goal (of not using implants)? To lead an insulated life in the deaf community? Deaf people can certainly have full and wholesome lives, but they're still not in the community everyone else is in. It's possible to have very good results so people can leave that community and get into the mainstream: Mainstream classes, mainstream occupations. Mainstream life."

Now I get it. I should spend $25,000-$30,000 to have an electrical sound device surgically implanted in my ears to lead a "mainstream life."

Following this logic, all visually-impaired people should have laser surgery on their eyes to correct their vision. Obviously, these people cannot lead mainstream lives while wearing glasses or contacts.

The only difference between a person wearing glasses and a person wearing hearing aids is the fact wearing glasses is more common.

There seems to be a prevailing stereotype that the only people who wear hearing aids are old people. This stereotype probably will become scarce in the future, however, with more young people losing their hearing because of loud music and concerts. Then people like me will be the "norm." Only the uncool and unhip will have 100-percent hearing.

I am so sorry to disappoint you, Dr. Selesnick — and others who hold this belief — but I already lead a mainstream life. Most hearing-impaired people do.

The opposition to these implants does not lie with the implants themselves. The opposition lies in trying to "fix" each person's physical imperfections so all individuals are the same. Instead, maybe we should open our minds and try to understand the differences that make individuals unique.

Personally, I feel I have an advantage over all hearing people. I can go home, take out my hearing aids and experience a quiet peace unknown to all hearing individuals.

Now, if you'll excuse me, I'm going to take these hearing aids out and be my natural self.

▶ MULTICULTURALISM

Immigrant integration shows need for English being official language

Editor,

To the extent multiculturalism promotes tolerance, it should be welcomed. Hatred is caused by insecurity and depends on ignorance about other people.

However, it is very troubling that some advocates of multiculturalism demand bilingual education and bilingual governmental services. Considering the many different languages spoken by immigrants in the United States, it would be blatantly unfair to single out one — or even a few — for special treatment. Besides, every effort needs to be made to integrate immigrants in our society, and a common language is an important part of the interaction process.

We need to respect diversity, but we must also seek out what brings us together as human beings and as a nation. In addition to valuing differences in cultural backgrounds, we need to emphasize those things that unite us. Kansas should join other states in making English the official language.

▶ BLOOD DRIVE

This fall's success story needs to be carried on

Editor,

Congratulations K-State! We have crushed the Hawks! I am pleased to announce that K-State beat KU during the fall blood drives. K-State collected 914 units, while KU collected 842 units of blood. Although we may have surpassed KU, it was a close competition. We will need each and every one of you to help us beat the Hawks next spring. The spring blood drive will be Feb. 22-23, and we will need your blood.

There will always be a demand for blood. To meet the daily needs of patients in nearly 120 hospitals in the two-state Central Plains Region of American Red Cross Blood Services, an average of 1,800 units of blood must be collected each week, holidays included. Thus, we will need your help during next spring's blood drive.

Only about five to six of every 100 people in the U.S. are current blood donors. However, according to the Red Cross, as many as 57 out of every 100 people are eligible to give blood. The Red Cross needs donors with all blood types. However, people with the blood type "O" are especially important because these types make up nearly 50 percent of the hospital usage in this two-state region. Volunteer donors may safely give blood every eight weeks through the Red Cross, or a maximum of six times each year. Please be one of the individuals who gives blood.

Thanks for your support!

If you can't say it, you can't deal with it

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

Boy oh boy, I'll tell you, to be sexually active in this decade sucks. Intimacy has been reduced to so few options. Not like the swinging singles scene of the '70s.

Abstinence. Abstinence. Abstinence. That is all I ever hear about. Save yourself for marriage, some say. Save yourself for Mr. Right, others tell us. Save yourself for Saturday night, another lesser-known, diseased quarter yells.

It is such a sweet concept. Abstinence, don't you think? The idea of waiting until you find exactly the right person out there to settle down with and marry. Unsullied. Clean. Giving yourself wholly to that person, body and soul, without "a past." It just hearkens back to simpler times when Walter Cronkite was on the black-and-white and an Edsel was parked in the garage.

I am not making fun of that. I mean, really, if you want to wait to play "housewife and meter reader" until you are married, by all means go for it. Celibacy is a good thing, requiring a great deal of self-restraint.

Of course, there are those of us who believe that self-restraint is best practiced when tied to the bedpost with silk scarves. (Yes, scarves! Ropes burn, and handcuffs chafe.) The educational system in this country can daydream all it wants to, but there are far many more of us that fall in this paragraph than there are in the former. For us, there are cries of "Safe Sex, Safe Sex, Safe Sex!" that ring like an alarm bell everywhere.

It seems those are the only safe choices anymore. Casual sex is dead. It is over, and if it isn't, then it should be, considering that one in 250 college students has been infected with the AIDS virus, and 85 percent don't know it. That's it. The whole picture.

Supposedly.

It's a hard problem to deal with, but in truth, there is one other option that most people don't really like to think about. Masturbation. Don't make that face!

Every time someone says that word, it seems everyone within earshot screws up their face and rolls their eyes like they just watched Irving Bellengelder eat paste. Yes, I said masturbation. We all know more than 80 percent of people masturbate and the other 20 percent lie. If all people do it, the least we could all do is talk about it. Right?

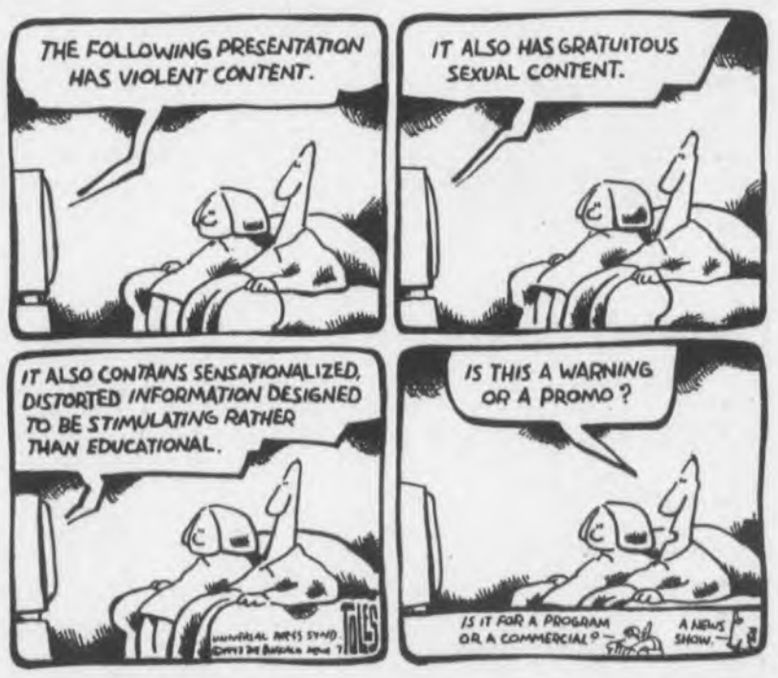
It is going to be the new trend. I can see it now. Pretty soon all the talk shows will pick up on it. Phil Donahue will bring people in to demonstrate the latest techniques. Oprah will have an encounter group for repressed people who still insist they don't do it. Jenny Jones will discuss the latest operations performed that are supposed to make it better.

Self-love will be all the rage. People won't leave their homes. Traffic jams will be so much more interesting. Chemical hair remover will be made for the palms. Optometrists will clean up in the eyeglass industry. Insanity will be rampant. Pat Robertson will become president.

Women wouldn't have to worry about their weight anymore. Richard Simmons would kill himself. Men wouldn't have to worry about saying the right thing and doing the right thing and buying roses afterward.

But why make a big deal out of talking about it? It is as much a part of us as sex is, as relationships are. We need to talk about it all. If you are going to make a big deal about masturbation, if you are going to get embarrassed about it, then make a big deal about the lack of AIDS education in the schools today. Make a big deal about teen-age pregnancy being at an all-time high. Make a big deal about the appalling lack of discussion between parents and kids, and people and their mates.

Scream as loud and as long as you want to, but don't be afraid to talk about it. If we can get some kind of discussion going about the whole shebang, we can change the way people think about things. Maybe we can make everyone think about their sexuality in a different way.



If we can talk about it, the funny, the dangerous, the gross, the very, very serious, then we can save lives.

I think we will all rise to the problem at hand. Don't you?

Haiti ignores attempts for talks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Hoping to salvage its plans for restoring democracy, the United Nations wants to sponsor new talks on Wednesday, but Haiti's power broker — the army — so far has ignored the call.

The military reneged on a deal that would have allowed exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide to return to power last Saturday. Army-backed rightists have since declared the U.N.-brokered accord dead and want new elections to replace Aristide.

The United Nations insists the accord is applicable. It plans to convene new talks in Port-au-Prince with an Aristide representative, army commander Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras and the presidents of Haiti's two houses of parliament, beginning Wednesday.

A U.N. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Monday the military was the only party not to accept the U.N. invitation.

U.S. Embassy representative Stanley Schrager also said the military had not responded, but the meeting was being prepared anyway.

Monday was the first day of a two-day holiday commemorating Haiti's dead, and senior military officials were not available for comment.

Haitian rightists, who are few in number but have powerful allies in the military, have demanded that new talks begin without the major players in the last round: Aristide, Cedras and U.N. mediator Dante Caputo.

But Schrager dismissed that demand.

"This country already has a government," Schrager said. "It has a democratically elected president and a constitutional government recognized by the international community."

Union forum discusses U.S. world roles

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

The United States should not be the world's police. This was the consensus reached by four panelists who discussed the ethics of U.S. intervention into foreign conflict at noon Tuesday in the K-State Union Courtyard.

"The lives of our military personnel are simply too valuable for that," said Dale Herspring, head of the political science department and panel participant.

The other panel participants were Talat Rahman, professor of physics; Becky Opsata, graduate student in speech, and K.J. Wall, senior in speech.

The discussion was in preparation for Ved Nanda's upcoming Lou Douglas Lecture. Nanda will speak at 7:30 p.m. Monday, Nov. 8, in Union Forum Hall. The other panel members said they agreed with Herspring, but for different reasons.

Rahman said the United States had too many pressing internal problems to be a peacemaker for everyone else.

Opsata and Wall both said the United Nations, with the United States acting as an equal partner, was the appropriate institution to mediate most conflicts.

When the United States does consider becoming involved in a specific conflict the most important question is whether it is in the national interest, Rahman said.

"That is the key question," Herspring said. "Defining what exactly are U.S. national interests is difficult. I don't think you can do it. It is too complicated."

Promoting democracy, protecting human rights and improving the standard of living for people in poor countries should be the primary interests of the United States, Rahman said.

Clear goals need to be specifically defined when the United States sends troops into a country, Wall said.

"A clear mandate is needed to prevent a chaotic situation from developing," Wall said.

Wall used Somalia as an example to support his statement.

The operation in Somalia started out as a humanitarian mission and changed to a military operation, and the U.N. has not specifically stated its goals, he said.

Other panel members drew a distinction between military operations and humanitarian operations.

When faced with situations such as the one in Bosnia, the United States has a moral obligation to intervene on a humanitarian level, Opsata said.

"We have to do something about this," Opsata said. "We are letting people die over there."

The question of intervention has no easy answers, Herspring said.

"Peacekeeping is easy — peacemaking is hell," he said.

CY YOUNG WINNER ANNOUNCED

Chicago White Sox pitcher Jack McDowell won his first Cy Young Award on Tuesday. McDowell is the winningest pitcher of the 1990s at 73-39. He is third among active pitchers in winning percentage at .623, trailing Roger Clemens of Boston and Dwight Gooden of the New York Mets, both .655. He is the third White Sox pitcher to win the award.

Cats look to end 2-year dry spell

JEREMY CRABTREE

The K-State volleyball team has lost 24 straight Big Eight Conference matches going into tonight's match with Iowa State.

The Wildcats' last Big Eight win was at Missouri on Oct. 24, 1991. The Cats have also lost nine straight this season, and their record is now 7-18.

"To get back on the winning side it's going to take a lot more desire," Coach Patti Hagemeyer said. "It's also going to take a lot of hard work to put us in control."

Tonight's match against the Cyclones marks the first time the Cats have met Iowa State this season.

"I'm pretty concerned," Hagemeyer said. "They just lost to Kansas, but they beat Drake, and we lost against them."

This season the Cyclones' record is 6-15 and 2-5 in the Big Eight. Iowa State also owns the overall series, 14-28, and is working on a eight-match winning streak over K-State.

Stephanie McCannon is leading the Cyclones in kills this season with 238 kills. Kristin Hugdahl and Dana Mucha are next on the Iowa State kill chart. Hugdahl is second on the team with 202 kills, and Mucha is third with 178 kills.

Last weekend the Cats lost all three matches in the Shocker Classic, to which Wichita State played host

"Against Wichita State we had a poor performance," Hagemeyer said. "Then the other two matches we did pretty good, because both the matches went to five games. We showed some character."

Despite losing the three matches last weekend, middle blocker Kate DeClerk was selected to the all-tournament team. She had 33 kills, eight block assists and two blocked shots during the tournament.

"Her ability to maintain a high level of play has gotten better," Hagemeyer said. "She's just now starting to realize her stamina. She'll learn as she trains that she can be a big factor."

Hagemeyer said the Cats are still missing the toughness they need.

"Each player is going to have to develop that toughness individually," Hagemeyer said. "At match time, the players are going to have to concentrate on getting tougher as a team."

Even with the recent setbacks, Hagemeyer said tonight's match against the Cyclones isn't a must-win.

"I'm still waiting to experience a win," Hagemeyer said. "I still wouldn't call this a must-win match. I would expect a win, though."

The Cats will travel to Baton Rouge, La., this weekend to play in the Big Eight-Southeast Conference Challenge.

K-State will play Louisiana State at 7:30 p.m. Friday, Nov. 5. The Cats are scheduled for a 6:30 p.m. match on Saturday, Nov. 6, with Mississippi.

"It will provide the opportunity to play other ranked teams," Hagemeyer said. "I'm very looking forward to it."

KSU VS. IOWA STATE

Coming off a nine-game losing streak, the Wildcats will play the Iowa State Cyclones at 7:30 p.m. at Ahearn Field House. The Cats are 7-18 overall and 0-7 in conference play. The Cyclones have an overall record of 6-15 and are 2-5 in the Big Eight.

Transfers to fill holes left by class of '93

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

Coach Dana Altman has two holes to fill in the K-State basketball team this upcoming season.

He needs a rebounder to replace Aaron Collier and a defensive stopper and shooter to replace Vincent Jackson.

Enter Stanley Hamilton, Belvis Noland and Demond Davis, all community-college transfers. All could make their presence felt immediately.

"We really feel all three of those guys can step right in and help us," Altman said.

Hamilton, a 6-foot-6, 230-pound forward, is the top candidate to replace Collier and give the Wildcats a boost on the boards.

"I consider rebounding one of my strengths," Hamilton said. "I lifted weights all summer and worked on my inside moves to beat bigger players."

Hamilton comes to K-State from Dodge City Community College, where he averaged 18.3 points and 9.6 rebounds per game.

One reason Hamilton said he decided to attend K-State was Altman's emphasis on defense and rebounding, which fits his strengths.

"Stanley gives us a solid inside player with the ability to play away from the basket as well," Altman said.

Altman said Noland and Davis are both capable of stepping in and replacing Jackson as the Wildcats' defensive stopper.

"I hope to bring the same kind of things Vincent brought to this team," Davis said. "Vincent and I are the same kind of player."

While at Manatee Community College, Davis was a complete player, averaging 19 points, 8 rebounds, 5 assists and 2 steals per contest.

He led Manatee to a 23-7 record and a No. 6 ranking in the National Junior College Athletic Association polls.

"We feel very fortunate to sign a talented wing player like Demond," Altman said. "We're always looking for players who come from a winning program."

A year after the arrival of Anthony Beane from Three Rivers Community College comes former teammate Belvis Noland.

Last season Noland led Three Rivers in scoring with 20.5 points per game en route to a 32-2 record.

"I came to play defense," Noland said.

"I have to take my game to another level to stop some of the great players in the Big Eight."

Noland averaged 13 points per game during his freshman year, when Three Rivers captured the NJCAA national title.

Altman said Noland is a solid defensive player as well. Noland averaged 3.3 steals per game at Three Rivers.

"He can shoot the three and score inside, so he's the complete package," Three Rivers Coach Gene Bess said.

All three said defense is a high priority if they expect to earn playing time.

"I love to play to defense," Hamilton said. "I love to see a great player frustrated."

Montana doubtful again

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Chiefs hope to know within the next day or two whether hobbled quarterback Joe Montana will be ready for Monday night's game with Green Bay.

But the signs aren't good.

"He certainly is not probable," Coach Marty Schottenheimer said. "I think there's a definite possibility he will not be available."

The hamstring that Montana re-injured Sunday in a 30-10 loss at Miami put him on crutches for the first time and could signal a lengthy rehabilitation.

"As soon as I get a better feel for Joe's condition, we'll make an announcement," Schottenheimer said Tuesday. "If we know tomorrow that Joe is not going to be able to play, we'll make that statement and move on about our business. As soon as I know Joe's availability or absence of that, I intend to let everybody know."

Schottenheimer said not keeping everybody in suspense would help the team, especially backup quarterback Dave Krieg.

Seven games into the season, Krieg and Montana have each played 14 of 28 quarters.

"If we know for sure, I am inclined to think yes, it would be best for David to know," Schottenheimer said.

"What we do not want to have is for this thing to become a chronic problem.

"My feeling has always been, make your judgments based on how a player feels physically. Is this player better at 80 percent than the other player at 100 percent?

"It would behoove us to make sure before we put him back there that the risk has diminished of aggravating it once again.

"If we err, we will err on the conservative side."

It has been suggested the Chiefs might sideline Montana for three or four weeks or longer to make sure the hamstring is healed in time for the playoffs.

At 5-2, the Chiefs seem in good shape for their fourth-straight postseason appearance.

"I wouldn't think we would sit him down for that long," Schottenheimer said.

"I think Joe understands it's a long season, and we've got a good quarterback with Dave Krieg, and we can win with Dave Krieg. What we're going to try to do is avoid it being a problem the rest of the way."

Tragedy in Wisconsin should be lesson for K-State students

For almost a year I have worked on these weekly outpourings of opinion for this newspaper, and in doing so, I have covered one topic more than any other — the behavior of K-State fans.

Here we go again. But this time is different.

This time there is a very gory visual to use as an example.

By now, most people have witnessed the sights of the tragedy Saturday at the University of Wisconsin via the wonders of videotape. Eighty people were hospitalized, several of whom remain in the hospital in critical condition. All because the students felt the need to rush the field after the Badgers defeated Michigan.

Railings built to keep the students in the stands were pulled out of their concrete moorings. A fence around the concrete track surrounding the field also fell useless to the mob.

One student interviewed said she was lucky as bodies piled on her legs and not from her waist up. She was still able to breathe, and noticed one person next to her turning purple because of lack of oxygen.

Players helped pull people from the melee. One player had a girl almost die in his arms.

Compare that to the sight of the goalposts coming down at KSU Stadium Saturday. The posts came down so quickly, I can't see how someone didn't get hurt as the posts went hurtling toward the rug filled with humanity.

TROY COVERDALE

What's keeping an incident like the one at Wisconsin from happening at K-State?

Right now, nothing.

For some odd reason, most of the K-State students feel they have the right to rip down the goalposts, steal the down marker and chains from the field, heaters from the opponents, advertising signs from the south end zone and so on.

The most common line said to me when I bring up the fact this is wrong is, "Hey, we bought the tickets. We paid to be here. We have every right to do what we want."

Security at the games is the most lax I have ever seen at a sporting event. They can't enforce the law that won't allow alcohol into the stadium. They can't even figure out the student section is just that, and allow every father of a fraternity member into the section.

The athletic department has the right to prosecute, but, instead, chooses to subscribe to the "let students have their fun" philosophy.

In the meantime, oranges fly out of stands at opposing cheerleaders, photographers from newspapers, and even the very team students are supposedly supporting.

Then this newspaper gets letters to the editor stating the cheerleaders, Willie and the marching band aren't doing their jobs.

Maybe it's because they're all tired of putting up with the immaturity that persists in the student section.

Maybe our cheerleaders are tired of getting pelted with oranges. Maybe Willie is tired of having drunken students try to look inside his mask. I know full well the band is tired of having drunken students trying to steal parts of instruments and yelling and screaming for cheer number four when there is no such cheer.

I also know the coaching staff and players are fed up with your actions. Chad May said Saturday that the goalposts coming down is an insult — as if K-Staters didn't expect the team to win. He went on to add he's none too happy with almost getting penalized because of orange-throwing idiots.

Everyone has an idea of what could be done to keep fans in the stands at the end of the game. One Topeka reporter went as far as to say K-State ought to see about using members of the Big Red One to guard the field.

Police at Ohio State sprayed mace in faces of the 5,000 or so fans who ran on to the field after their win over Penn State.

Those measures may be drastic, but at this moment nothing but pure, dumb luck is keeping a tragedy from occurring at K-State when everyone rushes the field.

So, who needs to do something to correct this before anything happens?

Security? Nope, they don't have the enforcement.

The Department of Intercollegiate Athletics? There is precious little they can do.

The onus comes to you, K-State students.

When the Cats return home to take on Missouri in two weeks, keep yourselves in the stands.

Respect what the team has done. Respect Coach Bill Snyder's wishes. Respect the fans around you, whether they're wearing purple or not. Respect your University's facilities.

But most of all, respect yourself, and in the process, your own life.

Many scenarios for Cats

I are being bombarded over which bowl the Wildcats will attend. So, I took some time out to figure the situation. I think I figured out what could happen to the team.

■ Scenario No. 1: With one more win, K-State goes to the Copper Bowl on Dec. 29 in Tucson, Ariz., and faces the third-place team from the Western Athletic Conference. At this point in time, the opponent is Brigham Young.

■ Scenario No. 2: With two more wins, K-State goes to the Aloha Bowl on Christmas Day in Honolulu and faces the second-place team from the WAC. At this point, the team is San Diego State.

■ Scenario No. 3: With three more wins, K-State enters the coalition. The coalition is made up of six bowls in order to set up a national champion — Orange, Sugar, Cotton, Fiesta, Gator and the John Hancock bowls. Eight teams are allowed into the coalition.

BRIAN ANDERSON

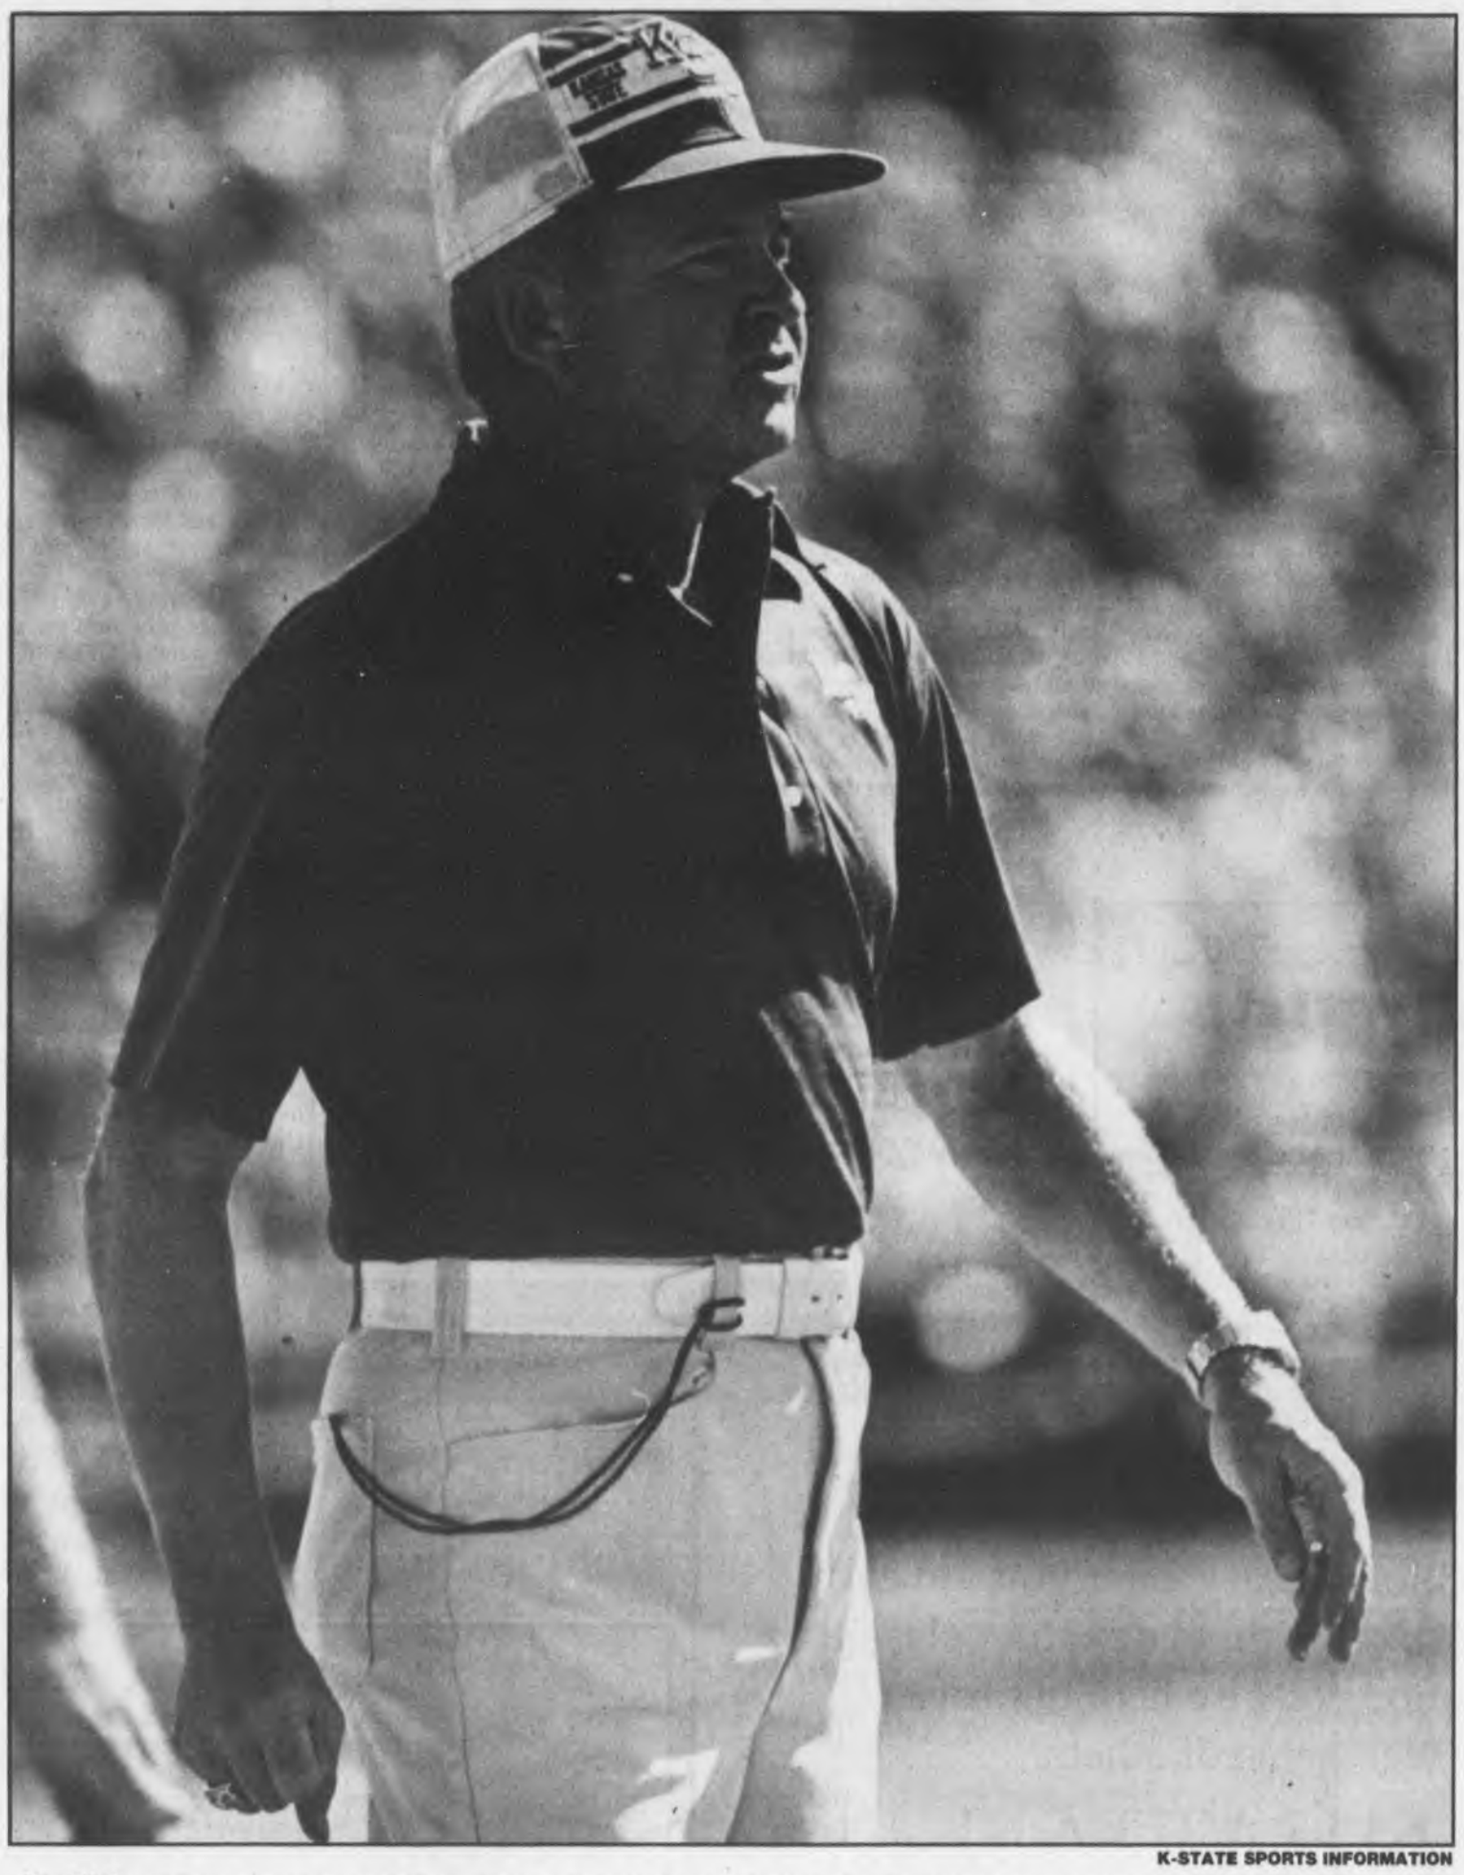
Orange, Sugar, Cotton and Fiesta take the best five teams from the coalition, while the Gator and the John Hancock have the other three teams.

K-State is one of those three teams and, if the team wins three more games, will play in the John Hancock in El Paso, Texas, on Dec. 30 against another coalition team — the Penn St. Nittany Lions would be that team.

■ Scenario No. 4: If K-State wins three more games, and if North Carolina, a coalition team who is ranked higher than the Cats, loses one of its next three games, K-State will play on New Year's Eve in the Gator Bowl against the Southeastern Conference's No. 3 team — the Florida Gators.

■ Scenario No. 5: If K-State wins three more games, and if North Carolina and Arizona lose one of their next three games, the Cats will play on New Year's Day in the Cotton Bowl against the Southwestern Conference's No. 1 team — the Texas A&M Aggies.

■ Scenario No. 6: If K-State wins three more games, and if North Carolina or Arizona lose one of their next three games, and West Virginia loses two games, K-State will play on New Year's Day in the Fiesta Bowl against a coalition team — the Miami Hurricanes.



The only problem with this scenario is that if Miami loses at West Virginia on Nov. 20, then all of these situations change, and K-State's best chance is the Cotton Bowl.

■ Scenario No. 7: If K-State wins three games and Nebraska loses two games, K-State will play on New Year's Day in the Orange Bowl and face a coalition team — the loser of the Florida State vs. Notre Dame game on Nov. 13 or the loser of the Miami vs. West Virginia game.

There you go, and this isn't a complete list. K-State could be in the Sunshine Bowl or the Alamo Bowl if the Cats want to get out of the coalition deal, and if teams for those bowls don't qualify because they don't have enough wins.

Go Cats.

Dickey is happy with direction KSU football program is moving

K-STATE SPORTS INFORMATION

Jim Dickey, K-State coach from 1978-85, is the only football coach to take the Wildcats to a bowl game. He helped K-State go to the Independence Bowl with a 6-5 record in 1982. The Cats lost to Wisconsin, 14-3, in Shreveport, La.

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

Former K-State coach Jim Dickey said having the facilities to bring in the top football players is what it takes to build a team.

"I'm glad to see that someone is smart enough to know that you have to put some money into the facilities, recruiting and a good staff to build a team that is going to win," Dickey said.

Dickey coached the Wildcats from 1978 to '85 with a record of 22-44-1.

"I'm happy that K-State has the facilities to get the players there."

Dickey was the first coach to take K-State to a bowl game. The Cats went 6-5 in 1982 and accepted an invitation to the Independence Bowl in Shreveport, La., against Wisconsin.

They lost to the Badgers, 14-3.

Dickey said it was great to be at the Independence Bowl.

"It was an absolute thrill to be there," Dickey said. "The guys played tough, but the weather was miserably cold, and that really seemed to affect the team."

Dickey said without a doubt the Cats will go to a bowl game — it is just a matter of which one.

"Without any question, the Cats will go to a bowl game, and they will do very well," Dickey said.

Dickey said K-State's past couple of seasons have impressed him.

"Putting two winning seasons back to back is outstanding," he said. "K-State football is really changing."

Dickey said Coach Bill Snyder runs a good program.

"Coach Snyder runs a clean program," Dickey said. "You have to have a good environment for the players.

"You get what you pay for as far as things that make players want to come here."

It is important for K-State to keep Snyder, he said.

"As long as they keep Coach Snyder and have a good staff, they will continue to win," Dickey said. "He is doing an excellent job.

"I'm very proud of what Coach Snyder and the players have accomplished."

Dickey is now coaching varsity football at Galena Park High School in Houston, Texas. He said he has mixed feelings about college football.

"I enjoyed coaching college football but don't miss recruiting and all the hassle that came with it," he said.

"I really enjoyed the team of '82 and their personalities. It was tough to play guys who were 18 and 19 against teams who had experienced players who were 21 and 22."

Dickey said he still misses K-State and the community after leaving eight years ago.

"I have warm, fond memories of K-State. The people are friendly, and it's a very good University," Dickey said.

BIG EIGHT ROUNDUP

NEBRASKA AT KANSAS

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m., Memorial Stadium, Lawrence
RECORDS: Nebraska (8-0/4-0) and Kansas (4-5/2-2)
ABOUT THE CORNHUSKERS:

Nebraska defeated the Colorado Buffaloes, 21-17, last Saturday in Boulder, Colo. The Cornhuskers sealed the win with 1:21 remaining in the game when Nebraska cornerback John Reeves intercepted a pass by Colorado quarterback Kordell Stewart on the Nebraska 40-yard line.

Linebacker Trev Alberts continues his pursuit of quarterbacks. He has had at least one sack in every game this year, upping his school season record to 14 and his Cornhusker career mark to 28.5. Alberts is one of 15 defensive candidates for the national Football News Defensive Player of the Year.

As a team, the Cornhuskers are at the top of several Big Eight categories. They lead in rushing offense, scoring offense, rushing defense, passing defense, total defense and net punting.

ABOUT THE JAYHAWKS:

Kansas downed Oklahoma State, 13-6, last weekend in Stillwater, Okla. After faking a field goal in the fourth quarter, the Jayhawks earned the game's only touchdown four plays later.

With 294 career points, place kicker Dan Eichloff is eighth all-time in the Big Eight and fourth among kickers. Eichloff is ranked first in the Big Eight in field goals per game (1.44 goals per game) and 14th nationally. Also, he is sixth in scoring in the conference.

OKLAHOMA AT MISSOURI

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m., Faurot Field, Columbia, Mo. Delayed on Prime Sports.
RECORDS: Oklahoma (6-2/2-2) and Missouri (3-4-1/2-2)
ABOUT THE SOONERS:

Oklahoma lost against K-State, 21-7, last Saturday in Manhattan. Sooner quarterback Cale Gundy had 335 yards passing, including a 31-yard touchdown pass to receiver P.J. Mills.

Of the top 10 passers in the league, Gundy is the only senior. Also, he is third in total offense in the conference and 29th in the nation with 230 yards per game.

Linebacker Aubrey Beavers is up for the Butkus Award and the Football News Defensive Player of the Year.

ABOUT THE TIGERS:

Missouri beat Iowa State, 37-34, last Saturday. The victory came off place kicker Kyle Pooler's 40-yard field goal with six seconds left in the game. It was the first time since 1972 Missouri had won a game with a field goal inside the last two minutes of a game.

Wide receiver Kenny Holly moved to fifth in the conference in career receptions with 135 catches after grabbing five vs. Iowa State. Holly ranks first in the conference and 28th nationally in receptions per game with 5.25 catches and fourth in receiving yards per game with 55.88 yards a game.

COLORADO AT OSU

FAST FACTS: 2 p.m., Lewis Field, Stillwater, Okla.
RECORDS: Colorado (4-3-1/2-1-1) and Oklahoma State (3-5/0-4)
ABOUT THE BUFFALOES:

Colorado lost to Nebraska, 21-17, last weekend in Boulder, Colo. The Buffaloes led 21-10 at halftime, but struggled offensively in the second half. The loss for the Buffaloes was only the second defeat since 1988 for Colorado.

Wide receiver Charles Johnson leads the Big Eight in 100-yard receiving games with four, including a league-best 172 yards against Stanford. He also ranks second in receptions per game (5.13 catches) and first in receiving yards per game (96 yards per game).

ABOUT THE COWBOYS:

Oklahoma State lost to Kansas, 13-6, last weekend in Stillwater. The Cowboys held the Jayhawks in check until giving up a touchdown in the fourth quarter.

The Cowboys have used many underclassmen in their line-ups. They have started eight freshmen this year, while sophomore tailback David Thompson rushed for 135 yards against Kansas last Saturday.

CROSS COUNTRY

K-State women harriers place 2nd, men 7th at Championship

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

COLUMBIA, MO. — The K-State women's cross country team received second place, and the men captured seventh place in the Big Eight Cross Country Championships last Saturday.

The women's squad was picked to finish fourth in the coaches' poll with the losses of No. 3 runner Irma Betancourt, who had a back injury, and No. 4 Amy Marx, who was ill.

The Cats didn't win the Big Eight title, but they finished in second place and placed two runners in the top 10.

Coach Terry Drake said he was pleased with the performance of the team.

"We ran as well as we could, but we lost our No. 3 and No. 4 girls in the last two days," Drake said. "With both of them out, we were right in there, and we still beat a nationally ranked team. So I can't be disappointed with that."

Jeanene Rugan, the Cats' No. 2 runner who placed seventh in the championship, said if Betancourt would have been healthy, they might have the title.

"Everyone ran well today," said Rugan, who finished with a time of 18:09.3. "If Irma was there, she would have been somewhere in the pack. That could have pushed us over the top.

"It's not disappointing, but it would have been nice to win."

Nebraska captured the women's team title for the fifth time in nine years. The Cornhuskers won with 57 points, 15 better than K-State's 72 points.

Colorado, with whom K-State shared the 1992 title, placed third with 78 points, but ran without the services of last season's individual champion Brooke Baughman.

Oklahoma's Kay Gooch won the individual crown in 17:33.6, 12 seconds ahead of runner-up Theresa Stelling of Nebraska.

Placing fourth was Oklahoma, followed by Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma State and Iowa State in last place.

The Cats' top finisher was Paulette Staats, who finished in fifth place with a time of 18:00.2 on the 5,000 meter course. Staats said she ran well on the course.

"I'm pretty happy with my performance," said Staats, who was named K-State's Athlete of the Week for her run. "My goal was to finish in the top five, and I did. So I'm pretty happy."

Rugan said her teammates also ran well.

"Lesley Wells and Cari Warden ran well today," she said. "They helped us by staying in the race and doing well."

Warden crossed the line in 16th place in a time of 18:47.8, while Wells came in at 18:59.8 to capture 24th.

Other runners for K-State were Megan McGrath, who finished 20th in a time of 18:57.7, Janet Magner, who ran a 19:49.1 to place 43rd in the race and Samantha McNamara, who placed 48th with a time of 20:00.8.

In the men's race, the Iowa State Cyclones won the Big Eight title by placing four runners in the top 10 and three runners in the top five.

Francis O'Neill, the Cats' No. 1 runner, finished in 13th place in a time of 25:03.7 on the 8,000-meter course after finishing fourth in the Big Eight last season.

"Francis lost his shoe in the last mile, and that affected his finish," Drake said. "I'm sure that Francis is not happy with his performance today."

The Cats' next-highest finisher was Ryan Clive-Smith. Clive-Smith finished in 17th place in a time of 25:24.9 by out-sprinting an Oklahoma State runner at the finish line.

"I didn't get to see the finish," Drake said, "but the runner he beat was the defending Big Eight champion from last season."

Other runners from the men's team were Billy Wuggazer, who placed 44th in a time of 26:33.5, Eric Esau, who ran a 28:18.4 to placed 60th, and Scott Galas, who captured 64th place with time of 30:23.

The temperature at the A.L. Gustin Golf Course was around the freezing mark.

It was also snowing for most of the day, but the footing was good, Big Eight officials said.

Drake said the weather condition affected everybody.

"I didn't really think that the weather played that big of a factor," Drake said.

"Everyone had to run in it, so I hate to blame the weather. I believe that it did slow the times down, though."

Both squads will have a two-week break before the NCAA V Championships scheduled for Nov. 13 in Carbondale, Ill.

The top two teams and the top three individuals not on the qualifying team will advance to the NCAA Cross Country Championship on Monday, Nov. 22, in Bethlehem, Pa.

K-State will face at the district meet will number around 15-17 squads, including all the Big Eight teams.

FOOTBALL

Players aren't looking ahead

Team is ready for Cyclones, would like to win the rest

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

As far as K-State players are concerned, Colorado, Nebraska, Oklahoma or Iowa State — it's all the same.

"The team isn't approaching this game any different than the rest," quarterback Chad May said. "We aren't looking past Iowa State. I want to finish the season 10-1-1.

"To do that, we got to play with emotion in every game. We know that one of these next three teams can knock us off."

K-State, which is 6-1-1 and in second place in the Big Eight Conference, goes against the Cyclones, who are 2-6, this weekend.

K-State faces Missouri (3-4-1) at home and Oklahoma State (3-5) at Stillwater during the next two weeks.

May said every team the Wildcats play until the end of the season wants to knock off K-State.

"We're thinking they don't want K-State to go to a bowl, so they have beat us," he said. "So, we have to be ready to play them."

Wide receiver Kevin Lockett said the team is preparing this week as if Iowa State were as good as Nebraska or Colorado.

"The defense is preparing different because they are an option offense," Lockett said. "We're thinking Iowa State is just another ranked team like Oklahoma.

"We've got a shot at winning the next three games. We have beat them in the past, so we can't take them lightly."

Cornerback Jaime Mendez said he doesn't want to be thinking of bowl games at the moment.

"It is in the back of my mind," Mendez said. "Right now, I'm focused on Iowa State."

Mendez said it is nice to look at the newspapers and see K-State is predicted to win.

"It's nice to look at the Vegas sheets and see K-State on the left side (the favorites to win a game) than on the right side," he said. "We have never had the luxury of being picked to win every game. I think it's going to make us play harder.

"It's nice to come from when the team didn't mean anything to people to today."

K-State went to its only bowl game in 1982 when the Cats played Wisconsin in the Independence Bowl and lost to the Badgers, 14-3, in Shreveport, La.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Dear Cassandra,

I am having a problem with my roommate, and I do not know how to deal with it.

It all started the first week of school when I noticed he had pornographic magazines and movies lying around. I did not think much about it until recently, when I came home from class early and walked in on him masturbating.

I did not know how to respond, so I just walked out. I have not said anything to him about it, but what is a person to say?

I cannot even carry on a conversation with him without it bothering me in the back of my mind. Should I say something like he could at least lock the door or just let it go?

Signed,
Never jerked

Dear Never,

I think you've nailed it yourself.

The answer, that is.

Do you share a dorm room or something similarly claustrophobic with this roommate of yours? If so, there needs to be some sort of system where one roommate knows if it's "safe" to enter the room.

This system isn't for masturbation purposes only. Surely there are times when both of you just need the room alone for a bit.

Anyway, casually mention this idea of a system the next time you guys are hanging out together.

Of course, this brings me to another point. You said you can't carry on a conversation with him without "it" bothering you in the back of your mind.

And with this obvious aversion to "it," I wasn't sure if "it" was to pornography, which I completely understand, or to masturbation. I'll assume for the sake of argument that it was masturbation.

I want to suggest to you that masturbation is OK. I mean, this isn't the dark ages of religious times any more. Your hand isn't going to fall off, and it's not dirty to touch yourself.

It's normal and healthy, and most doctors will tell you so. So, my primary advice to you is to investigate your fear of, or repulsion to, or whatever it is, to masturbation. Think about it, anyway.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Plan a birthday bash and invite the entire football team.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Let yourself loose. Get up and do the Twist on your desk.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Buy some gum balls from the machine outside of Union Station and see how many you can fit into your mouth.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Soak in a bubble bath tonight and listen to your favorite tunes while sipping a milkshake.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your love life might be on the verge of collapse. Pick up the phone.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Stop eating Halloween candy. Thanksgiving is less than four weeks away.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Go have a beer tonight to get through the mid-week blues.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Wear bright purple today to cover your gloomy attitude toward school.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make a Christmas list and send it to your parents with a "keeping in touch" card.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Halloween is over. Take off the mask.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Try your favorite pick-up line on the grocery-store clerk.

Spanish film prompts empathy feelings

RAUL REIS
Collegian

If "Law of Desire" (La Ley del Deseo, 1987) were an Ingmar Bergman film, for three whole hours the characters would wander in a room asking themselves the meaning of life.

REVIEW

Fortunately, it's a Pedro Almodovar movie, which means the characters also will try to find out the meaning of life, but in the meantime, they will passionately fall in love, betray, seek revenge, laugh at their own disgrace and eventually kill each other.

Don't get me wrong. I recognize Bergman is a genius, but if you ask me, Spanish director Almodovar is funnier.

The first time I saw "Law of Desire," some three years ago, the movie struck me like a lightning bolt. Finally, someone was telling me the stories I wanted to listen to. For weeks, the film stuck with me like an old bolero.

When we have to make our first decision in life, say, when we are 2 or 3 years old, we set a pattern for our entire life. We will face the same dilemma over and over, having to choose between what we really want to do and what other people think we should do.

Stripped to its basics, filmmaker Almodovar's wild career, which includes box-office hits such as "Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown" and "Tie Me Up, Tie Me Down!," converges to the same point: the eternal battle between reasoning and desire.

The good things about his movies is that in them, contrary to real life, desire always wins.

In "Law of Desire," Eros is the powerful driving force that eats Antonio Banderas' character from within. Banderas, who can be considered Almodovar's alter ego, doesn't know limits for his passion.

Like a child, he disregards any negative answer. His atrophied Logos always yields to his desire. In a world in which we are supposed to control our impulses, however, desire also can mean crime.

"Law of Desire" is not your traditional Coke and popcorn movie. In it, people live unconventional lives, have unconventional jobs and love unconventional loves.

Its characters, like Carmen Maura's transsexual artist, will defy any preconceived notion you might have.

MOVIE INFO
■ 8 p.m. Wednesday in the K-State Union Forum Hall
■ 7 and 9:30 p.m. Thursday in Forum Hall
■ 7 and 9:30 p.m. Friday in the Little Theatre

At the very first scene, you realize things are not really what they seem to be.

Almodovar makes sure you know you are looking at reality through a distorted mirror, watching his crazy characters move like puppets driven by passions. The most amazing thing is that you really empathize with them.

Carmen Maura cries listening over and over to Brazilian singer Maysa's poignant interpretation of "Ne Me Quittez Pas" ("Don't Leave Me"). You know it is so fake, but it almost makes you cry with her.

Their small disgraces make you feel sorry for them. Then you realize you're feeling sorry for your own disgrace. You feel sorry for yourself because in real life, desire usually loses the battle inside you.

It's a Spanish tragicomedy, though. Things are never really sad.

When they are getting too serious, Almodovar will wake you up and make you enjoy another bolero-like farce that unfolds like those colorful Seville fans.

And, of course, there is Antonio Banderas. If you haven't seen him before, go and find out why Madonna is so crazy about him and why Hollywood labeled him "the sexiest man alive."

KC symphony returns for McCain performance

LORI ARMER
Collegian

The Kansas City Symphony will perform at 8 p.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium, led by music director and conductor William McGlaughlin.

The symphony will perform three works, including Tragic Overture, Op. 81 by Brahms, Corigliano's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra and Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, in E Minor, Op. 95 (From the New World).

Michael Samardzija, touring manager for the symphony, said the extreme quality of the works will leave an impression on the audience.

"It's a good experience. The piece by Brahms is classical, and Corigliano's is contemporary, as it is only 15 to 20 years old," Samardzija said.

"Dvorak's is the most popular piece ever written, and this is its 100-year anniversary."

Richard Martin, director of McCain, said the symphony last played at K-State on March 30, 1990. It can be a positive experience to those who attend, he said.

"Getting a symphony to Manhattan is a pain, but they are a very good symphony, and a visiting symphony is part of what goes on at a good university," Martin said. "A university is a place to experience new things. It will be a chance to hear a different approach to the works and how well they do it."

In addition, piano soloist James Tocco will speak at 7 p.m. in McCain about Corigliano's work and its meanings to ticket holders, possibly clearing up misconceptions.

"A lot of people are afraid of 20th-century music," Martin said. "They're reluctant to hear it because they heard things they didn't understand in the past, or else didn't know what to listen for. Tocco is going to speak about the work and help them understand."

Tickets are available at the McCain Box Office, the K-State Union Bookstore and Manhattan Town Center.

Tickets for the public cost $14 to $20, and students may purchase tickets for half price.

The typical season series for Kansas City began on Oct. 15. After playing in Manhattan, the symphony will be returning to play identical concerts in Kansas City over the weekend, Samardzija said.

SYMPHONY INFO

- The Kansas City Symphony will perform at 8 p.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium.
- James Tocco, piano soloist, will speak at 7 p.m. in McCain about one of the composer's pieces.
- Tickets are available at the McCain Box Office, the K-State Union Bookstore and Manhattan Town Center. Tickets for the public cost $14 to $20. Students may purchase tickets for half price.

L.A. rioter pleads guilty

Charges reduced to assault in return for lighter sentence

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Henry Watson pleaded guilty today to a felony count of assault and apologized for attacking a truck driver at the outset of last year's riots. Under the plea agreement, he will be spared a prison term.

Also today, a judge denied a reduction in bail for Watson's co-defendant, Damian Williams.

Watson, 29, entered the plea after prosecutors said they planned to retry him on the jury's one deadlocked count from the trial that wound up last month.

In exchange for the plea, Watson will be on probation until January 1997 and will be required to do community service.

He could have received up to seven years in prison upon conviction. Formal sentencing is set for Dec. 7.

Watson stood up in court and admitted beating trucker Larry Tarvin.

The beating took place at the intersection of Florence and Normandie avenues, the same place another truck driver, Reginald Denny, was assaulted and nearly killed as the riot got under way.

"I'd just like to apologize to Mr. Tarvin and Mr. Denny, Mr. (Fidel) Lopez and all the other victims that were there at the intersection on April 29, 1992," Watson said.

A bail hearing for co-defendant Williams, convicted of mayhem in the Denny beating, followed the Watson plea. Superior Court Judge John Ouderkirk turned down a defense request to reduce Williams' bail from $580,000 to $35,000 so Williams could be freed pending sentencing.

"The defendant engaged in a pattern of violence and anti-social conduct against five helpless and defenseless people," Ouderkirk said. "Mr. Williams is a danger to the community."

Prosecutors contended Williams skipped traffic court five times and could not be trusted to stay around if his bail is lowered.

"A reduction in bail would be an affront to the good and decent law-abiding citizens in this county," Deputy District Attorney Lawrence Morrison said.

In arguing unsuccessfully for a bail reduction, defense attorney Edi M.O. Faal said the higher bail would be vindictive punishment, rather than a move to protect society from further danger.

Williams, 20, was convicted Oct. 20 of felony mayhem and four misdemeanor assault counts in the videotaped attack on Denny and other drivers at the flashpoint of the riots. He faces up to 10 years in prison at his scheduled Dec. 7 sentencing.

Watson, 29, was convicted of misdemeanor assault in the attack on Denny and was freed without bail. Like Williams, he had already served 17 months in jail awaiting trial. The maximum term for a misdemeanor assault count is six months.

The two were acquitted of most of the serious charges in the attacks on Denny and others.

The attack on Denny became a symbol of the riots because it was photographed from a TV news helicopter and broadcast worldwide.

The riots broke out after the acquittals of four white Los Angeles police officers in another televised beating, that of black motorist Rodney King. His March 1991 beating after a car chase was taped by a man who lived nearby.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Wildcat Workout

New program draws attention to food drives

STEFFANY CARRELL
Collegian

Now you can help feed the hungry while working out to shed those extra pounds.

Recreational Services recently expanded its aerobic dance and aerobic step classes, also known as the Wildcat Workout, to include monthly special events. November's theme is "Workout to Feed the Hungry."

"We wanted to bring attention to some other campus events like the food drive," Sarah Forsyth, assistant director of Rec Services, said.

"We will be encouraging people to exercise, as well as giving them the opportunity to help stock the Flint Hills Bread Basket."

Forsyth said while the training and education the classes provide is important, Rec Services wanted to encourage everyone to give and to look at the bigger picture. She said this bigger picture is also the goal for the Wildcat Workout's December theme, "Celebrate the Season."

"We've had a lot of new people come in and start with the workout, and I think a lot of that has to do with the new themes," Aimee Alvarez, sophomore in kinesiology and exercise science, said.

Rec Services will be collecting the canned food Monday, Nov. 15, through Friday, Nov. 19, at any of its Wildcat Workout sessions each day. The sessions are free and open to all students.

"There will be a competition of sorts among the five daily sessions," Forsyth said.

"The goal of the Wildcat Workout is to combine the concept of working out and having fun. We want to encourage more people to participate in aerobic activities."

A first-year instructor, Alvarez said she thinks the new themes help not only the session participants but the instructors as well.

"It's a lot more fun for us because it adds some variety and it's not so monotonous," she said. "It also brings the instructors closer together."

Alvarez said she is glad the themes have been introduced to the Wildcat Workout.

"I think most people see aerobics and working out as a chore — something they have to do, but don't really want to. But with the themes, we're trying to make it more fun."

Serbs give Sarajevo cold shoulder

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Yugoslavia — Sarajevo shivered under frigid temperatures Tuesday, but a delay tactic by Bosnian Serbs blocked U.N. engineering crews from repairing vital electrical lines.

Critical institutions such as hospitals and the bakery have been without electricity since Saturday, and the rest of the city hasn't had power in more than a week.

No electricity means no running water and no heat as winter temperatures set in. To stay warm, residents have been braving snipers to venture out and chop down what few trees are left, or chip bits of wood from the roots of trees felled last winter for fuel.

With temperatures dipping below zero, the Serbs are foisting mountains of paperwork on U.N. peacekeepers to block electricity and supplies to the city.

The tactic threatens to prove almost as deadly as the shelling and sniping that began when Serbs besieged Sarajevo 19 months ago.

Engineers who said they needed just a few more hours to fix the main electrical transmission line to the city were barred Monday by Serbs who said there was fighting in the area.

The United Nations was required to reapply to reach the front line, a process that usually takes at least 48 hours because all local troops must be notified, said Lt. Col. Bill Aikman, a U.N. representative in Sarajevo. That means the earliest repairs can resume is Wednesday.

Aikman said U.N. movements were being hindered by ridiculous bureaucracy that has grown steadily since peace talks collapsed in September.

It's been getting harder to get supplies through Serb lines, he said.

To move through Serb lines, the United Nations must obtain permission from both Serb military and political authorities, who sometimes have conflicting agendas. For one aid convoy, Serbs wanted a list of the number of tents, their size and what each tent would be used for, and a list of spare parts for armored personnel carriers.

Efforts to ship tents and other winter supplies to Muslim refugees in eastern Bosnia repeatedly have been blocked by Serbs who contend they do not qualify as humanitarian relief.

Accidents result of inattentive drivers, walkers

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Mom's old rule about looking both ways before crossing the street applies to college students as well as children.

Accidents between cars, pedestrians and bicycles are a concern on campus, K-State Police Capt. Charles Beckom said.

For the most part, accidents are caused by inattentiveness on the part of one or both parties involved, he said.

However, Beckom said seasonal changes can affect the accident rate. With winter on its way, the chances for accidents could increase.

"With season changes, the leaves turning colors on the trees can be distracting," Beckom said. "Weather conditions tend to change our ability to see things because of casting shadows or creating diversions as well."

Mist and snow can limit a driver's sight and pedestrian and bicyclist visibility, he said.

Weather conditions are only partly responsible for the accidents that occur on campus. One problem is the belief that K-State is a walking campus, which leads pedestrians to feel they are invincible.

"The attitude on campus is that it's a walking campus, and we as pedestrians have priority over everything and that the drivers are going to wait," Beckom said.

Crosswalks promote the idea of safety for any who enter. This idea is, however, misleading.

"There's a misunderstanding about crosswalks that cause us all some problems," Beckom said. "There is the assumption on the pedestrians' behalf that the crosswalk is their protection and their entry absolves them of any responsibility of sharing it with an automobile or a bike. It doesn't.

"When dealing with the flow of traffic, the more restrictions you place on it (like crosswalks), the greater the opportunity for something to happen."

"The law says that the pedestrian has the responsibility not to enter a crosswalk at any time that it is obviously unsafe or if their entry would cause oncoming motorists to stop without allowing sufficient room for them to stop. It's a Catch-22 for both the driver and the pedestrian."

According to Kansas law, the driver of a vehicle shall yield the right of way. The driver must slow down or stop, if need be, to a pedestrian crossing the road within a crosswalk when the pedestrian is in the half of the road in which the vehicle is traveling. The driver must also yield when the pedestrian is approaching so closely from the opposite half of the road as to be in danger.

"The attitude on campus is that it's a walking campus."
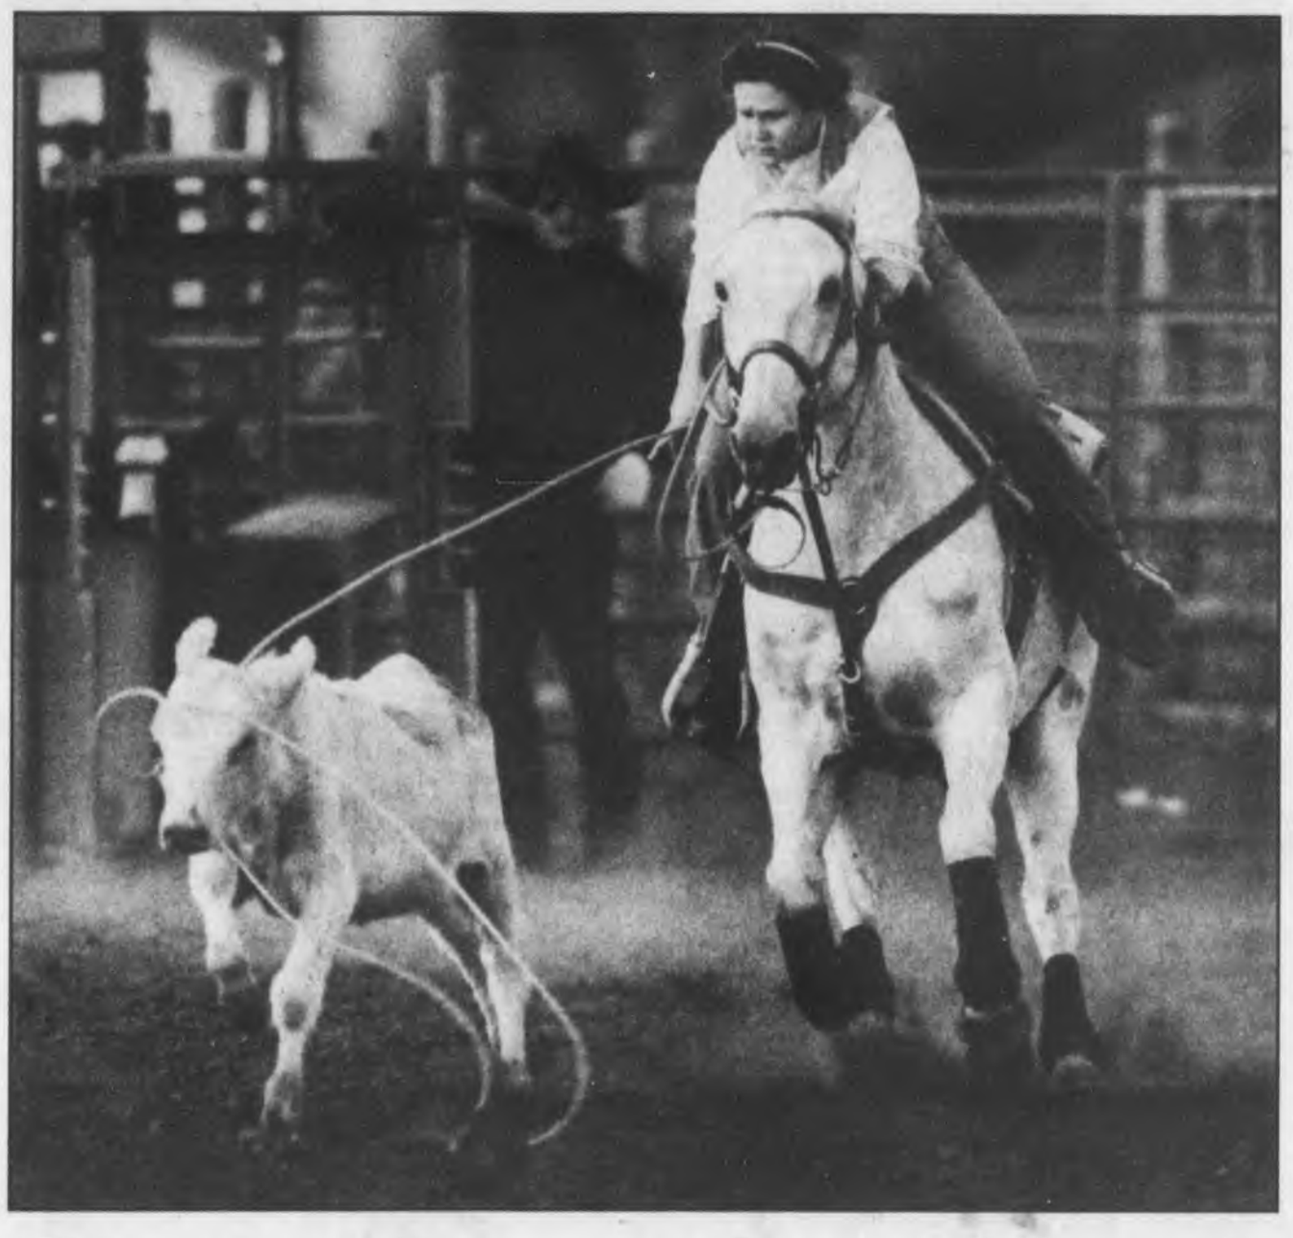
CHARLES BECKOM
CAPTAIN OF THE K-STATE POLICE

Accidents occur when a driver refuses to yield to a pedestrian within the crosswalk.

Last Wednesday, William Luton Jr., fifth-year senior in architecture, was involved in a hit-and-run accident in a crosswalk in Petticoat Lane next to Lot A-23. He entered the crosswalk after checking for traffic and, not seeing any, he stepped out.

"I was about two steps off the sidewalk and starting to take a third, and a car came out of nowhere," he said. "She hooked me with the tail end of the car, and it pulled me sideways."

Luton came away with bruises on his leg and foot.



He said he has two ideas to cut down on the possibility of accidents.

"My personal suggestion is to put a stop sign in front of every single one (of the crosswalks). People are using the roads on campus as a shortcut. They kind of want to fly up these roads to get to work. I think stop signs would help a lot. It would discourage people to drive across campus."

A speed trap on campus might be helpful in discouraging speeders, Luton said.

Students seek rodeo thrills

BRENT DUNGAN
Collegian

The crowd roars with excitement as the bull's horns smash against the inside of the pen, but the cowboy sitting on the beast can't hear them. He's riding on adrenaline, waiting for the gate to be pulled and praying for an eight-second ride.

Some K-State students are facing the thrill and danger of the rodeo throughout the year, as well as representing the University by being involved with the K-State Rodeo Club and Team.

K-State competes in the Central Plains Region against small colleges and community colleges because no other Big Eight school has a full team, only individual competitors. Randel Raub, assistant professor of animal science and industry, said the team ranks in the middle out of 10 teams.

UPCOMING RODEOS
■ Alva, Okla. from today to Nov. 6
■ K-State/Fort Scott Alumni Rodeo Nov. 13-14 at Weber Arena

Successful teams can move up to the college national finals at Montana State University

The circuit follows the regulations of the National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association.

Travis Griffin, senior in agribusiness and Rodeo Club president, said the competitors accumulate NIRA points by winning events and have an opportunity to win prize money, which is raised by the entry fees that all students pay to compete.

Cami Dunham, freshman in pre-medicine, said she has been involved with horses all her life.

"It's just something I've always done," Dunham said.

Students do not have to be very experienced to join the club, Griffin said. The club is different from the team in that club members don't compete, but help handle livestock and learn about the sport in general.

"We're just looking for people with an interest in rodeo," said Griffin. "The more the better."

Raub said the students donate lots of time and money to the sport. Students have to own their own horses and pay to board and feed them here in Manhattan, Raub said.

The team pays for travel expenses by doing lots of fund raisers such as parking cars at games and having auctions.

Alva, Okla., will be the sight of the team's next competition. The rodeo takes place Nov. 4-6. Other big events coming up include the K-State/Fort Scott Alumni Rodeo, which will take place Nov. 13-14 at Weber Arena. Alumni from both schools will compete with students.

Raub said he would like more students to know about the club and team. Like other non-traditional sports at Big Eight schools, it's hidden away from the public eye, he said.

"We need to promote the sport and educate students about the heritage and culture of the rodeo," Raub said.

Men's role in society questioned

Movement looks beyond accepted male lifestyle

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

Since the mid-1970s, interest in men's issues and roles in society have increased and created a demand for classes, journals and organizations that address this concern.

John Robertson, a psychologist at K-State's counseling center, works with students about men's issues.

"Men's issues can be considered to be the male counterpart to the women's movement," Robertson said. "A much better way to describe it is as a men's movement, because the movement deals with the issues."

Robertson said these questions arise as society's perception of the male role changes or evolves.

"What it means to be a man is clearly different today that any other time in this century," he said. "Men's issues are those concerns men have about what it means to be male in this larger social context."

The men's movement is not necessarily a response to the women's movement. It involves more.

"I don't exactly see it as a reaction to the women's movement, because it shows competition where there really isn't any," Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said. "I think it helps to further develop men, because most men blindly accept traditional views."

Franklin, who has written some papers on the men's movement and earned a national award for "Teaching, Educating and Developing Men," said men's traditional views can lead to problems.

For instance, the traditional role, which advocates men spending their lives supporting others, can lead men to live an average of 10 years less than women, have higher drug and alcohol addiction rates and a higher suicide rate.

"What kind of privilege is that?" Franklin said. "I want to find ways to help men develop more, live a healthier lifestyle, to live longer and learn to help other people."

There are three trends in the men's movement, Robertson said. Some men are interested in researching what it means to be male, and others advocate male issues. There are also those who look to return to historical male roots.

"The first group is based on academics, while the second group looks for political equality and supports women's and gay's rights," he said. "The third group uses retreats and personal development plans to to define male terms."

One of the problems Franklin said he sees with the movement is the different fronts.

"With these different fronts, no one is working together to accomplish anything," Franklin said.

Franklin also said he would like to see more done with the men's movement on campus.

"I am not concerned with the adult men, but more with college-age and younger men," he said. "They are the ones who will assume leadership in the future and will have to deal with a wider range of people than those who came before."

"What it means to be a man is clearly different today than any other time in this century."
JOHN ROBERTSON
PSYCHOLOGIST

There are no classes or curricula on campus that focus on men's issues.

"Right now, more is done with women, which is fine, but the same isn't done for men," Franklin said. "We have women's studies but no men's studies, and we need to teach men how to operate in today's world and deal with the impact of diversity."

University Counseling Services, located on the second floor of Lafene Health Center, has workshops and counselors available to help define the role of men in society.

"Many men are unhappy with restrictions of the traditional expectations," Robertson said. "We work individually or in groups with men on how to explore their options."

Robertson also works with individuals.

"I help them make choices about gender roles, relationships, nontraditional jobs and expressing themselves," he said.

If a student wants more than an individual review, the workshops are structured for a group of men to share ideas.

"We pick a particular topic and talk about it as a group," Robertson said. "We talk about its effects and implications and may

Floods hit Honduras after 3 days of storms

Rain, mudslides destroy homes, ruin plantations

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — Heavy flooding kept more than 15,000 people from returning Wednesday to homes swamped by three days of storms. At least 110 people have died, and 263 are missing, authorities said.

Teams recovered bodies from swollen rivers along the Atlantic coast.

"The casualties are only preliminary because our rescue brigades are still finding bodies in the rivers," said Ramon Santos, a government official who provided the toll.

President Rafael Leonardo Callejas announced preparations a day earlier to declare a state of emergency in an 8,400-square-mile area in the northern Atlantic provinces of Yoro and Colon.

After flying Tuesday over the hardest-hit areas, he said experts were estimating damages would exceed $60 million.

The Red Cross appealed for international assistance for thousands who remained sheltered in schools and churches after their homes were destroyed and mudslides cut the main Atlantic coastal highway, cutting off whole towns.

Santos said civil defense officials were worried about 150 isolated hamlets and towns that have gone four days without safe drinking water.

"We fear there could be a surge of epidemics among the victims," he said.

FLOOD FACTS
■ At least 110 people are dead; 263 are missing.
■ 1,000 homes were destroyed.

The nearly 72 hours of torrential rains began before dawn on Sunday as a series of storms and high winds lashed the coastal provinces, unleashing mudslides that toppled more than 1,000 homes.

The storm also destroyed vast plantations of rice, bananas, cacao, sugarcane and African palms.

Vice President Roberto Martinez Lozano said some of the biggest losses were in the farming valleys of Aguan and Lean, where Chiquita Brands operates large banana plantations.

"The situation is calamitous," Martinez Lozano said.

Drop in traffic tickets could affect highways

KANSAS CITY (AP) — A drop in the number of traffic tickets issued by the Kansas Highway Patrol could endanger federal highway maintenance dollars for the state.

The decline in tickets stems from a move by the patrol to expand its patrolling in rural parts of Kansas, its superintendent, Col. Lonnie McCollum, said.

Federal funds for roads and bridges and some law enforcement activities are based on the number of traffic violations issued in the state. The statistics also have a strong influence on auto and health insurance rates.

Stricter sex-offense bills to be considered

LEAWOOD (AP) — A package of bills tightening regulations on sex offenders will be introduced in response to the rape and slaying of a Pittsburg State University student last summer.

Members of a task force on sex offenders formed after the death of Stephanie Schmidt, 19, of Leawood, said Tuesday that five bills will be introduced when the Kansas Legislature convenes in January.

One of the toughest of the bills would allow officials to commit to a mental institution someone about to be released from a prison term for a sex-related crime if the person is thought to be a threat to public safety. Sex-predator laws are already on the books in some states.

Post office collapse kills 1, injures 6

CHICAGO (AP) — Two floors being built in the city's new main post office collapsed in a tangle of metal girders Wednesday, killing one worker and injuring six others.

James Cooper, who was working on the building near the section that collapsed, said, "It was just a normal day. I heard a crack, and it seemed the world was coming down."

Chicago Fire Commissioner Raymond Orozco would not speculate on what caused the collapse.

Three men were in critical condition at Cook County Hospital. Two other men were in serious condition, and another was in fair condition.

Derailed cars force massive evacuations

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Ten tanker cars from a freight train carrying hazardous materials derailed Wednesday, rattling houses and forcing the evacuation of thousands of residents and three elementary schools.

No injuries were reported, said Jefferson County Police spokeswoman Wendy Peters. Between 2,400 and 2,800 people were evacuated within a mile of the wreck in suburban Louisville, said Eric Evans, chief of the Pleasure Ridge Park Fire Department.

Two overturned tankers carrying chloroprene had small leaks, which were sealed by evening, Evans said. Chloroprene is highly flammable and gives off toxic smoke if it burns.

Court will examine election commission

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Election Commission will ask the Supreme Court to decide whether the commission's membership had violated the Constitution because it included two employees of Congress.

An appeals court ruled last month that the Constitution's separation-of-powers doctrine does not permit agents of Congress to serve on executive branch commissions — even in a nonvoting capacity.

The membership of the two congressional employees — even though they do not vote on agency decisions — caused the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to overturn an FEC ruling against the National Rifle Association.

Packwood diaries defended by Specter

WASHINGTON (AP) — Arlen Specter emerged as the closest thing Bob Packwood had to a defender in the Senate dispute over access to his diaries, reviving criticism still smoldering from Specter's dogged interrogation of Anita Hill in 1991.

The Pennsylvania Republican stepped into the middle of the Packwood sexual-harassment issue by proposing to limit the Ethics Committee's access to the 8,000 pages of diaries. His proposal was attacked as a cover-up on the Senate floor and was upbraided by women's advocates who again leveled charges of insensitivity.

Packwood, an Oregon Republican, has attempted to stave off committee requests for his diaries, which the panel says it needs to evaluate sexual harassment allegations.

Iraqi policemen shot by Kuwaiti workers

KUWAIT (AP) — Kuwaiti workers shot two Iraqi policemen who tried to abduct them in the demilitarized border zone with Iraq, a U.N. spokesman said. One of the policemen died today in an Iraqi hospital.

The shooting occurred Tuesday on the Kuwaiti side of the three-mile wide strip about two miles west of the Umm Qasr naval base, said Abdullatif Kabbaj, spokesman for the U.N. Iraq-Kuwait Observer Mission.

Kabbaj said one policeman died of chest injuries in a hospital in Basra, Iraq. He said the other policeman was wounded in the arm, and his injury was not serious.

He said the Iraqis fired three shots in the air and forced open a vehicle carrying six workers who had been working on a trench Kuwait is building as defense against Iraq. The workers were being escorted by a U.N. patrol.

Residents flee Malibu after uncontrolled fire

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — Pandemonium prevailed on the main highway in and out of this fire-ravaged community. Scores of fleeing residents tangled with others trying to reach their homes and firefighters trying to do their jobs.

The Pacific Coast Highway is the main north-south road running through this exclusive celebrity enclave, an area prone to destructive fires. A wildfire Tuesday roared out of the Santa Monica Mountains north of here, burning thousands of acres and destroying 200 homes.

The fire remained out of control Wednesday.

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

Jeremy Richardson and Linda Chandler, played by Eric Kaiser, junior in theater, and Andi Miner, junior in secondary education, perform a scene during the first act of "The Beautiful People."

Student play has Kansas overtones

JILL PARADISE
Collegian

Expect a play with a little local flavor.

KSU Theatre will present "The Beautiful People" at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday at the Purple Masque Theatre. The play is written and directed by J. Edward Norman, a graduate student in theater.

Norman said his inspiration for writing the script came from several sources.

"The play has autobiographical elements of my life but is in no way, shape or form an autobiographical play," he said. "The play is so Kansan it hurts."

However, Norman said he did not try to make the play seem like it took place in a small-town setting.

"It was my attempt when I wrote the play not to specify the location," Norman said. "I tried to make it an ambiguous play."

The play centers on Jeremy Richardson, played by Eric Kaiser, junior in theater.

Richardson was a great high-school football player but sustained career-ending injuries in college. He returns home to discover his town is not the way he left it. In addition, his best friend is a cocaine dealer, and no one wants to give him a job.

KSU THEATRE

- "The Beautiful People" is playing at 8 p.m. today through Saturday at the Purple Masque Theatre.
- Tickets can be purchased at the McCain Box Office at $2 for students and $3 for the general public.

"Jeremy is just trying to find his place in society. Since he has lost his career, he has lost all of his friends," Kaiser said.

Jeremy must make many tough decisions about his life. They may not be what is best for him, but they are the decisions he makes and must live with, Kaiser said.

Norman said he had been toying with the idea of writing a play for several years, but he said it was not until he enrolled in a playwriting class that he got serious about the idea.

Kaiser described "The Beautiful People" as a comedy, drama, romance and thriller.

"It has a great ending, and the sound and lights are going to be incredible," he said.

Norman said the play contains adult language and violence.

The play costs $2 for K-State students and $3 for the general public. Tickets are on sale at McCain Box Office.

Anti-picket law passes

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — The lawyer for an abortion doctor whose home has been targeted by protesters hailed a new county ordinance banning pickets outside individual residences.

"That's great," John Cowles, who represents Dr. George Tiller, said after Tuesday's 2-1 vote by the Butler County Commission.

"We were impressed that the ordinance was passed with a minimum of controversy," Cowles said. "This will prevent the protesters from setting up their floodlights and boom boxes out there and camping out all night in front of the doctor's house."

The ordinance, which takes effect Dec. 1, bans picketing "targeted, focused or directed at a particular residence" in unincorporated parts of Butler County.

Commission Chairman Leon White said the measure first was proposed by neighbors tired of frequent protests outside Tiller's home.

Tiller, his wife and their four children live in a small Wichita neighborhood. The blacktop road leading to his house is blocked easily by picketers, who frequently set up in front of his home.

The vote came at the end of a 45-minute hearing at which several people — most of them pro-lifers — argued the proposal was unconstitutional.

"I think it would be very unwise for the commission to undertake a challenge on this issue," said Scott Greeve, a pro-lifer.

Putting the students back into senate

Senate. The very word seems to inspire awe and respect for a body of distinguished captains of a ship of state.

Except when it is preceded by the word "Student."

While every legislative body occasionally misrepresents its constituency, the conduct of Student Senate during the recent allocation meetings was at times abhorrent.

The Oct. 19 meeting was attended by more than 30 representatives of various student groups whose budgets were to be debated.

One hour into the meeting (which lasted more than four hours), a motion was made to recess to allow senators to hear Tobias Wolff, an author who was speaking at the Union.

Last week's meeting, also attended by students waiting to hear about their budgets, opened with a motion to recess until Tuesday to allow senators to participate in Homecoming activities.

To its credit, Senate failed both motions (though the first vote was dangerously close). The fact that elected officials made the motions in the first place is morally repugnant.

While literary readings and Homecoming body-building contests are certainly laudable projects, the responsibility of elected officials to those they represent should come before anything short of death.

No one was forced to take a Senate seat. There are plenty of interested students who would love to take on the responsibility some senators seem to be shirking.

If a piece of yard art is really more important than several thousands of dollars of student money, then resign and let someone who cares take the reins.

The pressures on an elected official are great. So, apparently, are the pressures of living in the spotlight every Thursday night. But if the pressure gets too high, something has to give. And if Senate can't be the most important activity to the senator, someone has to give.

And give it back to the students.

Sports — beyond the surface

I will be the first to admit I am not much of a sports fan. This probably has something to do with the fact that I am not much of an athlete either. Oh, I get out and run, exercise, maybe play an occasional game of racquetball — but on the whole, I am not "consumed" with playing sports or watching sporting events as a great many of my gender are prone to do.

This no doubt places my masculinity into serious question as some of my fan mail has suggested.

Well, that comes with the territory. However, just for the record, let me say I find it curious that those who write these slurs often use green ink.

In fact, I find it kind of exciting.

Now, where was I ... oh yes ... I rarely watch The Big Three (baseball, basketball, football) on TV — particularly the professional form.

Why? Well, take, for example, football: There is something about grown adults calling themselves "dolphins," "lions," "packers" or "oilers" while wearing bright-colored, tight-fitting, knee-length pants, running around butting each other in the head and patting each other on the fanny in front of thousands of cheering drunks while getting paid enormous wads of money that is, well ... silly.

But let's put this whole professional sports thing in perspective: I would bend over buck naked in the middle of I-70 and with a tennis racquet serve tennis balls between my legs into the front windshield of oncoming speeding semi-trucks for the amount of money your average professional athlete gets paid.

Granted, it would probably not be a long enough career to make most-valuable-player status, but it would certainly leave a lasting impression on a few bleary-eyed truck drivers.

So, to say professional athletes play the sport because they "love" the game is absolute nonsense.

They love the game BECAUSE they get to call themselves a dolphin, lion, packer or oiler, while wearing bright-colored, tight-fitting, knee-length pants, running around butting each other in the head and patting each other on the fanny in front of thousands of cheering drunks and getting paid more money than you or I will ever make in five billion lifetimes.

I just wanted to make that clear.

Now then, amateur athletics is another matter. Again, I admit my general lack of interest even in this area, but at least I can identify with, to some small degree, the interest and even fanatic enthusiasm some of you have for various amateur sports teams.

My empathy here is due in large part to my participation as a young lad in junior and senior high school sports — namely basketball and football.

Yes, I can understand the feelings of pride and excitement one experiences while watching classmates, sons or daughters represent your school and community in the heat of competition. I know well the camaraderie and kinship that arise from working as a team.

In fact, some of my fondest memories of intense pain come from having played the most hallowed of high school team sports: football.

BRAD SEABOURN

Like the time I fractured my collarbone in junior high trying to tackle a guy that every brain cell in my minuscule junior high skull clearly and accurately identified as a Klingon cruiser.

Or the time I was tackled and slammed on my butt in the sitting position so hard I thought my tailbone was exploding into the first-ever rectal supernova.

I even remember the time when I was a sophomore halfback and some senior defensive players decided to gently break my leg during a practice scrimmage ... probably so they would not have to use one of their time-outs or some other important technicality in football strategy.

And I also remember what it sounded like — like snapping a fresh, green limb off of a tree.

Despite these vivid memories, I look back on most of it as being positive and fun.

I even think there were some things I learned about myself and others — like how to work toward a goal as an individual, as well as a team.

How to dig down and find that last bit of strength when the going gets tough. How to pick yourself up and shake off the pain, or the shame or both. How to be a good loser and a humble winner.

How to be a winner instead of a quitter — you know, things you may have been fortunate enough to have heard a coach say in the locker room, but never thought could actually apply in real-life situations other than sports.

So I would like to congratulate the K-State football team, coaches and staff on their decisive win against Oklahoma. Because of their dedication and many long hours of hard work, what seemed like an insurmountable mountain five years ago when Bill Snyder first came to K-State finally became a reality on a cold Saturday in October.

More importantly, you showed all who watched or listened that even the wildest of dreams can come true if you believe in yourself and dedicate yourself to hard work.

Thanks, guys.

Misconceptions about Islam are why people should seek the truth

Editor,

Exactly 100 years ago, in 1893, the first American to convert to Islam, Mohammed Alexander Russell Webb, said Islam is "so thoroughly applicable to all the needs of humanity that it seems that it is exactly the system that we need in our country ..."

At the very first parliament of World Religions in Chicago in 1893, Webb, the representative for Islam, declared, "I have first in the American intellect, in the American intelligence and in the American love of fair play, and will defy any intelligent person to understand Islam and not like it."

His emphatic declaration was prophetic and rings true today because, 100 years later, Islam is the fastest-growing religion in America.

Despite the colossal misinformation about the many-splendored faith, Americans from all walks of life have recognized the truth in Islam.

This is, of course, only by the will of God.

Because this is Islam Awareness Week, the Muslim Student Association seeks to helps K-State students and faculty alike understand Islam.

First of all, it is important to be informed about the correct Islamic terms.

Even journalists still persist in misspelling "Muslim" as "Moslem" and pronouncing it "MOZ-lem." The correct way to say it is "MUS-lim," with a soft 'S.'

The word "Islam" is mispronounced as "Iz-LAM" or "IZ-lum," whereas it is "Is-LAAM" with a soft 'S.'

In addition, the Qur'an is misspelled as Koran, Coran or Alkoran.

It would be culturally insensitive and outdated in these global-village times to use such Orientalist distortions.

Confusion about Islam also stems from the immense diversity of Muslims.

Therefore, sometimes it is best to go directly to the source: The Qur'an.

With the preaching of strict monotheism, it is the Qur'an that inspired all the achievements of the early Muslims.

It is said that there were only 17 literate people in Mecca at the advent of Islam.

Yet, within a short time, Muslims became a book-related community where reading was important.

This came about because of the first Divine command in the Qur'an: "Read!"

This is why, throughout the 14 centuries of Islam, the Qur'an is required reading for Muslims.

And, it could be said, the Qur'an is required reading for all humanity because Islam is for the benefit of all humankind.

THE TWO FACES OF MY FATHER

I called my mother Sunday evening to tell her the about the Collegian winning the Pacemaker from the Associated Collegiate Press. I expected to catch her in a good mood.

Instead, she was crying.

My first thought was someone must have died. She soon told me what was really wrong with her. My father had left one year ago that day.

Last fall was such a weird time. I had been in and out of the hospital with mono and appendicitis. I was wading hip-deep through a sea of sickness, and the reports from home kept getting worse.

My father's drinking was out of control.

My dad has drunk ever since I can remember, starting in the late '70s, when he was working as a bartender at Auntie Mae's Parlor while going to college.

When we moved to Wichita, Dad became a corporate suit and began taking the guys out for a beer after work. What started as a weekly wind-down session soon became twice-weekly, then nightly. Cans of Bud Light became a staple in our refrigerator.

By the time I was in seventh grade, Mom and Dad were talking about divorce. However, Dad started a pattern that would last the next several years, promising to change so Mom wouldn't leave him.

Ever since my senior year in high school, Dad's alcoholism has gotten worse with increasing speed. Mom finally took a stand last October and asked him to leave. We were all shocked when, this time, he did.

I had withdrawn from the University to recover from illness so I was at home for the beginning of the worst year of my life. I became an insomniac, discovering the joys of TNT Judy Garland movies at 3 a.m.

I often had to put on my Walkman to drown out Mom's sobs in the middle of the night. I watched as she went to all lengths to get Dad back, all to no avail.

The last time I saw Dad before going back to school, we were going to the K-State/Wichita State basketball game. I looked in his fridge.

It contained cottage cheese, some sandwich meat and at least five six-packs.

Back in Manhattan, things went downhill for me. I slept a lot, rarely went to class, watched a lot of television late at night and worked too much at the Collegian.

Mom and I both started going to counseling but even that couldn't help our reactions to the flow of information we got on my Dad's activities. Mutual friends before the divorce told of his every activity, including the affair he had before he left and the woman he was planning on marrying.

I talked to Dad maybe every two or three weeks. More than that I couldn't handle.

I tried to confront him about his alcoholism. We fought on the phone for two hours, and I was an emotional wreck for weeks after.

Every conversation we had, he told lies, made promises he didn't keep, belittled me and tried to manipulate me. He moved to Houston in April, and most contact between us ceased.

By the summer, I was a total basket case when it came to Dad. Our counselor said Dad was holding me hostage emotionally from Houston.

The counselor said I needed to stand up for myself against Dad. The closest I came was telling him I wouldn't attend his wedding to a 26-year-old in August.

Mom, my sister Kari and I learned to lean on each other.

Slowly, I don't know how, we've gotten through this past year.

STEPHANIE FUQUA
GUEST COLUMNIST

I saw my father for the first time in eight months last Friday.

After weeks of begging, my sister had convinced him to come visit her in Wichita for the weekend. We met him at Pizza Hut for dinner, and I was shocked at his appearance.

Images flowed through my mind during that dinner. I remembered Dad teaching me to fly a kite when I was 8. I remembered him taking care of me when I was sick.

I remembered how he attended every swim meet, every music concert and every play I did in high school.

Just when I began to realize I missed him, I forced myself to remember one time when he was drunk, and I went outside to help him up the stairs to our house. He didn't appreciate the help and hit me.

I made myself remember the times I laid awake until 1 or 2 in the morning, waiting for him to come home. I was half-afraid he would get in a wreck driving drunk, and half-hoping he'd be pulled over and thrown in jail.

I sat through that dinner, torn between the images of the two men I remembered and haunted by the one who sat before me.

He was thin to the point of emaciation, head balding, eyebrows going gray. A total stranger sat in front Kari and me and didn't know what to say.

In the end, I babbled about stupid things — anything to fill the empty air — accepted the money he gave me and left. I cried all the way back to Manhattan.

That dinner was probably the best thing that's happened to me, however. I've finally accepted something. My father has chosen his own destiny, and until he stops drinking, I have to accept that. I finally realized there is nothing I can do to change his drinking.

I just have to hope someday he stops drinking. Unfortunately, I think the alcohol will kill him first.

Paul Watson, a Canadian environmentalist, spoke about his experiences as an environmental activist for the Annual Fall Lecture sponsored by the Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas Committee.

A full K-State Union Little Theatre saw a short video presentation about the Sea Shepherd Society to open the lecture, then Watson spoke to the crowd. In 1972 Watson said he attended an environmental conference in which world leaders told people if they want to make a difference they should be ready to commit themselves to the cause.

"You can talk about protecting wildlife now, but when you actually do do something it is a hard pill to swallow," he said. "The world leaders now condemn many of those actions."

Watson said the media decides what is important news and then tells everyone what it is — that was why Greenpeace was originally formed to be a media organization.

After leaving Greenpeace in 1977, Watson formed the Sea Shepherd Society to fight for environmental issues.

"Greenpeace has changed to be an environmental organization ran by accountants and lawyers," he said. "The Sea Shepherd Society is still a fully volunteer organization, which helps keep bureaucracy out."

A problem facing environmental issues, Watson said, is the fact people are more concerned with anthropocentrism, that is, with people.

"The problem with anthropecentrism is it doesn't account for all the other species in an environment," Watson said. "We are part of a very complex ecosystem with 35 million species of animals."

Watson said he decided to dedicate his life to protecting whales and marine animals after a Greenpeace campaign in 1975 when they used rubber rafts to get between the whales and the ships.

"We decided to confront the Soviet whaling fleet to stop whaling," he said. "They killed two whales in front of us, and one of the whales could have sank our raft, but it didn't. It was like it understood what we were trying to do."

The Sea Shepherd Society began its environmental campaign early on, when Watson sank the pirate whaling ship, "Sierra."

"The 'Sierra' was a pirate ship in every sense," Watson said. "We chased it for 200 miles before we rammed it while it was in a Portuguese port."

Watson said the society has used various efforts to stop commercial seal hunting, including using a spokesperson because the media responds to famous people.

"In 1977 we used Bridgette Bardot in a photo with a seal pup," Watson said. "That lead to a ban on the import of seal pelts into Europe and ended much of the commercial sealing."

Overall the Sea Shepherd Society has sunk seven whaling ships and one drift-net ship.

Republican claims he was first

TOPEKA — Lenexa Mayor Rich Becker wants it known he considers himself the first announced candidate for the Republican nomination for governor.

Becker took issue with news accounts that have listed Secretary of State Bill Graves as the first officially declared candidate for the GOP nomination and former state Sen. Fred Kerr as the second. Graves made his formal declaration Oct. 18 and Kerr Tuesday, both touring more than a dozen cities.

Becker and Pittsburg businessman Gene Bicknell also have been campaigning for the nomination most of this year, and former Wyandotte County Sheriff Owen Sully has said he plans to seek the nomination. None has had formal news conferences to declare.

"I didn't make the round of cities like the rest of the guys did, but the truth of it is I really was the first (to announce), before those other guys were out there."

Lack of shortcuts lands Ochs defensive player of week

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Dirk Ochs said he doesn't believe in short cuts.

The defensive end never cuts his workout short and is regularly one of the first to show up for football meetings.

"I do a lot of things that some of the guys think are crazy," Ochs said. "I do just about everything by the rules. I don't cut things short.

"Sometimes in the weight room you might skip a few reps or something, or show up to a meeting at the last minute. I'm always here real early and try to get ahead."

Ochs was selected as the Big Eight Defensive Player of the Week Monday for his performance in the 21-7 victory against Oklahoma.

He recorded two sacks, caused one fumble, was credited with two quarterback hurries and made six tackles. "I would have to say this was my best game of the season," Ochs said.

"I've played hard every week, but the sacks came against a passing game we haven't really faced this year. I've been working on my pass rush, and I think it just came into place."

Ochs said the award was a reflection of a team effort.

"I'm really happy, but there were 10 other guys on the field that were playing just as hard as I was. I'm really happy for the team."

Dirk Ochs

Ochs is part of a defense that held two of the top scoring teams in the country to a combined 23 points. Colorado brought a 34-point average into Manhattan but came up with only 16 points.

Oklahoma averaged 32.9 points per game and managed just seven. K-State held those two teams to a combined 43.9 points below their average.

In the last two weeks, the Cats limited Colorado and Oklahoma to a total of 164 yards rushing on 73 carries. Colorado alone averages 233.1 yards rushing per game.

That's quite a switch compared to the 391 yards rushing the Cats gave up at Nebraska in a 45-28 setback.

"I'd say it was a turning point for us," Ochs said of the Nebraska game.

"It was almost embarrassing the way things happened up at Nebraska because of how we prepared. We just didn't come out and do the things we were supposed to do. It was upsetting."

Coach Bill Snyder said the defensive unit has now had a chance to familiarize themselves.

"Over that period of time, you learn to play with each other a little better, and you understand each other a little better," Snyder said. "They have just gradually and continually gotten better."

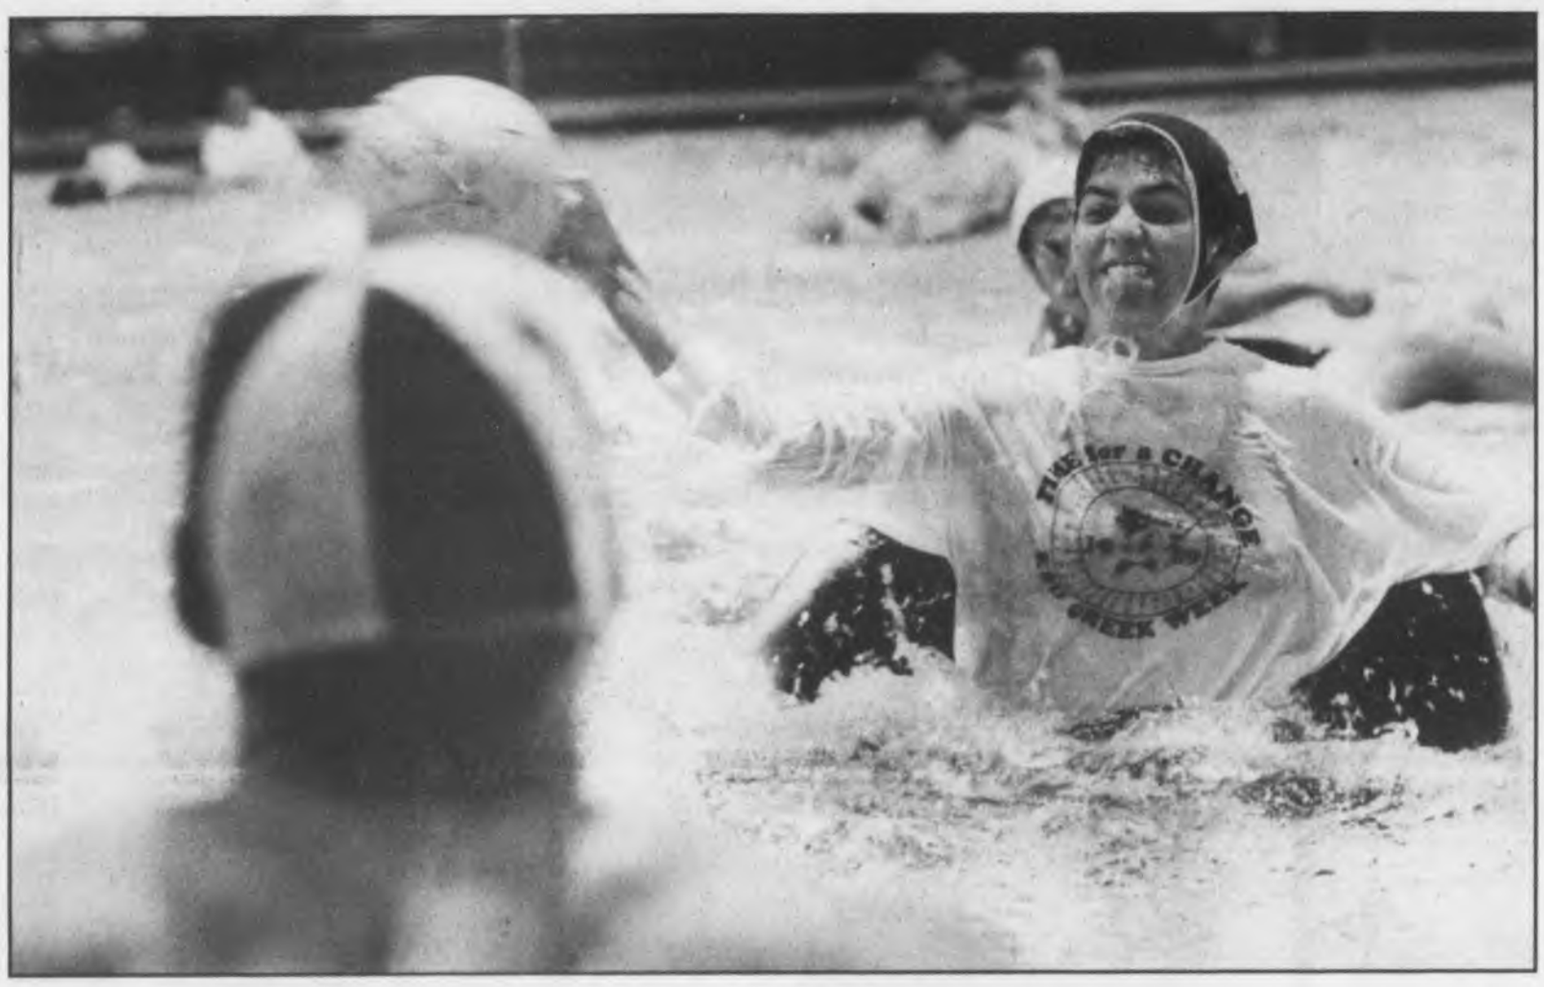
Snyder also said dignity might have been a key.

"I think pride is a real contributing factor," he said. "They were a little embarrassed by the first half of the Nebraska game in particular."

Ochs said pride was at stake.

"It is really important to us," he said. "Because in the Nebraska game, that last touchdown they scored on us really killed us. That is something that we just don't let happen. After that, our coaches and defensive players decided we weren't going to let that happen again."

And it hasn't.



Trailing 38-28 in the Nebraska contest, the Cats gave up a 46-yard scoring jaunt with 29 seconds left that padded the Cornhuskers' lead to 45-28.

Since then, the defense has allowed just one run over 10 yards — a 17-yard scramble by Colorado's Kordell Stewart.

The rejuvenated defense has contributed to the Cats' 6-1-1 record, and with one more victory, K-State will qualify for its second bowl game in school history.

What bowl game would Ochs like to see K-State play in?

"Preferably one on Jan. 1."

Michelle Kuhns, senior in physical education, takes a shot at the goal during the first quarter of play in an inner tube water polo game Wednesday night. Kuhns, playing for the Wailing Idiots, scored on the attempt and led her team in scoring to take their first victory over the Wet Weasels.

INTRAMURALS

Inner tubes provide equal battle field

CHRIS WEAVER
Collegian

In a society in which gender equity seemingly dominates the collegiate athletic climate, the inner-tube water polo intramural league offers a neutral battleground where men and women swim with the same goal in mind — winning the championships.

Wednesday night all gender titles were stripped as each of the eight teams had hopes of capturing the coveted crown.

Only three teams, the Wailing Idiots, Vets 2 and the Thunder Ducks, return this season from last year. Women play a large part in the formation of teams.

"Inner tube water polo isn't worth any points for the intramural competitions so not a lot of fraternities sign up," Adams said. "It's whoever can talk the girls into doing it.

"The reason we started playing water polo was to get a bunch of hot chicks to put on swimsuits," said Tom Donnelly, senior in political science and captain of the Wailing Idiots. "We called girls we thought were pretty fun, and guys we've known all through college to form the team."

Once the first ball of the season was thrown into the pool on Wednesday night, the women took over. The first goal of the season was scored by Michelle Kuhns, senior in physical education, for the Wailing Idiots. She led her team in scoring as they paddled their way past the Wet Weasels.

The Wet Weasels also were powered by a female leading scorer. Katie Stevenson, senior in fine arts, attributed her performance to strategy and luck.

"My strategy was not to drown. I guess it's all just beginners luck. This was just a practice run," she said. "We're going for the title."

Intramural supervisor Chandler Adams did point out that the quest for the championship of the double elimination tournament could and would get pretty heated.

"When you get to the semifinals, it gets real competitive," Adams said. "People start saying 'Gee, we got a chance to win this.' People start throwing each other out of the tubes and getting lots of one-minute penalties."

The intramural athletes will be competing from 7:30 to 10 p.m. on Wednesday and Sunday nights until December 1, when the Super Bowl of intramural inner-tube water polo takes place in the Natatorium. Women and men, paddling side by side.

The rules state that three women and three men must accompany one goalie to comprise a team. Each team member must keep his or her butt in the middle of the inner tube at all times. The men may only throw the ball to women, however the women are allowed to throw the ball to a member of either gender.

The rest of the rules are similar to those of regular water polo, which Adams said are easy to get accustomed to but not well known.

"Most people don't even know the rules," Adams said. "Pretty much the first game people are just getting their feet wet."

VOLLEYBALL

Cats still searching for Big Eight win

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The streak continues.

The K-State volleyball team lost its 25th-straight Big Eight Conference match last night to Iowa State 3-1 in Ahearn Field House.

"We need to think and believe that we can win in the Big Eight," Coach Patti Hagemeyer said, "and we are not doing that right now."

After winning the first game 15-13, the Wildcats went on to lose the next three games 15-12, 15-11 and 15-4. Hagemeyer said after the first game, the team lost their concentration.

"We were extremely focused on winning the first game," Hagemeyer said. "We never doubted that we were going to win in the first game, but the next three games it was obvious that we didn't want to win."

It was especially obvious, Hagemeyer said, in the fourth game as the Cyclones jumped out to a 8-0 lead. Then Iowa State went on a 3-0 and then a 5-0 run to put away the game 15-4.

"In the fourth game we lost total concentration," Hagemeyer said. "We were not responding with the necessary effort that it takes to win."

The loss also marks the 10th straight loss in a row. The last time the Cats won was on Oct. 9, when the they defeated Northeastern Illinois.

In the first game, the Cats jumped out to a 6-0 lead, sparked by a 3-0 run. But the Cyclones battled back to even the score at 9-9. The contest remained close, as the Cats and the Cyclones traded points for the rest of the game. K-State then used a 3-0 run to pull off the 15-13 win.

"I guess the first game was the biggest positive," Hagemeyer said. "We just need to be able to come back and be positive."

"We are fighting to become more focused," Hagemeyer said. "At times when the performance went down, it looked like we didn't want to win."

The Cats were led by Yolanda Young, who finished with 12 kills. Suzanne Hagge and Kate DeClerk both tallied 11 kills each. Angie McKee added 10 kills.

MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL

Maddux proving worth to Braves

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The best way for Greg Maddux to show the Atlanta Braves he was worth the big money was to win a second straight Cy Young Award.

And Maddux did just that Wednesday, joining Sandy Koufax as the only National Leaguers to win the honor in successive seasons.

Maddux was 20-10 with a major league-leading 2.36 ERA in his first season for Atlanta and became the first pitcher to win the award in consecutive years with different teams.

He went 20-11 with a 2.18 ERA in 1992 for the Chicago Cubs, then signed a five-year, $28-million free-agent contract with the Braves.

"You change teams, and you want to make a good first impression," Maddux said.

"I feel like I've done that. I didn't really change anything in the way I pitched. I pretty much tried to do the same things that have always worked in the past."

BACK-TO-BACK

■ Greg Maddux joined Sandy Koufax as the only other National League pitcher to win the Cy Young Award in successive seasons.

Maddux received 22 of the 28 first-place votes in balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America. He easily outdistanced San Francisco's Bill Swift and John Burkett and Braves teammate Tom Glavine — all with more victories but higher ERAs.

"I am surprised," Maddux said from his home in Las Vegas. "I think the most important stat is games won, and Glav and Swift and Burkett all won more than I did."

Koufax won the award in 1965-66 with the Los Angeles Dodgers, when only one Cy Young was presented. Koufax also won in 1963.

"I don't consider myself to be half the pitcher he was," Maddux said. "But I think I still have six or seven or 10 years left."

Beginning in 1967, a winner in each league was selected. Since then, Roger Clemens in 1986-87, Jim Palmer and Denny McLain have been repeat winners in the AL.

The only other pitcher to win the award for different teams was Gaylord Perry — in 1972 with Cleveland and 1978 with San Diego.

He has won three straight Gold Gloves and has been one of the best-hitting pitchers in baseball.

He also is a good baserunner, as he showed this season when he dodged Pittsburgh catcher Don Slaught to score a run.

Just 7-8 a week before the All-Star break, Maddux won 13 of his last 15 decisions in leading the Braves' surge to their third straight NL West championship.

The right-hander made 36 starts and pitched 267 innings, led the league with eight complete games and was third with 197 strikeouts.

"I don't really think about where I rank overall," Maddux said. "I'm sure some day I'll think about those things."

▶OKLAHOMA STATE PICKED NO. 1 IN PRESEASON POLL

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Oklahoma State was picked to win the Big Eight title in basketball, and center Bryant Reeves was named player of the year in a preseason poll of media who cover the league.

Reeves was player of the year last year as a sophomore when he became the first person in league history since Wilt Chamberlain to lead the conference in scoring, rebounds and field-goal percentage. Reeves, who is among four starters returning to the Cowboys, averaged 19.6 points and 10 rebounds per game and had a .621 field-goal percentage.

Oklahoma State got 46 of 60 first-place votes after a 20-11 season last year that ended in the second round of the NCAA tournament.

▶FORMER K-STATE STANDOUT WAIVED BY ATLANTA

Three former Big Eight Conference players were waived Tuesday from the National Basketball Association.

Former K-State standout Steve Henson, who was originally drafted by the the Milwaukee Bucks in the second round after the 1989 season, was released from the Atlanta Hawks.

Henson is K-State's fourth all-time scorer with 1,655 total points and was selected to the first-team all-Big Eight in 1989.

He holds the all-time assists records at K-State with 582, as well as steals with 190.

A four-year letter winner, Henson broke 21 school records and is in the top 10 of 41 statistical categories. He also broke 11 Big Eight records.

He was twice an honorable mention all-American for K-State as a guard.

Henson played in the 1991 and 1992 seasons as a reserve guard for the Bucks. He was then traded to the Golden State Warriors and finally to the Atlanta Hawks before being cut.

Justus Thigpen, a former Iowa State player, was cut by the Utah Jazz, and Poncho Hodges, formerly of Colorado, was waived by the Los Angeles Lakers.

■ Instructor advises national magazine

Many people dream of being interviewed for a highly respected publication such as National Geographic — but few are.

Tim Todd, instructor of plant pathology, said he was happy to get the chance to advise the magazine in his field of expertise — nematodes.

When the magazine called, he said he was excited about it.

"National Geographic is not just for scientists, but a popular magazine read by many people."

The subject of the article was on the American prairie; so, National Geographic visited the Konza Prairie in the Flint Hills.

Todd assisted writers by describing and explaining the purpose of the nematode.

"It's a microscopic round worm. Nematodes are parasites to humans, but the soil is loaded with them. They're beneficial in decomposition and nutrient cycling," he said.

Todd came to K-State from Oklahoma State University. He has taught plant pathology and conducted research and development of resistant varieties of soybeans for 11 years.

Todd has not always been interested in nematodes. He first learned he would prefer researching them in graduate school.

"We work with nematodes that cause disease in crops. The Konza work is the side of my research that's for fun," Todd said.

Other K-State professionals also were interviewed about grasslands. Barbara Hetrick, professor of plant pathology, was interviewed about her research.

"I was pleased that they were going to do a story on prairies. It's always an interesting subject," she said.

Hetrick was not quoted in the October 1993 article titled "Roots of the Sky," but gave input on her specialty, which is beneficial fungi that act like root systems.

"If they were going to do a prairie piece, they had to come here. There is a lot more going on underground than meets the eye," Hetrick said.-

■ Childcare center gets new adviser

The KSU Child Development Center has a new leader who said she hopes to make the lives of K-State students who are parents a little easier.

Lorna Ford is the new director at KSU Child Development Center, located in Jardine Terrace.

Her duties at the development center are to supervise all teachers and work with the parents who have children at the center, which has a capacity of 197.

"I enjoy my job because there is something different every day," Ford said. "I never have the same day."

"My plans are to improve the teacher's salaries and to remodel the classrooms of the center. Also, we are planning to have a carnival in the spring."

There are 100 employees at the center, she said.

"We're happy to have her as our director. She is positive about her future," Ranae Martin, assistant director, said.

The center, which started nine years ago, is a cooperative of parents who spend time at the center and work to keep child-care fees low.

The center has also done fundraising to build more classrooms and playgrounds for the children.

Ford graduated from K-State in 1988 with a bachelor's degree in early childhood development.

She worked at the Manhattan Day Center, after graduation.

Ford was also director at the Fort Riley Child Development Center.

Dale Herspring, former desk officer and Navy Senior Special Liason for the Soviet Union is a fan of high-school football. He commutes to his home in Washington, D.C., to watch his son play the game every Friday night.

A man who can speak fluent Polish, German and Russian and who was a direct correspondent for the U.S. Navy during the Polish Crisis has one main desire in life — high school football.

"Of all the things I have accomplished, my secret passion in life would be coaching high school football," Dale Herspring, department head for political science, said.

Herspring said coaching high school football is the highest level of coaching he would like to get into.

"Going to any higher status than high school coaching is too much of a time commitment for a man as busy as I am," he said.

Herspring, whose family still lives in Washington D.C., commutes on the weekends to see his son, a "6-foot-6" senior offensive lineman weighing in at 275 pounds, play high school football on Friday nights.

"They refer to him as the human torpedo," Herspring said.

Herspring's education includes a bachelor's degree from Stanford, a master's degree from Georgetown and a doctorate from the University of Southern California.

Following his master's degree, Herspring took the foreign service exam enabling him to do ambassador work for the United States in the Soviet Union.

He has established himself as a specialist in the former Soviet Union and in Eastern European affairs by writing a total of 60 articles and six books.

He is a peer of such people as former President Ronald Reagan and Pope John Paul II.

Herspring served in the Navy for 25 years as a Naval Reserve Captain. During this time, he served about two two-year tours in the Pentagon and was given the title Navy Senior Special Liaison to the Soviet Union.

Throughout the Polish Crisis, in the early 1980s, when Poland's government was in shambles and while the Soviet Union threatened to take over and establish a Communist government, Herspring was the Polish desk officer and policy creator who directly reported to President Reagan.

Herspring's duties entailed answering any prominent questions involving the United States' actions regarding the crisis.

"My office had a strong impact on the formation of policies toward Eastern Europe," he said.

His expertise on Eastern Europe will have a favorable effect on the political science department, Linda Richter, professor of political science, said.

"I think he will bring a lot of practical purpose to the department," she said. "He will fill an important niche in the department in Eastern Europe and Russia."

During Herspring's service with the Navy, he was able to give lectures and briefings to local colleges about what was happening abroad.

He continued with his lectures and began to teach after he retired from the service.

Herspring conducted specialized classes and lectures on Eastern Europe for one year at Woodrow Wilson College for National Scholars in Washington D.C., 12 years at Georgetown and one year at the National War College, also in Washington.

Herspring's decision for leaving the Woodrow Wilson College was due to the enticing atmosphere of a smaller city, he said.

"I got tired of D.C. and sick of all the hustle and bustle that goes along with it. Once I came to Manhattan, I got the impression of solid individuals," Herspring said.

"I felt like I could say hello to a lady without her screaming, 'rape'.

"Needless to say, it's a refreshing change."

Dean of ecology witnesses breakdown of Russian Parliament during visit

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

What began as a trip to Russia to discuss academic exchange opportunities resulted in a first-hand account of the Russian Parliament uprising for a K-State faculty member.

Barbara Stowe, dean of human ecology, visited the Moscow Academy of Applied Biotechnology from Oct. 1 to Oct. 10 to see what kinds of interchange may be possible between K-State faculty and students and their Russian counterparts.

Joseph Zayas, professor of food science and human nutrition, arranged the trip through his contacts with the academy.

Zayas got his doctorate in science in 1970 from the Moscow academy.

An agreement for faculty, graduate student and satellite exchange beginning in 1994 was signed by President Jon Wefald and academy Rector Joseph Rogav as a result of the trip, Stowe said.

Before her arrival in Moscow, Russian Parliament members had occupied the building, and there had been increased security measures, Stowe said.

"When we arrived, we took a walking tour of the area around the government buildings," she said.

"We walked by the Russian White House and saw the barricades and the people holding shields that were a rather common sight on television."

The next evening, during an intermission of the circus they were attending, officials suggested that Stowe and her husband leave because they said the lights may go out. They later discovered shots had been fired, Stowe said.

Stowe and her husband returned safely to their motel, 25 miles from the center of Moscow, and spent the evening watching CNN coverage of the uprising with Russian voice-over, she said.

"I called the American Embassy the next morning to see if we should leave," Stowe said.

"We were advised to wait 24 hours and not to come into the center of Moscow, which was perfectly good advice as far as we were concerned."

Stowe said she was never extremely worried about the situation because the uprising was confined to about a one-square-mile area, she said.

"It was a very memorable, extremely interesting experience," Stowe said.

Stowe also met with Russian Minister of Education Alexander Tikhonov, who agreed to provide hardware for the satellite uplink, downlink exchange.

The satellite exchange will provide the opportunity for both institutions to transmit and receive seminars and in-class lectures, among a range of other possibilities, Stowe said.

"We have yet to explore the possibilities for exchanges, and they could well include many interested parties across the campus," she said.

The agreement will be beneficial for both universities, as students and faculty will have the opportunity to attend each university doing research and attend classes, Zayas said.

"There is a lot we can learn from the Russian scientists, and there is a lot they can learn from us," he said.

"This will benefit both sides."

Barbara Stowe

Exchanges inevitably occur between Russia and the United States, and this is K-State's way to help support those positive interactions between countries, Stowe said.

"We have a responsibility to students who live in a new world order that is all interconnected in a matter of seconds," she said. "So that has to be an important part of the educational experience."

Catherine Cozzarelli, assistant professor of psychology, will testify in a Canadian court, about the causes of depression and slowed recovery of women,who have had abortions. She began research concerning abortion protestors while she was in graduate school.

Psychology professor researches protestors

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

A K-State assistant professor of psychology will be traveling to Canada to lend her expertise about the effects that abortion protests have on women.

Catherine Cozzarelli will be testifying in Toronto, Ontario, before the provincial government sometime in the near future. For nearly six years, she has been studying the various psychological factors many women encounter while coping with and recovering from abortion.

She said she inadvertently began her involvement while attending graduate school.

"Someone else had started it," she said. "The person left, so I picked it up."

In addition to her evidence, Cozzarelli said other experts will give their testimony. The provincial government will decide whether to pass a law banning abortion protesters outside clinics.

Cozzarelli said she has found that abortion protests have caused women who have had abortions to be more depressed, and it slows the recovery process. However, there are ways to alleviate the effects of protesters.

"Having pro-choice escorts can help diffuse the impact on women," she said.

In addition to the pro-life abortion picketing, she has broken down her study into several individual factors that may cause problems in coping with the abortion and the delay of recovery.

She said she has discovered that when a woman receives social support from family, friends or boyfriends, it speeds the recovery process.

"It affects people who have an abortion if the family does not support them," she said.

Male accompaniment to the abortion is not always positive, Cozzarelli said.

"For women who feel pretty confident about it, it is fine for them. For women who are shaky about this, the man may cause more stress," she said.

Cozzarelli said she has also found that certain kinds of women are not able deal with the effects of abortion as well as others.

"Women who are younger, married or experiencing religious and moral conflict have a tougher time dealing with the abortion," she said.

With the help of a grant from the National Institute of Health, Cozzarelli is now focusing her attention on long-term abortion effects.

"We have just collected our first phase of data from Buffalo," she said. "We want to know if any have experienced post-traumatic stress disorder."

Cozzarelli said she would like her research to become well-known, but she realizes that the general public may not be interested.

"There are clear, implied implications on the effects of abortion, but the hard part is finding out how to get information out to people who are not in academia," she said.

Cozzarelli received a bachelor's degree in geology and philosophy and a master's and doctorate in social psychology from the State University of New York at Buffalo. She has been at K-State for two years.

Military spouses find jobs on campus

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

Military spouses employed by K-State said there are pitfalls and benefits to being transient in their careers.

They may be professional, versatile and experienced, but it is difficult for military spouses to find specialized jobs in Manhattan, Fort Riley and Junction City.

"I was just reading an article on the changing economy," said Ann Byers, a military spouse and information specialist for the Rural Clearinghouse of Lifelong Education and Development, which is part of the College of Education.

She said according to the article, the trend is not for linear career progression like in the past, but rather career shifting.

"Military spouses may be more competitive than people who have stayed in one location all their lives because they are forced to shift careers every three to four years," Byers said.

Sometimes it's hard to be a military spouse, she said.

"It's always harder when you move to anywhere and don't have a lot of contacts," she said.

Cynthia Luna, an office assistant for the Department of Human Development and Family Studies, said she sent out a dozen resumes to employers in Manhattan over a span of three months, but she never had any response.

She found her job on campus in a newspaper advertisement, she said.

Luna, whose husband will be stationed in Kansas for two years and 10 months, said she believes several obstacles prevented her from being hired.

"I don't know if they thought I was overqualified," she said. "But people I would eventually talk to would tell me it's because you're a military wife."

She said it shouldn't matter how long her husband is stationed at Fort Riley; employers shouldn't stereotype people.

"I can't guarantee how long we will be here, but I'm a good worker," Luna said. "If somebody likes my experience, and if they're professional, then they should give people a chance."

A person at the civil-service counter told Luna it was almost impossible to get a job at Fort Riley anymore.

"She said that to get a job on Fort Riley somebody has to die," Luna said.

It was even more complicated for Doris Elieff to find a specialized field because she is from another country. Elieff is an office assistant at the KSU Fort Riley office, which is part of Continuing Education Academic Outreach

Elieff, who is from Bayreuth, Germany, said she went to the job service in Junction City almost every week when she first got here in October 1991.

The job service in Junction City told her non-citizens are not allowed to work for the federal civil service if they don't have their citizenship, she said.

After looking into options in Salina because of being frustrated at other places, Elieff found she could work for the state.

"I didn't know that I could work for state civil service," Elieff said. "They told me — period — you are not an American citizen. You cannot work for civil service."

The person at the job service in Salina suggested she take the civil-service exam for state jobs, Elieff said.

"I was flabbergasted because I didn't know that I even had that option," she said.

Elieff said she felt like a drifter wandering around applying for jobs that didn't pay large salaries.

"So, for six months, I applied for jobs that paid $4.50 and $5 an hour, but yet expected you to almost have a master's degree," Elieff said.

Elieff said employers expect a person to be able to type 60 words a minute, have experience, be knowledgeable and yet only want low wages.

"I honestly don't know how people actually make it at $4.50 and $5 an hour," she said. "It's just ridiculous what the wages are around here."

Job shortages was one of the barriers she encountered during her job hunt.

"I wanted to stay in my field, and I didn't want to work for Burger King or McDonald's," Elieff said.

Elieff got a job on campus after she took the state civil-service test and a job opening came up.

Both Elieff and Luna said K-State was the only employer that did not ask how long each of their husbands would be at Fort Riley.

"I went on two interviews, and they would ask me more questions about my husband than they did me," Luna said. "K-State interviews were the only one that didn't ask."

Military spouses have trouble finding work because Fort Riley is the largest employer in the area, and they are doing very little hiring," said Mary Harwell, family member employment assistant program manager at Fort Riley.

"Consequently, well-qualified family members who normally would work at Fort Riley are competing with local applicants," she said.

The Family Member Assistant Program tries to get military spouses to look at all their options.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Dear Cassandra,

I have a problem, and I hope you can help. I am new up here, and I don't know that many people.

The people who do know me will tell you I am very shy around women. I find it hard to talk to them. The women I do know aren't attracted to me. I really don't care about looks.

What I want is someone I can talk to. Someone who is fun to be with. I want someone who I can snuggle under a blanket and drink hot chocolate with on a cold night.

I thought that I would never find this person until one day I was reading the Collegian. I came across your column.

You seem like the quick-witted, fun-loving person I am looking for. I know this sounds funny because I don't even know what you're like. But it doesn't seem to matter because I can't get you out of my mind.

Cassandra, I believe that when you find a good thing, you should go for it. I don't believe in wasting time. I guess what I am trying to say is ... Cassandra, will you marry me?

Sincerely,
Madly in Love

Dear Madly,

Dude, man — are you, like, totally serious?

Sure I'm quick-witted and even fun-loving sometimes — whatever "fun-loving" means. But you know, I really prefer Cafe Mocha under my blankets on those cold, cold nights. And snuggling is groovy, but honestly, I'm a big bed hog.

Further, I like to cocoon with the blankets wrapped under my feet and tucked in at my sides. That just doesn't leave room for another body, see.

Besides, you don't even know me. I could be a crazed, spike-wearing lesbian or even a soft-spoken, cashmere sweater-wearing lesbian, albeit quick-witted and fun-loving. I could be married or seriously involved with a large-handed basketball player from North Carolina.

So, I'm sorry, Madly — in the face of all of these overwhelming obstacles, I just think our romance would be sadly doomed from its inception. Sigh ...

Band does sexy songs

HAROLD RING
Collegian

A lot of musical acts are jumping on the alternative bandwagon, but not Love Jones.

Love Jones comes from Kentucky and is here to surprise you.

REVIEW

Love Jones looked back — way, way back — to find its influences. There are no '60s garage, no '70s punk, no '80s hardcore, not even a hint of '90s crap influences. This band is a lounge act. The perfect band to sip a gin and tonic to at 3 a.m.

Love Jones is made up of old punk rockers, hardcore punks and metal heads. These guys should be making Harry Connick Jr. nervous.

The album, "Here's to the Losers," has horns, an organ and congas. The songs are jazzy but not boring, and the lyrics are humorous. Humor in lyrics can be distracting. The humor on this release is in the background, and vocalists' voices blend well with the music.

The songs on the album are sexy love songs. This would be a good album to warm up an otherwise cold date. Hell, this mix of tunes could even inspire dancing and wanton happiness.

The production on "Here's to the Losers" is great. Everything is clear and up front. Nothing hides behind effects to make things sound good. All three singers sang through the same mike at recording sessions.

Join the Love Jones revolution against terrible "MTV alternative" music. This is the best thing to come out of Kentucky since bluegrass.

Pulling no punches, this band makes great music. After you buy this album and tell everyone you know how great the band is, tell one of the promoters in this town how you feel. Maybe they will get them to play here.

All that praise may be too much, but this band does offer an alternative.

There are no guitar solos or screaming guitars. It's just a lot of good music. Buy it now.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Buy a lamb, and see if it follows you to school one day.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Tater tots are overrated. Try a plate of wholesome broccoli.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Learn a new language. Listen to language tapes while you sleep.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): New pets are always fun. Go find an exotic-looking insect.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Forget "Melrose Place" as a role model for life. It would be too confusing.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do something to make your toenails curl. It's painful, but very fashionable.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): It's time to make the donuts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your arches are falling, and there isn't a damn thing you can do to stop them.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Eat more Spam, the official snack food of the 1996 Summer Olympic Games.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Annoy your roommates. Wake them up in the middle of the night and tell them that Barney just committed suicide on the front lawn.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Start your own silkworm farm. Them little critters are cute — and functional.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Keep your pet slug away from the salt shaker.

Burton's film surreal

KELLY-ANN GERAGHTY
Collegian

Yes, Virginia, there is a Boogie Man.

Stephen King meets Walt Disney in Touchstone Pictures' "The Nightmare Before Christmas."

REVIEW

The movie is Tim Burton's surreal brainchild. He came up with the story and the characters years ago while working at Disney.

Burton's film is a dreamland of musical animation and anything but a nightmare.

Jack the Pumpkin King, the main character in the film, is the genius behind Halloweentown's annual celebration on the eve of All Saint's Day.

However, Jack's got a problem.

He has been the driving force behind the goblins and ghouls for so long that his creative juices are almost as dried up as he is.

Burton reveals some underlying messages in this movie.

One message is if it ain't broke, don't fix it.

MOVIE INFO

■ "The Nightmare Before Christmas" is now playing at 7:15 and 9:30 p.m. at Seth Child Cinemas.

Jack is such a egomaniac he feels he can be a success at controlling anything he attempts, even a proven holiday like Christmas. Big mistake.

Another message presented is children can be devils in angels' clothing. The Boogie Man's three kids, Lock, Shock and Barrel, are rug rats from hell.

These kids do Jack's bidding and find pleasure in causing problems for others.

The elements that tie the film up into a neat little package are the music, lyrics and score by Danny Elfman.

His hauntingly melodic songs grip the audience in a sinister half-nelson.

"The Nightmare Before Christmas" is a fascinating, freaky flick that's adult entertainment at its best.

Aristide wants resistance gone

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide on Wednesday ruled out further negotiations with Haiti's military leadership over anything but the removal of coup leaders from power.

He spoke on the day the United Nations had planned to begin talks between Aristide representatives and the army commander, Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras, in an attempt to salvage a U.N.-mediated agreement on Aristide's return.

A U.N. representative refused to comment Wednesday on whether Cedras had said if the military would take part in the discussions, which were to deal with points in the accord that have not been carried out.

"I am not interested in his reply. I am interested in his departure," Aristide said in an interview with Radio France International, rebroadcast over the Port-au-Prince station Radio Metropole.

"If it is a question of a dialogue that culminates in respect for the agreement — that is, the departure of Cedras and his high command ... yes, I am interested and ready to participate. If it is a question of stalling maneuvers, absolutely no."

The statement seemed to harden the stalemate between the military and the fragile interim government named by Aristide after he and Cedras signed the U.N. accord in July.

Cedras presided Wednesday at the graduation of 28 new lieutenants from the military academy, but in his speech he did not address the issue of further talks.

The cadets were to have graduated in January, but the ceremony was moved up because of the emergency situation, said an officer, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Representatives for Prime Minister Robert Malval said the decision on his government's participation in the talks was up to Aristide.

Under the U.N. agreement, Aristide was to have returned by last Saturday. But parliament could not form a quorum to pass laws on amnesty and separation of the police and the military that were specified in the agreement.

Another provision of the accord was the early retirement of Cedras, who refused to step down until an amnesty law was passed. He argued that the amnesty decree issued by Aristide could be revoked.

The United Nations and Aristide contend the agreement is still in effect. But Cedras said that because both he and Aristide signed it, it cannot be extended beyond Oct. 30 unless both agree.

Meanwhile, traffic in this normally bustling capital dwindles daily because of the oil embargo imposed by the United Nations on Oct. 19 to pressure the military to allow Aristide's return.

"What we will see now is the playing out of the scene of disintegration until there is some accommodation with the demands of those who staged the coup," said Herard Jacotte, a top aide in the two military governments that followed the coup that ousted Aristide.

Phelps clan to picket Jesse Jackson's speech

TARA EUBANKS
Collegian

The upcoming Landon Lecture featuring the Rev. Jesse Jackson will mark the return to campus of another speaker — Fred Phelps, founder and preacher of the Westboro Baptist Church in Topeka.

Phelps' anti-gay crusade and picketing at the Pat Robertson Landon Lecture last month drew much controversy about his tactics in practicing freedom of speech.

Phelps and members of his congregation held signs reading "God hates FAGS" and "Hate is a virtue of the Bible." The picketing was done to protest the National Organization for Women's movement and the NOW's mission to stop all discrimination, including that toward homosexuals.

Nov. 29 will be the next appearance of Phelps and his notorious signs. He will picket against Jackson for his belief in accepting anyone as a minority.

"He preaches for sodomites and baby killers," Phelps said. "He has departed from the Baptist faith."

Phelps said his activities in promoting the black minority have been part of much of his career, and he said he prides himself in speaking on behalf of Martin Luther King Jr.

"Jackson has betrayed the civil-rights movement of Martin Luther King Jr. and has put into question the whole idea behind the Rainbow Coalition," Phelps said.

"He has allowed fags to piggyback on this movement and has let the fags hijack the Freedom Train," he said.

Phelps said homosexuals are not a legitimate minority. The belief of equal opportunities for blacks and all minorities does not include homosexuals, he said.

"Fags commit overt criminal conduct by committing sodomy. Bank robbers and whoremongers know they are wrong and stay behind the closet doors," Phelps said.

Phelps and his supporters plan to arrive at about 9 a.m. on Nov. 29 to picket in front of Bramlage Coliseum.

Phelps' self-titled, old-school congregation pickets between 25 and 30 events a week.

"It's like Kentucky Fried Chicken finger-lickin' fun," Phelps said. "It's the best time I've had in over 63 years."

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

Jocelyn Viterna, junior in sociology, pre-law and Latin American studies, gets a hug after being named K-State Ambassador during halftime of the K-State vs. Oklahoma football game. Viterna and Dale Silvius, senior in management and marketing, will represent the University at various activities throughout the next year.

Student ambassadors selected

Viterna, Silvius will represent K-State students

JILL PARADISE
Collegian

Two K-State students, whose blood runs purple, have the opportunity to show their pride for the University during the next year.

Jocelyn Viterna, junior in sociology and pre-law with a secondary in Latin American studies, and Dale Silvius, senior in management and marketing, were elected by the student body to serve as ambassadors for K-State. They will join the ranks of Mitch Holthus and other K- State alumni.

"They will represent the student body in front of alumni, prospective students and parents at alumni club events and student recruitment programs," said Becky Klingler, director of constituent programs for the KSU Alumni Association.

The students first had to fill out an application for the Student Alumni Board.

After they turned in the application, they had interviews with students and last year's ambassadors. It was then narrowed down, and the remaining students had interviews with faculty and alumni. The faculty and alumni chose three female and male students to run on the final ballot.

Both Silvius and Viterna said they were surprised to hear their names announced.

"It was a rush," said Viterna, who is from Topeka. "I had pretty much convinced myself that I hadn't gotten it, so I was very surprised.

"K-State has invested a lot in me, and in return, I would like to help invest in the future of the University by meeting with perspective students and maintaining good relations with alumni."

Silvius also said this is an opportunity to give back to K-State.

"I grew up being around K-State for as long as I can remember," Silvius, who is from Wellsville, said. "I consider being an ambassador the highest honor you can receive from the faculty and your peers as a student."

Silvius and Viterna will be traveling all over the state to every alumni event, and they will attend a few events outside the state.

They will automatically become members of the SAB, Klingler said.

Some of their duties will consist of helping with class reunions and the Homecoming Dance. They also will be attending college nights at high schools around the state.

The two ambassadors will maintain their positions for one full year, including this upcoming summer.

"I know we will be traveling a lot," Viterna said. "They've said between 80 to 95 trips in the upcoming year. I'm looking forward to meeting many different people."

Both students agree that their hard work paid off and that is going to be a busy year.

Silvius said that hard work, perseverance, being surrounded by good people and a little bit of luck are the factors that contributed to his victory.

"When your selling a product you believe in, like I believe in K-State, it tends to make the job pretty easy," Silvius said.

Police say not to rely on others for safety

crosswalk safety, Beckom said.

"What we're doing right now is reviewing the enforcement processes that we've used," he said. "We are trying for closer monitoring of crosswalks. We're trying to reach the public and get people to think and abide by the rules."

Strict warnings, speeding tickets and tickets for traffic violations to pedestrians and drivers entering the crosswalk dangerously are several deterrents employed by campus police, he said.

However, tickets can not eliminate all reckless behavior of pedestrians or drivers. The advice Beckom said he gives is to look out for yourself.

"Look out for yourself first and others second," he said. "Don't rely on someone else to watch out for you. People need to think about what they're doing and be more focused and not place full faith and reliance on others to keep them safe and from being injured.

"For the pedestrian, think of yourself as No. 1. You're the most vulnerable person out there, the most fragile part of that system. You bend a lot easier than a truck fender."

Drivers should be more careful, Luton said.

"If you hit them, you may have to buy them," he said. "Be careful. Don't drive so fast. If you hit somebody, blood's awful hard to get off of a car."

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD
Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Center to be gathering place for Muslims

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

A new Islamic center is being constructed at 1224 Hilton Heights in Manhattan.

The Islamic Center of Manhattan is a mosque that will serve as a center for the Muslim Community Association.

Muslims will gather at the center for prayer five times each day. The center also will be used for general meetings, social activities, lectures and inter-faith dialogues, said Khalid Kebbati, research assistant with the international grains program and treasurer of the Muslim Community Association.

"In the mosque, we can conduct all types of events besides prayer. We can have social gatherings and weddings," Kebbati said.

"It is a center of constant interaction for Muslims.

"It is much more than just a building. It is probably the center of the Muslim life."

The new building will replace the smaller existing Islamic center, located at 619 Sunset Ave. Lack of space for the nearly 300 members to attend daily prayers and lack of parking space necessitated the construction of a new structure, Kebbati said.

A large basement with an activity room, a kitchen, a main hall — which will be used as a prayer room for more than 300 people — office space and a library all will be included in the new center.

Planning for the building project has been underway for about three years, and funding has come entirely through donations, Syed Ameenuddin, research associate for the division of biology, said.

"There has been lots of local and individual labor involved. Lots of people have used their talents," Ameenuddin said. "It really has been a community effort."

The project is set to be completed by January 1994, Ameenuddin said.

Construction, which began in August, was hampered by wet summer weather, Kebbati said.

Although plans for the opening are still in the early stages, Kebbati said he encourages people to visit the mosque when construction is completed.

"Anyone who is interested should come meet with us the day of the inauguration," he said. "We want to have the best relations with the rest of the religious groups and with the community of Manhattan in general."

Civilians forced to flee Bosnia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Muslim-led government troops stormed through an isolated Croat district Wednesday, sending thousands of civilians fleeing into the countryside and leaving others cowering in cellars.

Government soldiers surrounded and entered Vares, the main town in the area 20 miles north of Sarajevo, after taking a string of Croat villages to the north, U.N. officials said.

About 15,000 Croat civilians fled, including 5,000 who sought shelter in a quarry southeast of Vares, said Ray Wilkinson, a U.N. relief representative in Sarajevo.

"The remaining 10,000 are basically on the run in the forests in the surrounding area, mostly in large groups," Wilkinson said.

Others were said to be holed up in cellars.

"We consider most people now at risk up there," he said later Wednesday. "Who knows what's going on there? The situation is so fluid."

The advance on Vares followed weeks of violence in the area, including the massacre of at least 25 Muslim civilians in the village of Stupni Do late last month. It also underscored the ascendance of the military in setting boundaries between Serbs, Croats and Muslims, because diplomats and politicians have been unable to agree on a plan to end 19 months of civil war.

Three Nordic U.N. peacekeepers were injured Wednesday night when their vehicle hit a land mine east of Vares, the Swedish news agency TT reported.

The identities of the soldiers, who belonged to a unit of Swedish and Norwegian troops, were not immediately available. Their injuries were not life-threatening, the agency said, quoting a Swedish Defense Ministry official.

Many of the civilians fleeing Wednesday apparently feared reprisals. U.N. officials said there were widespread reports of rapes, beatings and looting, but there was no confirmation of any atrocities by either side.

Capt. Niels Pederson, a representative for U.N. peacekeepers, said government troops appeared to have destroyed the Croats' Bobovac Brigade, whose soldiers were blamed by U.N. officials for the Stupni Do massacre.

He said the Bosnian army had captured two school buildings in Vares where the brigade had been holding an unknown number of Muslims. Their fate was not immediately known, but Pedersen said about 680 Muslims were sheltered near a U.N. battalion based in Vares.

He said the Bobovac Brigade's headquarters in Vares had been burned, and only pockets of resistance remained.

Bosnian Serbs, who have dominated fighting in the 19-month-old ethnic war, appeared to remain behind their front lines three miles southeast of Vares.

In neighboring Croatia, state-run radio said Croatian President Franjo Tudjman had urged President Alija Izetbegovic of Bosnia to call off the Vares offensive, he said he feared a program against fleeing refugees.

Croatian Foreign Minister Mate Granic also warned of serious and dangerous consequences in relations with Bosnia.

Bosnia's new prime minister, Haris Silajdzic, said the aim of the Vares offensive was to protect our people there.

"We are not going to allow another massacre," he said.

Wilkinson said some Croat refugees, including many from the quarry near Vares, had sought refuge behind Serb lines. The nearest Croat-held territory was about 25 miles to the west, across territory held by government forces.

A Serb TV journalist in Pale, the Serb headquarters east of Sarajevo, said about 2,000 Croats had crossed into Serb-held territory southeast of Vares.

In all, Serbs in Pale expected about 15,000 refugees and were planning to transport them to the port of Split in Croatia, Bosnian Serb television said.

The Vares area had a prewar population of 22,000, about 41 percent Croat and 30 percent Muslim.

Changes possible in security rules

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Private security guards could replace police on some airport patrols, and curbside baggage check-in might continue during terrorist alerts, if the government eases security requirements in response to complaints from airports and airlines.

Those are among rule changes the government has drafted as a way of eliminating red tape and excessive costs during terrorist alerts such as those prompted by the Persian Gulf War and the World Trade Center bombing in New York.

Consumer advocates and at least one police union leader say public safety may be jeopardized if the new rules are adopted.

But the Federal Aviation Administration insists the changes will save money and simplify procedures without lowering the nation's guard.

The new security rules have been distributed by the government to airports and airlines. A copy of that draft was obtained by the Associated Press.

The FAA says the rules are not in effect yet, but unlike most federal rules, the security regulations can be implemented without seeking public comment on them. It is not clear what, if any, further steps are required to implement the new rules or whether the FAA will say publicly when they have gone into effect.

"If there's an extra need for security, let them hire more police officers."

GUS DANESE
HEAD OF THE NEW YORK-NEW JERSEY PORT AUTHORITY POLICE BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION

Critics are not buying the FAA's assurances that safety will not be compromised.

"At the highest stage of alert, a private guard doesn't have the clout of a police officer. I don't think that's the place for a rent-a-cop," said Frank McGuire, who edits Security Intelligence Report, a newsletter that deals with airline safety.

Curbside baggage check-in, which now is halted during terrorist alerts, also could be a problem, McGuire said. "It's considered the weakest link in the security chain."

"The industry is expert at negotiating to avoid the more costly and inconvenient countermeasures," said Geraldine Frankoski of the Aviation Consumer Action Project. "There is no justification for excluding a bona fide public representative from developing these standards."

Gus Danese, head of the New York-New Jersey Port Authority Police Benevolent Association, said, "If there's an extra need for security, let them hire more police officers. They're basically $5-an-hour private guards." They are not trained to handle law-enforcement emergencies, he said.

The FAA promises to be more selective in ordering terrorist countermeasures that would impose relatively high operational and economic burdens on airports and air carriers, according to the draft rules.

The FAA does not make its security plans public to avoid tipping off terrorists. The plans call for increasingly stringent measures.

Elements added to NAFTA

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — After months of haggling and some last-minute modifications, President Clinton sent Congress the final version of legislation to put in force the North American Free Trade Agreement.

The bill was sent to Capitol Hill on Wednesday after Mexico and the United States reached agreement at 4 a.m. on new side deals designed to protect U.S. sugar, citrus and vegetable producers, administration officials said.

Even so, Clinton conceded he still lacks the votes for the pact — which would lower tariffs and other trade barriers among the United States, Mexico and Canada — but predicted he would when the House acts on Nov. 17.

"We don't have them today, but we're getting there," he said.

Congressional committees have already worked with the administration in shaping the final measure, and the legislation cannot be amended further.

Officials said privately that Clinton still appears about 40 votes short — even with some of the 11th-hour sweeteners.

NEW NAFTA ELEMENTS

- A series of reports would be required to moniter how the pact is affecting the U.S. ecnomy and industries.
- It will be easier for manufacturers of appliances to prove they are hurt by Mexican imports.
- U.S. Customs Service will be required to monitor imports of custom television sets to make sure picture tubes aren't being produced outside the United States, Canada and Mexico.
- Mexico will speed up it's phasing out of high tariffs on U.S.-made glass, wine and appliances.

The new items — designed almost exclusively to woo undecided lawmakers — included help for businesses ranging from appliance manufacturers to broommakers to a $10 million authorization to build a trade study center in Texas.

The pact, scheduled to go into effect Jan. 1 and be phased in over 15 years, would create the world's largest economic market, with 363 million people and a combined domestic product of $6.3 trillion.

It is being strongly opposed by organized labor and by Texas billionaire Ross Perot, who claim companies will move plants to Mexico to take advantage of low wages.

Rep. James Traficant, D-Ohio, an opponent, called it a sad day and said that if the agreement is enacted, "NAFTA will produce a national workers' strike ... NAFTA will produce a major third political party by the turn of the century."

Supporters concede there might be some initial dislocations, but they say the pact will create more U.S. jobs in the long term by opening new markets to U.S. goods.

"This will create the world's largest tariff-free zone, from the Canadian arc to the Mexican tropics," Clinton said.

The measure implements a pact initially negotiated by the Bush administration.

"If we turn away from NAFTA, we risk losing a natural trade advantage that should come to the United States as Mexico and the rest of Latin America build market economies and stronger democracies," Clinton added.

The measure continues to have more GOP than Democratic support in the House. About 100 House Republicans are for it, compared with about 70 Democrats, according to congressional and administration aides.

Opponents claim they have about 210 votes, within striking distance of the 218 needed for a majority. The United States already has a free-trade agreement with Canada, so most of the attention has focused on Mexico.

U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor told a briefing that one of the last deals cut was an agreement reached earlier.

Aid to be sent to fire victims

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton, calling the fires in Southern California an agonizing tragedy, is promising more federal help, including an immediate $15 million.

"You are not facing these fires alone," Clinton said Wednesday night in a five-minute satellite address intended for Southern California.

A wildfire that began on Tuesday claimed 200 homes as it roared through the seaside town of Malibu, charring 35,000 acres. It was the latest in a series of fires that has burned more than 1,000 homes and 215,000 acres in Southern California in the past 1-1/2 weeks.

He praised efforts of those fighting the fires.

"Until these fires are out, those in the inland empire, and the new ones tearing through the Santa Monica Mountains, our work will continue, and we won't rest either," Clinton said.

"With these new fires, the federal response has already begun. We've provided 37 air tankers, 100 fire crews amounting to 2,000 federal firefighters, 86 fire engines and 22 helicopters," Clinton said.

He said the $15 million would go to the California Office of Emergency Services to help pay for the state and local firefighting costs.

Clinton said the amount would be supplemented as further costs are identified in the coming weeks.

WILDFIRES SPREAD DEVASTATION

Damage Control

By Thursday, firefighters had contained 70 percent of the 18,500-acre wildfire, one in a series of blazes that have destroyed 1,150 homes, blackened 200,000 acres and injured nearly 200 people in Southern California since Oct. 26. Several were blamed on arson.

Malibu Arsonist

Some $255,000 in reward money was posted for information leading to the capture and conviction of the Malibu arsonist, with the latest $5,000 pledged by the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. Other money was offered previously by Gov. Pete Wilson, the city of Los Angeles, insurance companies, an entertainment executive and others.

Outside Los Angeles

■ Firefighters surrounded half of an 8,000-acre wildfire in Riverside County, 80 miles east of Los Angeles, that destroyed or damaged 17 structures, injured six people and forced hundreds to leave their homes.

■ A 1,500-acre fire in San Diego County that threatened homes near Poway was brought under control late Wednesday, firefighters said.

■ In south-central Washington, a wildfire burned 2,000 acres near West Richland. Three homes were destroyed and a fourth damaged. By late Wednesday, the fire was controlled.

Screenwriter dies in wildfire

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MALIBU, Calif. — Firefighters strengthened their hold today on flames in coastal mountains, and police searched for an arsonist who ignited the inferno that destroyed 200 homes and killed a film director.

Duncan Gibbins, 41, died Wednesday of burns suffered a day earlier, becoming the first person killed in the wildfires that began burning across Southern California nine days ago.

The British screenwriter and director, whose credits included "Fire With Fire," about a forbidden love affair, and "Third Degree Burn," a detective film, had safely fled his rented cottage. But he had headed back to rescue a cat, said Peter Alexander, who owns the house. The cat was found later, singed but alive.

A man who had hopped into a vehicle to look for Gibbins and became engulfed in flames was in critical condition today.

Damp sea air today helped 5,000 firefighters battling the blaze around this community of mansions and ranches owned by Hollywood's rich and famous. Some firefighters napped amid their trucks; others battled hot spots in the hills.

Malibu was mostly calm, with virtually no wind to even stir the ashes among charred beams and twisted metal fixtures of obliterated homes. The forecast called for the rising humidity and quiet winds to last through Friday.

"We're finally getting a break," Inspector Dan Ertel of the Los Angeles County Fire Department said. Just one house burned Wednesday. But Ertel warned, "If the winds pick up, it's the same old thing."

The fire was 70 percent contained, Inspector Steve Knevelbaard said today. More than 900 fire engines and 18 aircraft were in use.

On Wednesday afternoon, the flames jumped Topanga Canyon on the eastern side of Malibu and threatened to move toward the densely populated Pacific Palisades section of Los Angeles,

Panel created to study lack of library funds

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

A committee has been formed to develop a long-term solution to Farrell Library's financial woes.

Farrell announced the cutting of $220,000 worth of periodicals early this semester because of an increase in the inflation rate of as much as 10 percent.

Concerns from faculty and administration arose, which led to the formation of the committee.

The committee was created to address concerns and to hear input from faculty members. Solutions are being formulated to increase funds for the ailing library budget.

"The cancellation is a cumulative problem," Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said.

President Jon Wefald said the library needs $220,000 to offset the high inflation rate.

This is not a cut in the library's budget, Wefald said. The publishers of some periodicals have been increasing their subscription prices since 1987.

The committee is composed of Hobrock, Provost James Coffman, Vice President for Administration and Finance Thomas Rawson and Gwen Wilson, associate professor of architecture.

Lack of funds has been an eight-year problem for the library, Hobrock said.

It will continue unless the University develops a long-term plan to stop it, he said.

The strategies the committee is exploring to alleviate the funding problem include summary allocation of University funds, development of endowments for library funds, and a technological infrastructure so library users will be able to receive articles from other libraries within a day or two.

"We want everyone to understand the problem and its solutions or its non-solutions," Hobrock said.

Hobrock said the administration realizes the University needs a five-year strategy to solve a majority of the financial problems.

"This must be considered a University problem, not a library problem," he said.

Hobrock said the committee has discussed this issue with KSU-Salina, and the colleges of Arts and Sciences and Agriculture.

"The level of discussion with the departments has been gratifying," he said.

Peter Nicholls, dean of arts and sciences, said it was a productive meeting.

"Dean Hobrock outlined the problem with the inflation on the periodicals," he said.

Questions were raised about the various ways to increase the funding of the library, including grant-overhead money and endowments. People are concerned about the increasing inflation rates, Nicholls said.

"I think we got some ideas out in the open. We obviously haven't solved the problem, but we got the concern out on the table," he said.

"This must be considered a University problem, not a library problem."

BRICE HOBROCK
DEAN OF LIBRARIES

Specifically within the College of Arts and Sciences, Nicholls said any reductions on subscriptions will have a negative effect on faculty and students who use the library.

In addition to the committee, Wefald has met with the faculty leadership group, the deans of the colleges, the Faculty Senate executive committee and the Faculty Senate library committee.

Wefald said they are working to develop a variety of initiatives to resolve funding problems.

"We will solve this problem, and we will find the money," Wefald said.

Wefald said the committee is first going to deal with the short-term problems and will eventually develop a major endowment for the library with the years to come.

"The University is working as a team," he said.

Hobrock said the proposed cut of periodicals is still in the works, and the list of cuttings from each department has been prepared.

"We want to see how the long-term plan develops. We don't know what the outcomes will be. We are assuming they will be cut," he said.

They will know more about it when the Kansas Legislature votes on a proposed $3.5 million to fund regents libraries in this coming session, Hobrock said.

"The money will go towards technology," he said.

Budget cuts hurt chemistry students

BRIEFLY

■ 600 people signed a petition to reinstate the chemistry help room

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

Gary Morris, freshman in architectural engineering, and 1,400 other chemistry students got a taste of what legislative cutbacks can do to education, when a help room was ended because of budget cuts.

The $11,000 program, which had been in operation for about 25 years, had to be cut when the chemistry department's budget was cut.

The room is a place where beginning-level chemistry students can go to get tutoring.

Morris didn't take these cuts lying down. He started a petition to reinstate the help room. Morris turned in a petition with 600 signatures to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences last week.

"I hadn't had any chemistry before," Morris said. "I was going to sign up for a pre-chemistry class, but my adviser told me to go ahead and take chemistry because there was a help room."

Dale Hawley, head of the chemistry department, said the help room was created because of the size of the lecture courses.

"It is hard for so many students to get help from only three or four instructors," he said.

The decision to cut the program was a difficult one, he said. Four laboratory sections serving 72 students would have been cut to save the help room.

After speaking to Assistant Dean of Arts and Sciences William Feyerharm about the program, Hawley said the department would probably get funding to reinstate the help room next semester.

"The problem is that we are not being adequately funded," Hawley said. "If we get the funding for this program it is going to have to be cut from some other department."

A help room next semester isn't going to help him or the other chemistry students this semester, Morris said.

"There are students that are failing because they can't get the help they need," he said.

He wanted to start a letter-writing campaign to President Jon Wefald asking that the students get some help this semester, Morris said.

"They raise our tuition, so we are paying more for less services," Morris said.

Morris said he would also like to start a letter-writing campaign to the Kansas Legislature, because he said they are the people who really cut the funds.

JUMBO JET CRASHES INTO SEA

HONG KONG (AP) — A Taiwanese jumbo jet landing in a rainstorm skidded off the runway and belly-flopped into the harbor at Hong Kong's airport Thursday.

Rescuers formed a human chain to the China Airlines jet and, using rubber dinghies as stepping stones, led passengers up the embankment onto the runway. 22 people were treated for minor injuries, shock and cold.

A tropical storm warning was in effect and winds were blowing at 44 mph when the accident occurred. The temperature was 73 degrees.

The last crash at Kai Tak was in 1988, when a Chinese airliner landed in the harbor, killing seven people.

Union lacks place for student's art

Jasonomarr Johnson, sophomore in biology, returned to the K-State Union Thursday with his art involving photographs of President Jon Wefald's head. Only this time he had permission from Wefald to post the pictures on the floor.

Johnson said he was impressed with Wefald and that Wefald liked and enjoyed the photographs.

During this conversation with Wefald, Johnson promised him that two of the more offensive pictures would not be displayed again.

"I did this because Wefald was so polite and cordial, and he represented the ideal president for K-State," Johnson said. "He made me feel good about being a student here."

The pictures were not the main reason for the second Union display, Johnson said. He said he believes the by-laws regarding individuals posting items in the Union need to be changed.

Johnson said he called the registrar's office and found out there are thousands of students not affiliated with campus housing or Greek Affairs, and therefore not represented in the Union Governing Board by-laws.

"There is no section for individual students to post, and this is the student Union, the place of expression for students," Johnson said.

"This is the only way things get done. If nobody speaks up, then nothing's going to change," he said.

Overland Park debates ban on public smoking

OVERLAND PARK (AP) — A proposal to ban smoking in nearly all places open to the public was approved by a City Council committee and goes to the full council next month.

If passed, the ban would put this Kansas City suburb in line with just a handful of cities nationwide that ban most public smoking. The city would also become the first in the metropolitan area to institute such a ban.

The five-member committee voted 3-2 to approve the proposal Wednesday. The full 10-member council is scheduled to vote on the matter Dec. 13.

Bill will allow stores to accept food stamps

WASHINGTON (AP) — Convenience stores that may no longer be able to accept food stamps would be able to continue taking them under legislation endorsed Thursday by the Agriculture Department.

Ellen Haas, assistant secretary for Food and Consumer Services, said to a House Agriculture subcommittee the bill would assure people can buy food in rural areas and inner cities where there are few supermarkets.

The bill, introduced Wednesday by Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, changes the definition of a retail food store. Without the bill, he said many of the nation's 56,000 convenience stores would be disqualified soon from the food-stamp program.

Morning fire injures 17 students

CLEVELAND, Tenn. (AP) — The smoke was so thick when fire alarms woke Matt Monahan that another student had to guide him out of the building. Only then did the Lee College freshman realize his dorm was engulfed in flames.

Seventeen students were injured, most from smoke inhalation, said Joe Wilson, public information officer for the Bradley County-Cleveland Emergency Management Agency.

Three were in serious condition after being airlifted to Chattanooga for treatment of burns. Five others were hospitalized in stable condition suffering smoke inhalation, cuts and broken bones caused by leaps from Ellis Hall's second-story windows.

Officials said they believe the fire started in a first-floor prayer room of the Church of God-affiliated school.

English boys charged with murder of toddler

PRESTON, England (AP) — A young man noticed a small boy sobbing outside a shopping mall. A cab driver watched two older boys drag the child away. A delivery man saw one boy kick the crying toddler.

No one intervened.

Sixty-one people remember seeing 2-year-old James Bulger at the mall or on the 2-1/2-mile journey that ended in his tortured death last February.

On Thursday, some shed tears of remorse as they testified at the trial of two 11-year-old boys accused of abducting James from a Liverpool shopping mall and stoning him to death.

The pudgy, dark-haired boys, seated beside social workers on the fourth day of the hearing at Preston Crown Court, squirmed as they listened to the testimony.

The boys, who may be identified only as Child A and Child B by the press, were 10 at the time of the slaying and are the youngest children ever to be charged with murder in Britain.

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

William McGlaughlin, music director and conductor of the Kansas City Symphony, leads the symphony during "Tragic Overture 81" by Johannes Brahms, Thursday evening in McCain Auditorium. The symphony will have more than 70 concerts this season.

K.C. Symphony shines at McCain

BRENT DUNGAN
Collegian

The music director and conductor of the Kansas City Symphony told his audience in McCain Auditorium Thursday evening that he didn't want to play Bach or Beethoven.

REVIEW

"This is not going to be your typical program," William McGlaughlin said.

Instead, McGlaughlin said he chose three composers he thought shared a common bond.

The first piece was "Tragic Overture, Op. 81," by Johannes Brahms. Right away the listener could hear the unity of this symphony.

This was the perfect choice for the first piece because it had a traditional sound. The music was slow and peaceful, but it was never boring.

Each note was played with a lot of emotion.

John Corigliano's "Concerto for Piano and Orchestra" was the next piece on the program. James Tocco, the featured piano soloist, took the spotlight on this one.

"Concerto for Piano and Orchestra" took a different direction. Harsh chords and crashing drums startled the calm audience.

Tocco played with blinding precision, racing up and down the keyboard.

The music would often slow down and become as quiet as a whisper, only to crash into another dramatic climax.

This repeated over and over again, with the symphony periodically dropping out, leaving Tocco to display his skill.

The third and final piece, "Symphony No. 9 in E Minor, Op. 95," by Antonin Dvorak, was similar to the first piece in that it had a more traditional sound.

"Symphony No. 9" started out with a relaxing, flowing melody. The brass section would slowly build the piece into a dramatic ending, leaving the audience obviously satisfied.

Senate adjourns after food fight

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

Student Senate adjourned suddenly Thursday evening after new information regarding the use of ethnic foods in the K-State Union threatened to push the meeting into the early morning hours.

"Groups don't need to panic that they won't get their money. That's not why we reconsidered it," Deloss Jahnke, Senate chair and senior in agriculture journalism, said.

Chuck Haynes, a business senator and junior in accounting and finance, proposed an amendment that would put rent of space to zero dollars for all senate-allocated groups.

In the past, ethnic groups wishing to bring food into the Union were prohibited. This was because of certain restrictions in Kansas health codes. According to a ruling by the Kansas Department of Health and Education, the restrictions are considered unfair. The events, including the food, are considered educational.

Haynes said in the past Senate allocated money to these groups for rent. Typically the groups would rent space in the Manhattan Middle School gymnasium.

"I believe that to continue to fund groups to rent space for an event that they may hold on campus would be very irresponsible," Haynes said.

A senator pointed out to the general body that in adjusting one group, Senate would have to review every group in the entire allocation bill. Most senators were confused about parliamentary procedure at this point.

"I call for a 15-minute recess," Jahnke said.

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, joined a group of senators who huddled around Jahnke. Raised voices and gestures of strong emotion were evident throughout the group.

Upon the conclusion of the recess, a motion was made to table the proposal to the following Thursday.

"I strongly urge anyone who cares about this, and that should be all of you, to do your homework and come back prepared next week," Jahnke said.

Jahnke said there was no need for groups to come to Senate to present their requests for funds.

"The only thing in question is rent of space," Jahnke said. "Groups will be made aware of the new policy change. It will all depend on what Senate finds out and how they vote."

Earlier in the evening Max Urick, athletic director, made a plea during the open period to students that they stop tearing down goalposts in post-victory celebrations.

"I want to make a special appeal to the great students of Kansas State University to join us in our attempt to prevent any unfortunate happening that might endanger the safety of our fans or destroy property," Urick said. "We absolutely must stay off the field following all of our contests."

Urick said the athletic department didn't want to stifle support for the football team. He said the department doesn't plan on using guard dogs or mace. But the gates will be closed to fans wishing to exit onto the field.

REVIEW

Problems don't hurt 'Beautiful People'

KIM DILLON
Collegian

Despite its technical problems, Thursday night's performance of "The Beautiful People" went well.

However, the performers, with the exception of Ben Koontz, freshman in engineering undecided, were comfortable with their lines. Koontz, who played Red Chandler, forced some of his lines and stumbled through others.

Eric Kaiser, junior in theater, who played Jeremy Richardson, and Andi Miner, junior in pre-professional secondary education, who played Linda Chandler, worked off each other well, both during scenes in which they were getting along and those in which they were fighting.

The early part of the first act was humorous and realistically portrayed the interactions between people. The later part of the act mixed humor with serious issues.

The violence that punctuated the play was not extraneous. Instead, it was central to how the relationships between the men developed.

Darrick Silkman, sophomore in theater, who played Keith Tipton, did a good job of playing the range of emotions and the stages of drug and alcohol use that his character went through. From just hanging out with his friends to being strung out after the first killing, all emotions were played convincingly. Jean Gunter, sophomore in social work, played her part of "The Woman" well. She was overwhelming in all the ways her character was described before she came on stage.

The audience grew restless during the times the lights were down and music was playing. This became distracting when they did not quiet down as soon as the actors returned to the stage.

People with an aversion to smoke need to carefully choose seats as far from the stage as possible. When the play ended, smoke hazed the room, both from the cigarettes the actors were smoking and the stage gun.

For the most part, the lighting and the sound system went without a hitch. However, early in the first act, when the telephone was ringing, the static behind the ring was distractingly noticeable.

In Overland Park, puffing in public may be banned

Overland Park is ahead of its time.

That is, if its city council passes a ban on smoking in public places.

A City Council committee approved a proposal to ban smoking in most public places. If passed by the full council in December, the ban will make Overland Park the only metropolitan area in the nation to have such a ban.

Committee member Michael Lally voted for the ban, saying, "This is a serious, serious health issue. This ban is the right thing to do."

Apparently others, such as Mayor Ed Eilert and the Overland Park Chamber of Commerce, do not agree.

Eilert and the chamber of commerce oppose the ban because most area businesses already follow an ordinance requiring designated smoking areas.

Eilert and the moneymakers aren't taken into account the effects of second-hand smoke or, apparently, the effects of smoking in general.

Health issues must be decided with the public well-being in mind, rather than public response or a possible decline in business.

To ban smoking in public places is to protect the rights of those who have made a decision not to puff their lives away. A smoker's right ends where a non-smoker's begins.

The only exemptions to the ban would be in buildings with separate ventilation for smoking rooms, hotel rooms and taverns that do not sell food.

The city council committee is on the right track.

May Overland Park follow the progressive K-State Union's example and ban the deadly habit.

Keeping paths open for all

I'm sitting here in the newsroom with the world spinning through my mind. So many things to write about. There's the war in Bosnia, the 10-year-old murderers in England, NAFTA. ... the list goes on and on. The only problem is that these things are being and have been talked about, through and over, repeatedly.

So I'll talk about something closer to home.

Has anyone noticed the number of bicycles attached to access ramps on campus? I mean the ones that people in wheelchairs have to use to get into buildings such as Bluemont and Nichols Hall.

Those ramps are supposed to allow people with disabilities greater access to the buildings on campus, as provided for by the Americans with Disabilities Act.

In other words, folks, you are breaking a federal law when you attach your bike to the ramps. In fact, I can quote it to you right now.

In the Federal Register, volume 56, no. 144, Friday July 26, 1991, pg. 35719:

35.133 Maintenance of accessible features.

(a) A public accommodation shall maintain in operable working condition those features of facilities and equipment that are required to be readily accessible to and usable by persons with disabilities by the Act or this part.

(b) This section does not prohibit isolated or temporary interruptions in service or access due to maintenance or repairs.

So what this means is that the University has the responsibility to keep the ramps free of obstructions.

So if you ride a bicycle, where do you park? This is a valid question. I have seen them attached to trees, posts, ramps, bushes and assorted artwork.

There is a cute little thing known as the Parking and Traffic Regulations Handbook, 1993 /1994, that you can get at the parking services office in Burt Hall.

Under section VI: Bicycles, it says that bicycles shall be parked only in bicycle racks. They are not permitted in buildings. Violators are subject to bicycle impoundment.

I would suggest parking in the bicycle racks.

In the first place, that is where they belong, and before you start screaming in disgust about there being no rack next to the building you have class in, I would suggest that you take another look.

There are racks located between the Union and Seaton Hall, racks located by Eisenhower Hall, and in the circle of cement between Kedzie, Calvin and Fairchild halls, to name only a few.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

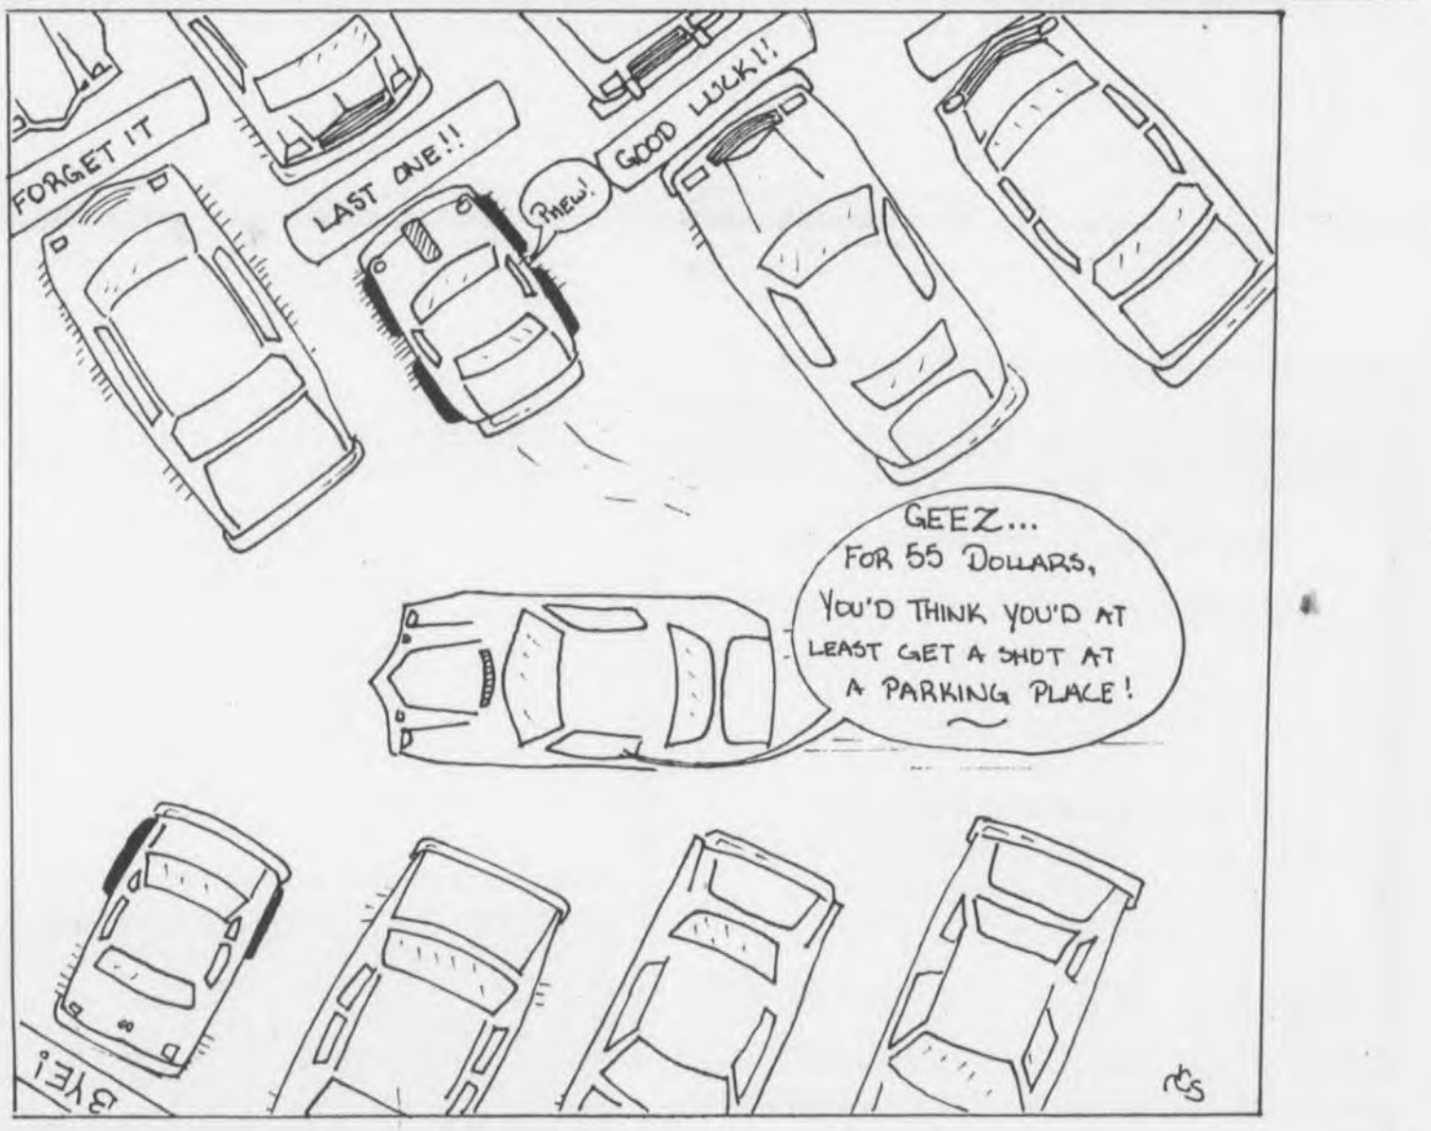
Since there are few bicycle routes that get you to your exact building without mowing down pedestrians on the sidewalk, I would suggest walking from the racks to your class.

In the second and most important place, the access ramps are for people with disabilities. They are to be used for wheelchairs and people on crutches. Believe it or not, there are actually people on this campus who need those ramps.

Imagine if you were in a wheelchair, and you were trying to get to one of the few buildings on campus to which you do have access.

Suddenly you lose control of the chair and start to fall. You reach out to grab the railing but instead get a handful of Schwinn. These bikes make it difficult to navigate up the ramps as it is, let alone the difficulty of grabbing onto the railing if you fell.

Right now all the police can do is lock the bike to the rail like they do a wheellock on cars.



While I don't consider the University of Kansas to be much of a role model in other things, I would suggest following their lead on this issue.

I suggest that the campus police be given the right to cut these bicycles loose from the ramps and impound them.

It doesn't do much good to people in wheelchairs if the bikes are left locked to the ramps with police chains. It doesn't keep the ramps clear.

And blocked ramps become as useless as if they didn't exist at all.

Giving tickets to drivers could reduce pedestrian accidents

Editor,

The article in the Nov. 4 issue of the Collegian titled "Accidents result of inattentive drivers, walkers" really infuriated me.

While I agreed that we should look both ways before crossing the street, there are other aspects of this safety issue.

I have identified this problem to members of the staff and administration several times.

Last summer, I spoke with John Lambert's director of public safety assistant about vehicles not stopping for pedestrians waiting at crosswalks. The response was less than supportive. About a month ago, I spoke with Lt. Gary Gillaspie about the same issue.

It was ironic that on the same day, a pedestrian was hit in the crosswalk on Denison Avenue.

On the night of Oct. 22, I was almost hit in the crosswalk in front of Umberger.

I went to the campus police station and reported it and again addressed my concern for this issue. I have stood at crosswalks while car after car continue to drive past me without stopping.

A few days ago, I was crossing in the crosswalk in front of Umberger.

A car moved into the on-coming lane and kept going rather than stopping. He had plenty of time to stop. When I started across, he was probably more than 100 feet away.

I believe the issue is not to just look both ways, but that enforcement agencies are short of personnel. I contend that it would not take too many tickets being issued before the people realize that safety is one issue that will receive attention and that there is every intention of enforcing the laws and policies.

Minorities don't have a friend in Phelps, professor says

Editor,

In Tara Eubanks' Thursday article about Fred Phelps' proposed picketing of Jesse Jackson's talk, she quotes Fred as saying he has promoted the black minority over much of his career.

I don't know what Fred's connotation of the verb "promotes" is, but I know that when his group is picketing Topeka churches, and a member of the congregation is seen who is of a minority race, members of Fred's klan starts screaming racial epithets at them.

Usually it's "Oh look, here come some _____." Fill in the blank with whatever ugly, often obscene, name you can think of for any race other than white.

I'm sorry to be adding to the inches written about Fred because publicity energizes him, but I do think people should be aware that, in addition to being homophobic, the Phelps faction is racist.

▶ MISCONCEPTIONS

Those who weigh students should have brains put in calipers

Editor,

I have a concern that I feel many other women on campus share. This is the emphasis on our bodies. All my life I've been told I'm too thin or too fat, and that has drastically affected my eating habits and health.

I recall in physical education my freshman year how everyone had to take a body-fat measurement with calipers in front of everyone else. How embarrassing it was to see those calipers measure what seemed to be a huge amount of fat on various parts of my body. What shocked me the most was when my measures told me that I was fat for my body build. Fat? Me?

At 5 feet 6 inches and 125 pounds, a cross country runner and trackster for all my high-school career, I didn't agree that I was fat at all. However, this test sure affected the way I viewed myself and my eating habits. Now, two years later, I am hearing echoes of myself in my classmates and friends.

They all are fairly thin, not Twiggy by any standards, but definitely not fat.

Many of them have confided in me: "My P.E. caliper test said that I was obese!" Obese?? These women, among them a champion high-school swimmer, a basketball and track star and a compulsive exerciser, are obese? Something is definitely wrong.

The most ironic thing about this is that next week is Eating Disorders Awareness Week. One of the questions on the self-test put out by Lafene to test if you may have an eating disorder is, "True or False. My thighs are too fat."

Anyone who has had a caliper test taken knows how fat your thighs look when they are squeezed and pinched together. It really scares me to think all these women being told they are obese by teachers in a college setting may be affected by it and become anorexic or bulimic. I was anorexic in high school, and I know how it can screw up your life in a big way.

I guess my biggest concern is, how can a professional department at a college as informed as K-State is perpetuate the American beauty myth that a woman has to be skin and bones to be beautiful and ideal?

It scares me that these women might be going home every night and vomiting their lives away, all because they were told by one person in one class that they are obese.

I hope these women know better than that, and I hope some changes are made to this caliper test so that average-built women are not continued to be told they are obese.

Cats' attitude not altered by new role

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

K-State has suddenly experienced a role reversal.

For the first time in three weeks, the Wildcats, ranked No. 18 by the Associated Press Poll and No. 17 by the USA Today/CNN Poll, are playing as the favorite.

This time the underdog is their opponent, which happens to be Iowa State. K-State is picked to win by seven points and is traveling to Iowa State for a 1 p.m. kickoff at Cyclone Stadium.

The Cats sport a 6-1-1 record, 2-1-1 in the Big Eight Conference. Iowa State is 2-6 overall and 1-3 in the conference.

With one more victory, K-State would reach the six necessary Division I victories to qualify for a bowl-game appearance. It would be just the second in K-State history.

But Coach Bill Snyder said the switch in the odds won't change the Cats' game plan.

"There's not very much that we will do differently," said Snyder, who has boosted his record to 24-27-1 with K-State. "Our approach week in and week out is always the same. I don't think we've ever approached it in terms of upsets or being the favorite or being the underdog.

"Our approach has always been that if we do the things that we're capable of doing and prepare well and play hard, we would have a great opportunity to win."

K-State has been riding a wave of emotion, playing at Nebraska, then Colorado and Oklahoma at home in succession. The Cats came out 1-1-1 against the "Big Three," and the 21-7 win against the Sooners marked the first time K-State has beaten a ranked team in 12 seasons.

Big wins have a tendency to produce a letdown the following week, and Snyder said there is always that possibility.

"There's always that chance," Snyder said. "I certainly believe that our youngsters will be focused on the task at hand, and I think that they will fare well and play hard with emotion. Those are the things we ask each week. They're very conscious of what the pitfalls are at this time of the year."

Quarterback Chad May said the team is taking a similar approach to Iowa State as in the past three weeks.

"The team isn't approaching this game any different than the rest," May said. "We aren't looking past Iowa State. I want to finish the season 10-1-1.

"To do that, we've got to play with emotion in every game. We know that one of these next three teams can knock us off."

It certainly is possible.

Last year, Nebraska took a 7-1 record to Ames and was upset by the 3-6 Cyclones 19-10.

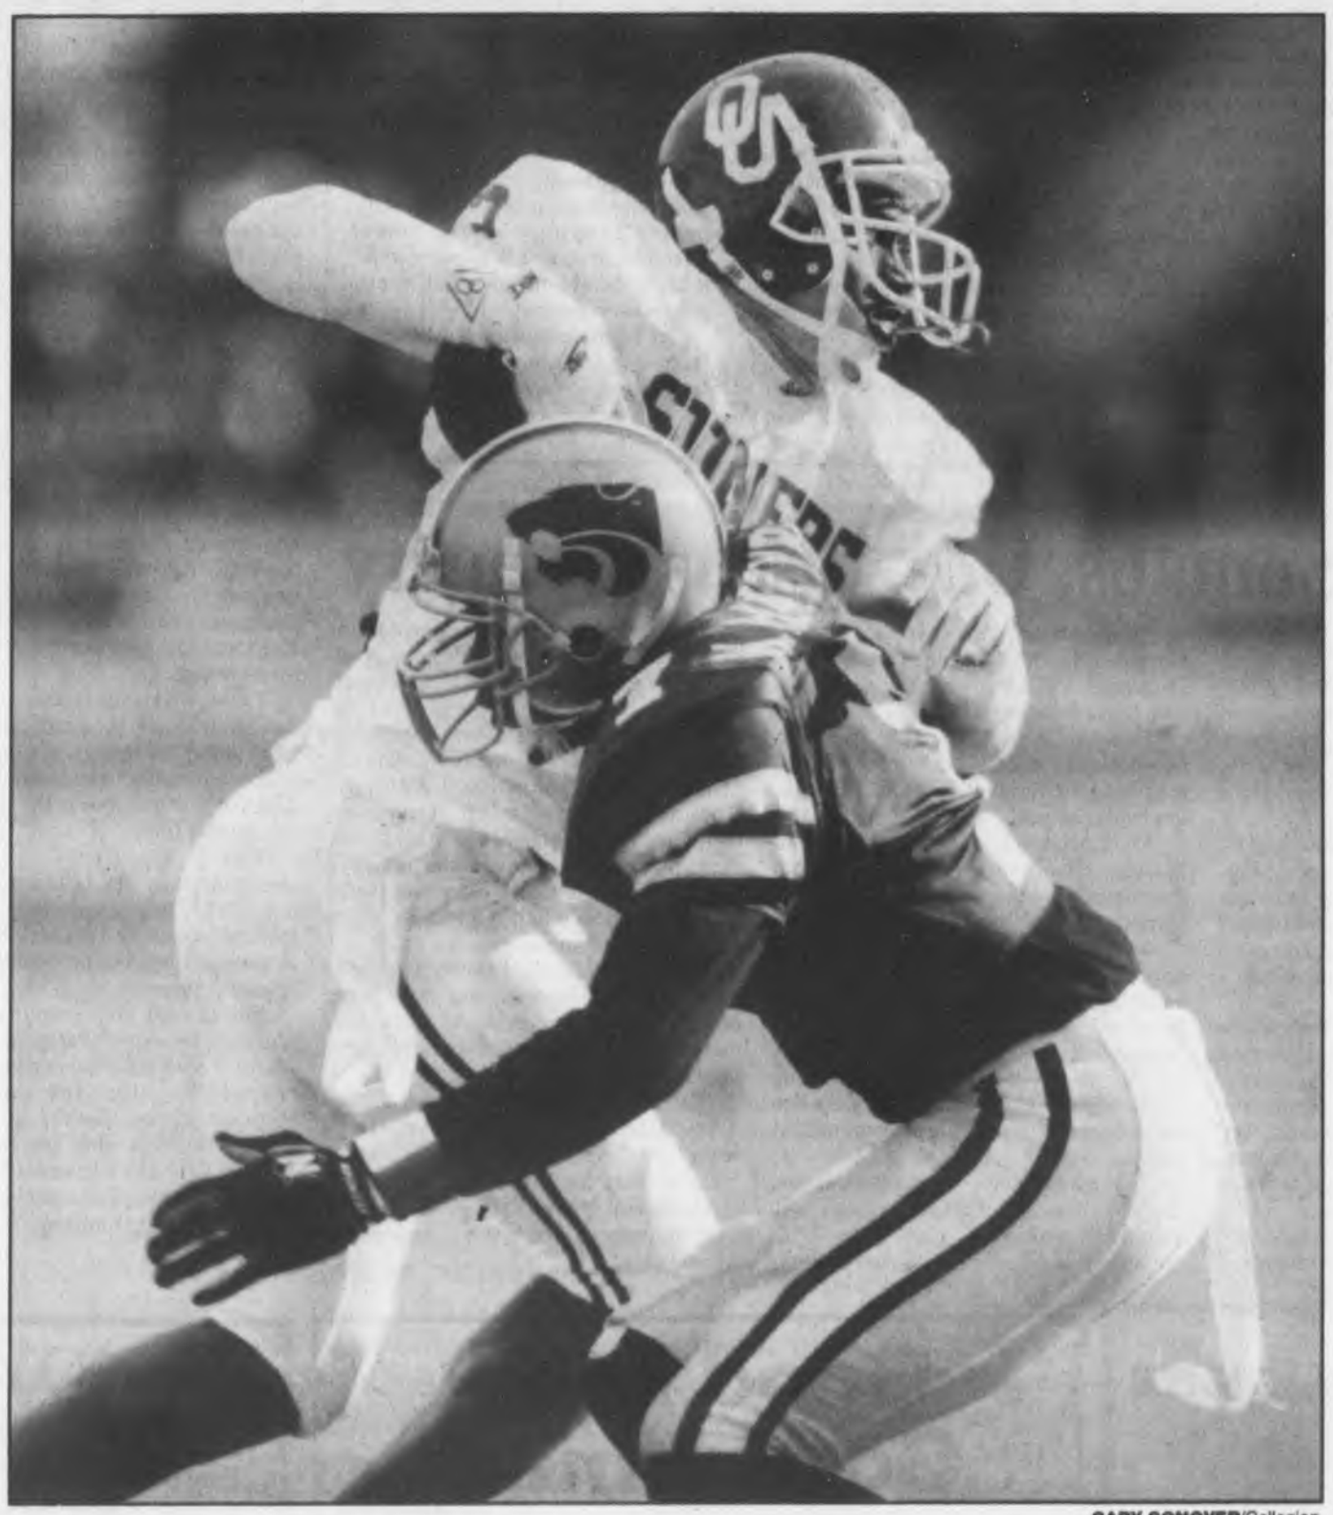
But Snyder said in his tenure, K-State has never had the opportunity to play without emotion and be successful.

"We have never been afforded the luxury to do it any other way," he said. "In the five years that we've been here, there hasn't been a game that we have lined up and played where I have felt that we could play unemotional football and had a chance to win.

"We have felt that we needed to play at a high emotional level week in and week out.

"That's the way our players know it to be. I don't think they know it could be any other way."

The Cyclones lost at Missouri last week 37-34 on a last-second, 40-yard field goal. The Cats have beaten Iowa State in the past three seasons by an average of 17.7 points.



Iowa State is third in the Big Eight in rushing offense and fifth in scoring offense. K-State rates last in rushing offense, but first in passing offense and fourth in total offense.

Snyder said the Cyclones' option attack is one the Cats can't take lightly.

"It's an offense that can get out of the gate on you at any time if you're not careful, and you're not disciplined," Snyder said.

"Against a lot of offenses, 10 guys can play well, and one guy can make a mistake, and you're still second and five. This is the type of offense that, if you make that mistake, it's seven points on the board.

"If you are not well prepared for it, it's going to be a long day."

Another option for post-game festivities

It has become tragically obvious over the past few weeks that the whole "rush-the-field-take-the-goal-posts-down" post-game celebration deal is no longer warranted or wanted.

Many of you who have engaged in this activity may not have realized this yet and could do it again. So, in the spirit of public awareness, I'd like to give you another option for your victory festivities.

We've all seen them. They are there more often than not, and most people would like to take one of them home with us. No, I am not talking about the K-State cheerleaders. I'm talking about those neat broadcasting-company banners that are always just hanging around.

You know what I'm talking about. They proclaim "ESPN" or "Raycom" or whoever happens to be broadcasting that day. They are all sorts of pretty colors, and you can't help but say to yourself, "I think that would look really great on my wall."

BOB LEHMAN

If you want to know how to get one of these really cool mementos of your collegiate years (and help save the athletic department several thousand dollars in the process) read on.

With the game winding down, it is time to gradually move as close as you can to your target.

When the final gun sounds, take out the handy-dandy pocket knife you were so smart to have brought to the game and slice your prize free.

Don't fret, though, if tearing things down is more your style-by all means, go for it.

As you are cutting and ripping, keep it in mind to act like you are supposed to be doing what it is you are doing. Once you get it free, you need to fold it and conceal it quickly. These signs can be on the large side, so you might want to get a friend to help.

With the banner now safely concealed and in your possession, blend into the crowd around you. If they're yelling, you yell. If they're jumping up and down, jump up and down. The key is inconspicuousness as you make your way out of the stadium.

Just a little warning: Read the security personnel's actions. Be careful. If it seems that they may stop you, stop. Don't risk it. You'll just have to go home empty-handed and full of unreleased emotion and alcohol.

On the other hand, if it seems like they don't care much what happens, go for it. Besides, if all of you who go after the banners damage yourselves and each other in pursuit of these prizes, at least the goal posts will remain safe.

Now you members of the student body who feel an uncontrollable need to tear things down after a K-State victory have something constructive, instead of destructive, to do.

Who knows? You could even earn some respect in the eyes of, well, anybody.

Wisconsin students selling tickets in fear of another stampede

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADISON, Wis. — Dozens of University of Wisconsin students are selling their tickets for Saturday's football game against Ohio State in the aftermath of last weekend's stadium stampede.

"There are a lot of people selling their tickets because they're scared to go," Chris Gruhl, 20, a psychology student, said before a Thursday night pep rally.

Gruhl and others said many students who live in residence halls, particularly freshmen, have notes on bulletin boards offering their tickets for as low as $15 each. They said last week's going rate for a Michigan-Wisconsin ticket was about $30.

"You see more signs on bulletin boards than ever to sell tickets, dozens and dozens of them," said Angie Remington, 20, a marketing student.

"I heard a lot of people, a lot of women, who are kind of scared of going," said Evan Bloyer, 19, a pharmacy student.

Remington, Gruhl and others said they planned to attend the game and sit in the student section because they don't expect any repeat of the incident in which at least 69 people were injured after the Badgers' 13-10 victory over Michigan last Saturday.

"It's a big game, (but) I don't think it's going to happen again, at least not this week," said Andy Stopczynski, 19.

University officials plan to restrict access to the 12,000-seat student sections, among other safety precautions.

Among the some 350 students at the pep rally was Mary Mann, 22, one of the students injured last weekend. She was on crutches cheering as the band played "On Wisconsin" in front of the Badger team and fans.

Mann said she was in the bottom rows, which felt the brunt of the crushing wave of bodies. She intends to be at Saturday's game.

"I won't be in the same seat. I'm going to move up, to whatever the top seats are," Mann said. "I'm a little leery, but it's important that people cheer the team. What's happened is no one's fault. That's why I'm here tonight, to get rid of those ghosts before I come Saturday."

K-State and OU represent Big Eight

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team will play tonight in the Big Eight Conference-Southeast Conference Challenge in Baton Rouge, La.

The Cats and Oklahoma will represent the Big Eight. Louisiana State and Mississippi will represent the Southeast Conference in the tournament.

Coach Patti Hagemeyer said the challenge format is a new thing in volleyball.

"The tournament will give us an opportunity to play some ranked teams," Hagemeyer said. "I'm really looking forward to it.

"The challenge format is a relatively new thing in volleyball," she said. "It's when a couple of teams from one conference play against two other teams from a different conference."

The Cats will open play at 7:30 p.m. tonight against Louisiana State. The meeting with LSU marks the first ever meeting between the Cats and the Tigers.

"I believe that they are ranked in the top 25 in the country," Hagemeyer said.

"It should be a good challenge for the team."

On Saturday the Cats will play the Mississippi Rebels. The Cats lead the overall series with the Rebels 2-0, and the last meeting was in 1988 when the Cats won 3-1. The Rebels' record this season is 2-20, with wins over North Texas (3-1) and Marquette (3-2).

The Cats are in a 10-game losing streak, and their last win was on Oct. 9 against Northeastern Illinois.

The Cats' record this season is now at 7-19, after a 3-1 loss to Iowa State last Wednesday.

Yolanda Young led the Cats with 12 kills against the Cyclones, and Kate DeClerk and Suzanne Hagge had 11 kills.

Women wrap up season at Texas

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The women's golf team will wrap up its fall schedule at the Texas A & M Bookstore/Welsh Memorial Golf Tournament Friday and Saturday.

Wichita State and conference foes Kansas and Missouri will be competing in the 17-team field.

"We need to finish the fall on a good note so we can have something to build on in the spring," Coach Mark Elliott said.

Leading the way for K-State this season has been Jacque Wright, averaging less than 80 strokes per round.

"The course here is a nice one," Elliott said. "With three or four ranked teams, it should be a good tournament for us to compete in."

The Cats will be playing at Pebble Creek Country Club, which opened in 1992.

CAMPUS

Class teaches how to cooperate

BRENT DUNGAN
Collegian

Lack of communication can be a common problem within most organizations and personal relationships. Some students are finding a lot can be learned from the open discussion of ideas.

Small Groups Discussion is a class offered in the speech department. The class is taught by Charlie Griffin, associate professor of rhetoric and communication.

The class is an introduction to basic problem-solving, Griffin said. Group dynamics are taught, as well as different roles people play, and listening and leadership skills, Griffin said.

"I try to make it a practical class for students," Griffin said.

Lessons learned in class can help students in future careers, church or civic groups, he said.

The class is divided into small groups of around five students. Each group tries to come up with a solution to problems affecting students.

Some of the issues the groups are working on this semester include crime on campus, the financial-aid office and drunk driving. Other issues in the past have included parking and advising problems.

After deciding on an issue, the members of the groups do in-depth research on the problem. This may include interviewing professors, town officials or any responsible parties, and conducting student surveys.

Each group presents a written presentation at the end of the semester telling Griffin how the problem will be solved.

Students write the paper as if they were members of a student task-force assigned to handle the problem by the University, Griffin said.

The groups must sell their solution as the best way to solve the problem, Griffin said.

Students in the class agree they are learning a lot about working in groups but say it is not always easy.

Brent Bohl, junior in speech, drama and secondary education, said the people in his group did not know each other very well going into the project, which sometimes caused conflicts because of diverse backgrounds.

"You have to learn to read people. At first, we were all very defensive."

ASHLEY WARREN
JUNIOR IN HUMAN DEVELOPMENT AND FAMILY STUDIES

"You have to learn to read people," said Ashley Warren, junior in human development and family studies, and member of the same group."At first, we were all very defensive."

Warren said she believes that is what the class is all about.

"In the real world we'll have to learn how to deal with people from different backgrounds and cultures," Warren said.

The class teaches students to work together.

"I teach it as a general life-skills class," said Griffin.

Griffin said the problems addressed in class are usually forgotten after the paper is finished, but some students have taken the project one step further.

Some groups sent copies of their written proposals to different people, hoping to have some effect. Warren and Bohl agree that it all depends on how well their proposal comes out.

"If K-State can really benefit from our solution, maybe we'll take action," Warren said.

Troops leave as Somalis, U.N. discuss security

BRIEFLY

■ 3,600 American sailors and Marines left Somalia
■ 7,500 U.S. troops are in Mogadishu

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — About 3,600 American sailors and Marines sailed away Thursday in a sign of confidence that security is improving for U.N. peacekeeping troops in Somalia's bloodied capital.

Somali clan leaders and U.N. officials, meanwhile, met to discuss ways to improve security and keep tensions down in the city. The turnout was better than a meeting a week earlier and included representatives of Mogadishu's two main factions.

The departing Marines never came ashore after arriving as support following an Oct. 3 battle in which 18 U.S. soldiers died fighting supporters of Mohamed Farrah Aidid. The bloodshed led Washington to rein in military operations and step up efforts for a political solution to Somalia's clan conflict.

The arrival of U.S. Army soldiers, Abrams tanks and Bradley armored vehicles during the last two weeks permitted the deployment of the Marines elsewhere, a U.S. military representative, Col. Steve Rausch, said.

There are now 7,500 U.S. troops in Mogadishu, bolstered by 30 M1-A1 tanks and 42 Bradley Fighting Vehicles, the Pentagon said.

An additional 8,650 sailors and Marines remain offshore on a four-ship amphibious landing force and an aircraft carrier.

Asked about reports U.S. forces had adopted a change in strategy and will establish a high-profile presence in Mogadishu's streets, Pentagon representative Capt. Michael Doubleday said the forces were simply conducting missions President Clinton directed when he ordered the new deployment last month.

The representative said in Washington that the insertion of ground troops with armored vehicles puts the U.S. contingent in a better position to do some of those missions, including protecting U.S. forces on the ground, keeping roads secure and holding off would-be attackers.

Ten of 13 Somali elders invited to attend the second meeting of the Mogadishu Security Advisory Committee showed up Thursday, including representatives of Aidid, who controls southern Mogadishu, and Ali Mahdi Mohamed, his clan rival who rules the northern half. Only four elders were at the first meeting.

U.N. officials said there was little substantive progress, but they were optimistic after getting the divisive factions to sit face to face for about two hours.

"Disarmament was a major topic of discussion," said a U.N. military representative, Capt. Tim McDavitt. "There was an indication from the participants that they supported disarmament for the peace of Mogadishu."

Kurdish militants protest treatment

Police arrest more than 40, at least one Kurd killed

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BONN, Germany — Kurdish militants smashed and burned Turkish consulates and businesses across Europe on Thursday in a coordinated violent protest against Turkey's treatment of its Kurdish minority.

At least one person was killed and 16 were injured in the more than 60 attacks that left smoldering shops and offices and shattered glass in the streets of urban centers in Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Britain, France and Denmark.

More than 40 Kurds were arrested.

The attacks hit Turkish consulates, travel bureaus, airlines, banks, a newspaper office in Frankfurt and a cable television station in Berlin.

The action seemed better coordinated and more violent than a previous day of violent Kurdish protest in Germany and other European nations on June 24. One Kurd was killed in those attacks, in Switzerland.

The Kurds accuse the Turkish government of a brutal counter-insurgency campaign to uproot a Marxist guerrilla force battling for a Kurdish homeland near the borders of Iraq and Iran.

The assaults occurred simultaneously at 11:30 a.m. (5:30 a.m. EST). Police said they found leaflets protesting Turkish genocide at several sites, but no one claimed responsibility.

Police said they presumed the Kurdish Workers' Party, a leftist Kurdish guerrilla movement, was responsible for the attacks. Representatives for the guerrilla group's political wing, the National Front for the Liberation of Kurdistan, refused to comment.

The Turkish Embassy in Bonn said it first tipped off German security forces Sunday to intelligence about planned attacks by the Kurdish Workers' Party, which is known by its Kurdish initials PKK.

Police patrols were increased but weren't enough, said Numan Hazar, the No. 2 offical at the embassy. Seven Turkish consulates were among the more than three dozen targets in Germany.

Hazar said Turkey had long demanded the German government ban the PKK, which has 5,000 members in Germany.

Foreign Minister Klaus Kinkel called Thursday for such a ban. He said the PKK had abused the tolerance and liberal laws for foreigners.German police also want to ban the PKK and some have warned of a civil war breaking out among the 1.9 million Turkish citizens living in Germany — 400,000 of them Kurds.

There were attacks Thursday against the Turkish Embassy in Bern, Switzerland, and at a Turkish bank in Vienna, Austria. Five people were injured in attacks on the Turkish Embassy and three other targets in London. A bank and two travel agencies were hit in Strasbourg, France.

About 30 Kurds staged a peaceful sit-in at European Community headquarters in Brussels. Belgian police quickly broke up the protest.

In Wiesbaden, west of Frankfurt, flames from a firebombed Turkish restaurant killed a man and injured eight other people, including a small child.

The attacks hit downtown areas of many cities, including Bonn, the quiet German capital, where a Turkish Airlines office was firebombed, as well as Frankfurt, Stuttgart and Hanover.

The 9 million Kurds, the world's largest ethnic group without a state, live mostly in Turkey, Iran, Iraq and Syria. Most of those living in Germany are Turkish citizens.

THE PANAMA DECEPTION
THE PANAMA DECEPTION is the untold story of the 1989 U.S. invasion on Panama. It explores the U.S. relationship with the Panama from 1903 to the presents and exposes Noriega's longstanding relationship with the CIA, DEA & George Bush.
THE PANAMA DECEPTION reveals how and why mainstream media collaborated with the U.S. government to censor information and deceive the American public, and how the distorted reports about the actual devastation and human rights violations, which continue today.
THE PANAMA DECEPTION shows that the invasion was not intended to achieve the officially stated goals of: arresting Noriega; protecting American lives; protecting the Canal; and restoring democracy to Panama...but rather, created a structure permitting the U.S. to abrogate the Carter/Torrijos treaty, allowing the U.S. military to maintain bases there after the year 2000; helping Bush get over the embarrassment caused by Noriega's actions; neutralizing the recent resurgence of Panamanian nationalism; and using-sing the invasion as an excuse and opportunity to test our new weapons.

BY STEVEN ROCK

The dreaded Chiweiler: a dog conceived in Hell

They say love is blind. This, perhaps, is a perfect example.

It seems that Rocky, a tiny Chihuahua in Key West, Fla., recently found love on the neighbor's deck. Her name was Canella, a burly Rottweiler.

A Chihuahua. A Rottweiler. A moment of heated passion.

And finally, a lawsuit.

Rocky somehow managed to impregnate Canella, much to the dismay of the Rottweiler's owner, Kevin Foley. He said he hoped to someday pair Canella with a suitable mate and sell the resulting litter. He sued Rocky's owner and won, pocketing $2,567.50.

But the obvious question: How on earth did this happen?

Canella, the Rottweiler, was apparently tied up on Foley's deck when she went into heat. When Foley stepped into the house, the suave Chihuahua made his move.

Canella succumbed to Rocky's come-ons, and the two allegedly made canine love until Foley turned a hose on them.

A month later, Foley learned Canella was pregnant. The litter of 10 puppies was terminated via hysterectomy, leaving Canella sterile.

Too bad. Weekend was kind of hoping to see what such mongrels would look like.

They find new uses for cameras all the time

When Jackie Burgo bent down to pick up something on June 8, she noticed something rather peculiar staring up her dress — a video camera.

Burgo, a secretary for a law firm in Santa Rosa, Calif., was apparantly the target of a co-worker's fantasies. So the co-worker, Thomas Jeffrey, put a remote-controlled video camera in a plywood box and fastened it to the underside of her desk. He also admitted to drilling a peephole in the women's bathroom.

Burgo has since filed a sexual harassment claim.

Jeffrey, meanwhile, lost his job. He was reportedly last seen at a local juice bar with Joey Buttafuoco. Weekend, however, could not confirm the sighting.

'Take cover, everybody. That man has a gourd!'

In Houston, pumpkins are sometimes considered lethal weapons.

At least, such is the thinking of employees at NationsBank.

A customer using the bank's cash machine apparently left a six-inch pumpkin on a shelf near the deposit drawer Wednesday morning.

A teller at the drive-thru window asked the man to remove the pumpkin. He refused and drove away.

So jittery bank employees called the bomb squad.

Police tracked down the pumpkin depositor through his bank account number and his license plate. He told police he left the pumpkin on a dare from his wife.

So do employees of NationsBank feel even a little goofy about calling the police bomb squad to defuse the festive gourd?

"For our line of business, safety and security are two priorities for our customers," said Jan Boylston, a bank representative. "We just take anything like that real seriously."

Can she be serious? It was a pumpkin, for crying out loud. It's a darn good thing the man's wife didn't dare him to leave a watermelon. Boylston may have called in a SWAT team.

PHONE TAG

Time: 12:22 p.m.
Date: Thursday, Nov. 4.
Place: K-State Union.
Number of rings: 4.
Answerer: Brian Rader.
Year and major: sophomore in journalism and mass communications.

Q. What were you doing at the Union?
A. "Just getting ready to watch 'Days of Our Lives.'" (This is going to be a LONG phone call, ain't it?)
Q. "Days of Our Lives," huh? Are you a "Days" fanatic?
A. "I wouldn't say I'm a fanatic. I just like to watch it."
Q. Is that something you're proud of?
A. "Uhh, not really."
Q. Is this whole "Days" thing something you're getting counseling for?
A. (slight chuckle) "No. It's a good thing to talk to chicks about. They usually watch it." (Is "chicks" politically correct? Somehow, I doubt it.)
Q. Good point. Have you ever found yourself getting a date simply because you know what's going on in "Days?"
A. "Not yet."
Q. I'm sorry. You said that you're a journalism major with a radio/TV emphasis. Have you ever thought about print journalism?
A. "Not really." (Why not? You don't want to make $12,000 a year for the rest of your life?) "I want to be a producer or director, something like that."
Q. So you don't ever want to be on the other end of this phone call, is that right?
A. "Oh, that wouldn't bother me. That would be fun."
Q. You think so? Consider this: You're the fifth person I've called. I've been hung up on three times, and one person told me her name was Moonstruck. Trust me — this is not all it's cracked up to be. Anyway, have a nice day.

Can I have some fries with that egg roll?

Design & Illustration by: BriHon Harper

Just after 2 a.m., alcohol flowed freely through the mind. Earlier, countless drinks had passed unchallenged into the body.

Then, hunger set in.

With pasted smiles and glazed eyes, drunks wandered on the sidewalks of Aggieville. Neon restaurant signs guided potential customers like radiant airport beacons on a foggy night.

Victims of alcohol would crash and burn onto the fast-food runway.

"This week two people have passed out, and the police had to come and get them," said Kim Willingham, owner of Hunam Express Chinese Food in Aggieville.

Willingham said most times his late-night customers are happy, good and hungry people. Regulars visit just as frequently as in the daytime. Every so often, though, ill-behaved drunks make for a long evening.

"Sometimes they come in and are high," Willingham said. "They come in and treat me badly. Some are nice, and some are not."

"I wonder if they act like that at other establishments," he said.

Although an occasional problem arises, Willingham said as long as his customers don't cause trouble, drastic action isn't necessary. He said the Riley County Police are within one or two minutes away and handle the troublemakers well.

An employee at Hunam Express, who did not wish her name used, said the late-night hours don't make for a slow evening.

"It doesn't seem to stop business," she said.

Forget tranquility past midnight, she said.

Early in the evening, Hunam Express had a peaceful, calm atmosphere. During a late night visit, though, the dining area resembled neither peace nor serenity.

Obviously, people don't clean up after themselves when they're juiced.

Plate after plate of unfinished dinner litters the small restaurant. Fried rice is strewn across the floor with sauce spilled on the tables.

With the long line of ravenous customers, employees can't break away to clean the dining room. It's a sticky, gooey mess until closing time.

This scene was similar on the other side of Aggieville. Hardee's Restaurant experienced the routine rush for food as well.

Customers line up several bodies deep at the counter after the bars and taverns close. Groups of individuals wander around in search of the restrooms. Fries are scattered underneath the swivel chairs next to crumpled straw wrappers.

Reginald Murray, security guard for Hardee's, said he sees many interesting, funny people.

"We had a guy in here that passed out while eating a Frisco burger," Murray said. "He still had the bacon hanging out of his mouth."

Other stories are just as remarkable.

Murray said a gentleman came in and had obviously urinated all down the front of his pants. Although there was a long line, once people saw him walk in the door, they all moved out of the way and waited for him to get his food. Quickly.

Murray joked about how intoxicated the gentleman had become.

"He was too through," Murray said.

Murray also said foolishness is not limited to males. In fact, the Hardee's crowd is a mixture of military personnel, college and high-school students.

After the KU–K-State football game, he said he caught a girl urinating between two Hardee's delivery trucks in the front parking lot.

Although most customers don't create problems, Murray said if the weather is good, his job gets pretty hectic.

He said that most of the problems occur between 2 a.m. and 2:45 a.m. and usually don't last longer than this.

Murray said he takes all the senselessness in stride and tries to be as polite as possible.

"There is nothing to get upset about," he said. "People act the fool. Period."

Lecture to address world conflicts

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Intervening into another country's war raises a number of ethical questions. The upcoming Lou Douglas Lecture will address the ethics of the United States' involvement in overseas conflicts.

Ved Nanda will speak at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the K-State Union Forum Hall. The title of his talk will be "Ethnic Conflicts and World Order."

"We always try to have speakers who are experts in current issues," Al Zimmerman, chair of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series committee, said. "Dr. Nanda is extremely knowledgeable about Bosnia and Somalia and the United States' intervention there."

Nanda is the John Evans University Professor, Thompson G. Marsh Professor of Law and the director of the International Legal Studies Program at the University of Denver.

He received the 1990 World Legal Scholar Award from the World Peace through Law Center, the 1985 International Excellence Award from the Colorado Council for International Organizations and was a co-winner of the Hyde Prize in International Law.

Nanda is the vice president of the World Jurist Association, president of the World Association of Law Professors and is a member of the National Council of Chapter and Division Presidents, United Nations Association-USA, an independent organization that critiques the United Nations' activities.

■ Ved Nanda will speak at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the K-State Union Forum Hall. He will speak on the ethics of involvement in overseas conflicts.

President Clinton also named Nanda as one of the U.S. delegates to the human rights conference in Vienna.

"Dr. Nanda believes deeply in human rights and in the United Nations," Rosalys Rieger, member of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series committee, said.

A regular contributor of articles dealing with international law and policy to the Denver Post, Nanda has also been co-editor of two recently published books titled "Europe Community Law after 1992: A Practical Guide for Lawyers Outside the Common Market" and "World Debt and the Human Condition: Structural Adjustment and the Right to Development."

"Dr. Nanda is a thoughtful man with deep insight," Rieger said. "We are thrilled to have him here."

The India Student Association and The International Coordinating Council will be presenting India Nite this Saturday night.

They will have a dinner from 5:30 to 7:30 followed by cultural program that will last till 9:30 p.m. The evening is open to the public.

The cultural show will feature traditional Indian dancers, traditional classical Indian music, and a few small skits, said Chandra Chittoor, graduate student in computer science and president of ISA.

"We educate the public about our culture, and they really love it," Chittoor said.

The evening is designed to help Indian students feel more at home and is a place to make new friends, Chittoor said.

They ISA has an evening for the fall and spring semester.

"It is a chance for us to celebrate and take a break from mid-terms and studies, it will be fun," said Ayesha Sultana, graduate student in computer science and member of ISA.

"We love our country and culture and we can't forget that," Chittoor said.

India Nite will be held at Manhattan Middle School in the cafeteria. The dinner is free to members and is $3 for the general public. The cultural program is free to everyone.

Social security seeks new helpers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Social Security Administration, under pressure to do a better job answering its telephones, is looking behind bars for a low-cost way of handling the 80 million calls it gets each year.

The agency said Thursday it is considering using federal prisoners to take down callers' recorded requests for forms and applications.

The prisoners would not deal directly with callers and they wouldn't have access to Social Security records, spokesman Phil Gambino said.

Social Security acknowledges that it is not able to cope with the volume of calls it receives and that it puts many of them on hold — and doesn't get back to some of them at all.

"SSA is committed to providing world-class telephone service to the American public — answering every telephone call on the first attempt,'' said Gambino. "To accomplish this self-imposed goal, within the current fiscal environment, we must think creatively.''

One option, he said, is contracting out some of the agency's telephone work to the Federal Bureau of Prisons, which pays working prisoners between 42 cents and $1.05 an hour.

The inmates would be used to transcribe recorded messages left by callers who request simple forms and applications. Gambino said the plan would free Social Security workers to respond to callers with more complex requests.

"The privacy of SSA records would be fully protected with no access available to non-SSA personnel," Gambino said.

A spokesman for the Federal Bureau of Prisons, Daniel Dunne, said the agency has given Social Security a general proposal to do some telephone work but that the negotiations are very preliminary.

The Baltimore Sun first reported Social Security's plans Thursday.

Federal prisoners are used elsewhere.

U.S. and Russia will work together on MIR

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States plans to send 10 shuttle flights to the Russian space station Mir as the two countries work jointly to build an international space station.

An expanded agreement between the two nations was released Thursday by the Clinton administration.

"This plan describes a new relationship between the U.S. and Russian space agencies which will advance their national space programs and benefit their respective national aerospace industries," the document said.

It was signed Nov. 1 by Daniel Goldin, administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and Yuri N. Koptev, general director of the Russian Space Agency.

The plan expands on an agreement to fly a cosmonaut on a shuttle mission next January and to launch a U.S. astronaut to the Mir in 1995 and bring back the station's crew aboard a shuttle three months later.

Goldin went to Capitol Hill on Thursday to explain the plan to Congress, which must approve any such radical change in American space activities. No financing was agreed upon beyond the $400 million the U.S. already has committed to buying hardware and services from the Russians.

The joint activities will go far beyond anything done previously by the two countries. The shuttle will carry new solar arrays to replace the existing ones on Mir. Russia will add two laboratory modules outfitted with U.S. and Russian hardware to the Mir.

In the second phase, planned for 1997, U.S. and Russian hardware will be put into space to create a totally new, advanced orbital research facility, capable of being serviced by visiting space crews.

"This facility ... will form the core around which the international space station will be constructed," the plan said.

Assembly flights to complete the space station will come in a third phase, from January 1998 through October 2001. The station will be built to last 10 years.

A total of 31 assembly flights are planned using launch vehicles of both countries. The station will orbit at a 51.6 degree angle, measured from the equator. That will take it over areas of the Earth much farther north and south than the usual American space shuttle missions and reduce the amount of cargo that can be carried from U.S. launch pads.

How America's partners in the space station will react is unknown although the plan says this new relationship will also benefit the existing partnership.

Gang rape troubles writer

Dear Cassandra,

I need your advice on an experience I had with my boyfriend about a month ago. I was at a party with him and a bunch of his friends. I think I was the only woman there.

Everyone got really drunk and stupid. Someone came up with the bright idea that it would be fun for everyone to take turns having sex with me.

I waited for my boyfriend to say something, but what he said wasn't what I expected. He said it would be a good idea if everyone paid him $25.

I tried to explain to him that I didn't want to do it.

He just told me to drink another beer. He said that I would have a lot of fun and to just lie back and enjoy it.

Well I didn't enjoy it. I feel used and betrayed. I am still mad at my boyfriend. He said he will make it up to me. He has bought me some really nice things and taken me to expensive restaurants with the money he got.

Right now, I am really confused. I need your help. I still love my boyfriend, but I am still mad at him. At times I think I hate him. What should I do?

Sincerely,
Used Up

Dear Used,

This is a very, very serious letter you've written to me. I want you to promise that as soon as you put this newspaper down, you will walk straight to Holton Hall and talk to Judy Davis at the Women's Resource Center. Her door and her heart are always open.

You are the victim of a horrible experience, something, which in my novice opinion, I would call rape, even if alcohol was involved. You were taken advantage of and truly victimized. Know that you have rights.

And this boyfriend of yours, this self-proclaimed pimp, this accomplice to your pain, is absolute shit.

Talk to Judy. She has dealt with this type of situation before. She'll know exactly what to do. And let me know what happens.

"It's astounding, time is fleeting, madness takes its toll." — Richard O'Brien

All you wacky Transylvanians grab an unsuspecting "virgin," rice, toast and toilet paper and go to the K-State Union Ballroom, because "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" is back in town.

"The Rocky Horror Picture Show," rated R, is a sexual, musical spoof of horror films.

REVIEW

One haunting, stormy night Brad Majors, played by Barry Bostwick, and Janet Weiss, played by Susan Sarandon, accidentally come across an eerie mansion owned by transvestite Dr. Frank N. Furter, played by Tim Curry.

Brad and Janet have no idea they have fallen in with aliens from a planet called Transsexual in the galaxy of Transylvania.

Usually when an audience member goes to see a film, viewer silence throughout the movie is expected. However, during "The Rocky Horror Picture Show," audience participation and yelling at the screen is not only encouraged, it's essential.

Traditional lines are interjected by the audience members throughout the film. These catch phrases and words are passed all around the country. Some of these lines have their own regional influences and can change periodically to reflect current events.

The audience can also participate with the soundtrack. Some of the great songs are "Hot Patootie-Bless my Soul," "Wild and Untamed Thing" and "The Time Warp." These fabulous foot-stomping tunes get the audience off their seats and dancing in the isles.

Veteran viewers of "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" call people who have never seen the film "virgins."

Don't worry about not understanding what's going on throughout the film, though. Just glom on to a veteran and follow along.

■ Tickets are $1.75

Nearly 20 years old, "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" is a cult film classic and remains a continued success today due to its faithful fan following.

Additionally, many movie theaters across the country regularly show the film each weekend at midnight.

Shelly Rasmussen, program adviser for the Union Program Council, said last year about 300 to 400 people viewed the film each night.

Zealous fans of "The Rocky Picture Show" usually come dressed as their favorite characters such as Riff Raff, Magenta and Columbia, she said. So again this year, UPC will have a costume contest for best costumes.

The audience will choose the first, second and third places by applause voting, and UPC will give prizes ranging from movie posters to film passes, Rasmussen said.

UPC is selling prop bags containing rice, playing cards, toast, and a piece of newspaper, so audience members can fully participate, Rasmussen said.

Tammy Artman, sophomore in interior design, said last year when she went to see the film there was a lot of excitement and pandemonium.

"It was fun, but it's pretty far out there," Artman said.

Clinton promises relief for fire victims

"We are going to try to help communities shoulder their extraordinary expenses that they are facing through no fault of their own," he said.

He said fighting such disasters puts unbearable strains on budgets of state and local governments.

Clinton earlier declared much of the area as major disaster areas, making the counties affected available for federal disaster relief and low-cost loans.

Clinton said Federal Emergency Management Agency Director James Lee Witt and California Gov. Pete Wilson both told him the federal efforts are coordinated with the work being done by private citizens, state and local governments.

"I know there are people who suffered losses who are upset and frightened, perhaps spending the night in a shelter," Clinton said.

"This has to be a terrifying experience for children awakened at night by their parents and carried away from their homes, before their loss, for property owners, some of whom have faced down a wall of fire with nothing more than a garden hose in their hands and a prayer in their hearts, and especially for the gallant, heroic men and women who are fighting these fires and risking their lives to save people and property from being consumed by the blaze," Clinton said.

More than 200,000 acres burned in brush fires

Palisades section of Los Angeles, about 20 miles west of downtown.

Helicopters and C-130 air tankers dumping water and fire retardant kept the flames from spreading.

The outbreak of wildfires in Southern California has destroyed more than 1,000 homes and burned 200,000 acres since Oct. 26. Several of the blazes have been blamed on arsonists.

The Malibu blaze has burned 200 homes and 18,500 acres since it first roared through this mile-wide, 27-mile-long coastal strip on Tuesday.

"They're sure that it was arson," Gov. Pete Wilson said Wednesday. He refused to give details. A $250,000 reward was posted for information leading to the capture and conviction of the arsonist or arsonists.

At least four agencies, including the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, were looking for clues and questioning witnesses who saw two men in a pickup near where the fire broke out.

Actor Sean Penn's $4 million Spanish-style mansion was among those destroyed in Malibu. Homes belonging to Larry Hagman, Dennis Weaver, Charles Bronson, Mark Hamill, Richard Gere, Mel Gibson and Dick Van Dyke were spared.

"Just yesterday morning I was taping a radio show about the homeless, and I said, 'Yeah, there are a lot of winos and druggies on the street, but a lot of us are one incident away from being homeless,'" movie publicist Laurence Cohen, whose Las Flores Canyon home was destroyed, told the Los Angeles Times. "I don't consider myself homeless. I'm in between addresses."

In Washington, President Clinton promised an immediate $15 million for firefighting costs and more in the weeks to come. He also offered prayers for the victims and the men and women who are fighting the fires.

Frank and Robyn Morgan returned to their two-bedroom Carbon Canyon home of 15 years to find a fireplace and a pile of smoldering rubble.

"I thought that I would at least have half a house. But when I saw this I just said, 'Oh my God,'" Robyn Morgan said.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

'Rising Sun' hidden by cloudy script

TRENT FRAGER
Collegian

"Rising Sun" is like a bad game of Clue. It is a so-called murder mystery with all the bad guys pointing fingers at each other. Unfortunately, this mystery does not captivate the viewer. It is laughably worthless.

In present day Los Angeles, a woman has been found dead at the site of a party at which the big wheels of a lucrative Japanese corporation played host. Wesley Snipes and Sean Connery star as the case-cracking crusaders hired to find out whodunit.

After a tiring series of wild goose chases, such as irrelevant scenes, it becomes clear to the two Sherlock Holmes wannabes that the process of solving this murder might have its share of complications.

Intuition and worldly wisdom send the two exploring the world of high-tech video mumbo jumbo (The murder was actually taped!) and high-priced Japanese whorehouses. Never mind that the audience, by this point, has probably lost all interest and has a pretty good idea of who the culprit of the crime could be.

For the most part, "Rising Sun" suffers from a lack of energy. The drama is contrived and bleak. Still, in other cases, the ambitiously swift pace centering around mundane events creates confusion. This film does not flow well at all.

The acting presents some problems too. The principal characters Web Smith and John Connor (Snipes, Connery) lack depth. Snipes overacts the part, and Connery is unbelievable and too cocky for his own good. This film was a bad career move for these two well-established performers.

"RISING SUN"
■ Show times are at 7 and 9:30 p.m. in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

Additionally, this film portrays Japanese businessmen as mere caricatures, as one-dimensional stereotypes. There are two types: those who are corrupt and dishonest, and those who solemnly adhere to ancient honor codes and customs.

"Rising Sun" burns out on the screen before your eyes. It should have remained a novel.

Labor Department: Economy recovering

Report shows improvement in labor productivity

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A big improvement in the productivity of American workers, an increase in orders to U.S. factories and a decline in unemployment benefit applications today bolstered reports from around the country showing an economy on the upswing.

Productivity of nonfarm workers shot up at a 3.9 percent annual rate from July through September, the Labor Department said today.

It was the first improvement since the last three months of 1992.

Orders to U.S. factories rose 0.7 percent in September, pulled higher by gains in automobiles and communications equipment, the Commerce Department said.

A separate Labor Department report showed 338,000 Americans filed unemployment benefit applications last week, the lowest level in a month and down by 10,000 from the previous week.

All three reports were better than expected by analysts and fit with a generally positive assessment of regional business conditions by the Federal Reserve. Issued Wednesday, it noted strong consumer spending on autos and housing.

However, the Fed also said he economy in California and New York was mixed and mentioned some signs of inflation in the raw materials that manufacturers buy.

"Consumer spending rose in a majority of districts, with particular strength noted in sales of autos and other durables," big-ticket items intended to last three or more years, the Fed said in the beige book, named for the color of its cover.

Wednesday's report by the Fed's 12 regional banks will be used by monetary policy-makers at their next meeting on Nov. 16.

The Fed has left short-term interest rates unchanged since September 1992, and economists said the latest beige book, while a bit more positive, did not show enough growth or inflation to prompt the central bank to nudge rates higher anytime soon.

"The message to the Fed here is, 'Stand pat, you're doing fine. Things are picking up and inflation is a non-problem,' " said economist Robert Dederick of Northern Trust Co. in Chicago.

In addition to autos, the Fed mentioned housing as another bright spot and said the long-moribund commercial real estate market was experiencing some pickup as well.

Manufacturing "showed some improvement," with production gains reported in autos and parts, construction-related products such as cement, brick and glass and electronics, semiconductors and paper.

But aerospace and defense plants in the West and clothing factories in Mississippi and Georgia continue to pare employment, the Fed said.

Price increases were noted for some building supplies and raw materials going into manufactured goods, but so far that is not feeding through to the retail level, where prices were described as flat or competitive.

The Fed's compilation of anecdotal material fits with recent economic statistics showing growth improving overall nationally.

The Commerce Department said last week that the economy grew at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 2.8 percent in the July-September quarter, after managing only a lackluster 1.4 percent rate during the first half. Most private analysts and Clinton administration economists are projecting growth at better than a 3 percent rate in the fourth quarter.

Croats flee Muslims

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Thousands of Croat refugees fleeing Muslim soldiers hid in central Bosnia's forests Thursday while relief workers tried to coax them to safety.

Vares, their hometown until the Muslim-led government army stormed it the day before, was reported quiet. But the army's success opened opportunities for further military gains and the likelihood of more fighting to come.

With efforts to negotiate an end to 19 months of war at a standstill, troops are trying to grab territory for Bosnia's Muslims, Serbs and Croats.

About 15,000 people fled the fighting in Vares, 20 miles north of Sarajevo. Until the recent fighting, the area had a reputation as the last undamaged town in central Bosnia.

About 650 Croats went west and reached safety in Croat-held Kiseljak, where they were being housed in schools and barracks. Another 2,500 went east to Serb-held territory, apparently taking the chance they would be treated better by Serbs than by advancing government soldiers.

Most of the rest were believed to be hiding in the forests, despite bitterly cold weather.

Relief workers were having difficulty coaxing the refugees to leave the forests.

Nostalgia, food shine at India Nite '93

JILL PARADISE
Collegian

K-State students, faculty and members of the Manhattan community celebrated "India Nite '93" on Saturday.

India Nite featured a dinner of authentic Indian food and was followed by a cultural show.

"It was a team effort. Not one person organizes it. Everyone gets responsibilities," said Gurdip Singh, faculty adviser of India Student Association and assistant professor of computer science.

"We provide a venue of social gathering for the Indian community of Manhattan as well as their friends and their supporters," said Abdul Nizar, vice president of ISA and graduate student in computer science.

"It also provides an opportunity to exhibit the talents of the members, and of course, it is an opportunity to eat good food," Nizar said.

About 400 people attended the event, and Singh said he was pleased with the evening's turnout.

"I find it nice when people from other countries show up for our functions," Singh said.

The dinner consisted of dishes such as pulao, an Indian fried rice with spices, cashew nuts and peas. They also served their version of an American hamburger, bhaji, which is strictly vegetarian, and sambar, a spicy gravy used with rice.

Indian food is known for being spicy, Nizar said.

Walt Fisher, professor in economics, said he enjoyed the chance to sample Indian food.

"It's excellent and a very good variety. It is a treat to get spicy food in Manhattan," Fisher said.

The cultural program featured traditional Indian folk dancers and songs, and a skit about an event in an Indian man's everyday life.

They also performed songs from Indian movies that have become classics.

"They were done to give the audience a touch of nostalgia," Nizar said.

All of the performers were either students or faculty members. There are about 270 memberships in ISA. There is only one membership per family, so there are around 400 members, Nizar said.

During the show, Chandra Chittoor, president of ISA and graduate student in computer science, said he was happy the ISA had collected more than $2,500 for the Red Cross earthquake relief fund, which was sent to India.

"It is our most satisfactory achievement as ISA. The best part was that everyone came forward to help us in spite of such a busy schedule," Chittoor said.

Chittoor also invited Rm. Palaniappan, a world-famous artist who is exhibiting his work in the Union, to come up on stage. Palaniappan thanked the people of the United States for inviting him on his U.S. tour.

Overall, everyone agreed the evening was a success.

"We are very happy it went so well," Nizar said. "It was success beyond our expectations."

ATTEMPTED RAPE REPORTED

Students urged to try leadership

LISA STAAB
Collegian

The challenge is leadership. The reward is success.

These are the incentives of Blue Key Leadership Week, Nov. 8-11.

During Leadership Week, Blue Key senior honorary will feature alumni speakers who will bring leadership into the next century, said DeLoss Jahnke, senior in agricultural journalism and co-director of Blue Key Leadership Week.

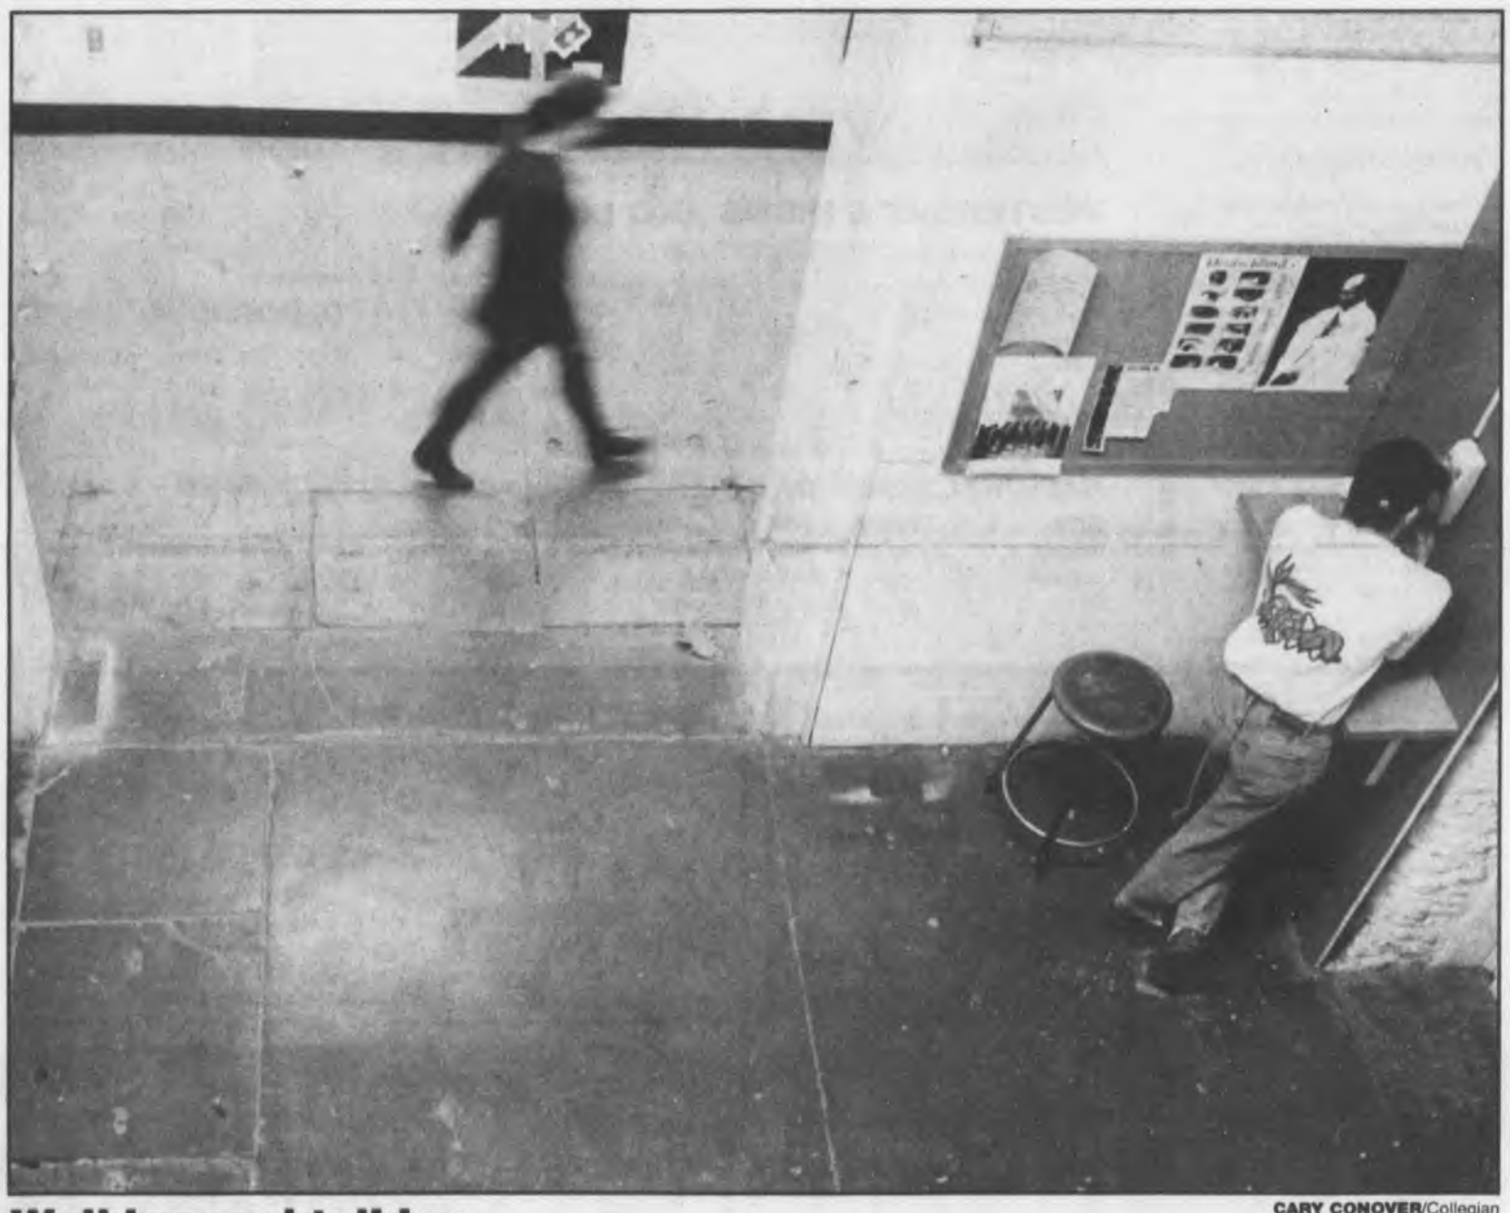
"We think this week is a great way for current students to have a chance to meet with K-State alumni, and the alumni get the chance to share secrets of their success," he said.

Jahnke said alumni will represent six of the eight colleges. Eleven speakers will discuss a variety of topics during their 40-minute presentations and question/answer sessions.

Jelena Jovanovic, senior in psychology and co-director of Blue Key Leadership Week, said prominent speakers include Robert Miller, speaker of the Kansas House of Representatives; Linda Slattery, volunteer; Stacey Campbell, former employee of Hallmark Inc.; Randy Pohlman, former dean of the College of Business Administration; and Mitch Holthus, voice of the Wildcats.

The week should encourage students to become involved in leadership opportunities, Jahnke said.

"I think with either one-on-one contact or watching the speakers can serve as a motivation for the students. It shows that graduates of K-State can become senior vice president of Paine Webber or director of human resources at Koch Industries," Jahnke said.



"We want to show that these were once K-State students who progressed to achieve great success," he said.

Pat Bosco, vice president of institutional advancement and Blue Key adviser, said Leadership Week was initiated three years ago.

"We felt it was an important service for the University, and if Blue Key could provide this service, it complemented the educational mission of the University," Bosco said.

Jovanovic said she agreed with Bosco.

"We want to bring leadership issues of the real world to campus," she said. "Through these different viewpoints, students can broaden their horizons about real life after college and how leadership can benefit their community and career."

Jewish settlers protest rabbi's death

BEIT KAHEL, Occupied West Bank — Palestinian gunmen opened fire Sunday on a car carrying a prominent right-wing rabbi, killing his driver and injuring the rabbi.

Jewish settlers responded with protests, a veiled threat to murder Arabs in revenge and reported shootings of Palestinians.

Rabbi Haim Druchman, a former legislator of the right-wing National Religious Party, suffered slight wounds in the arm and shoulder. His driver, Gaza Strip settler Ephraim Ayubi, was killed, the army said.

They were traveling near the Palestinian village of Beit Kahel outside Hebron when Arabs in a passing vehicle opened fire, the army said.

It was unclear whether Druchman, a founder of the Gush Emunim settler movement, had been targeted. West Bank commander Gen. Nehemiya Tamari told reporters that the shooting had been random.

The Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine, a PLO faction led by Nayef Hawatmeh, took responsibility for the attack in an announcement in Damascus, Syria. The group opposes the Israel-PLO peace talks.

But Israel radio said authorities believed the attack was carried out by the militant Islamic group Hamas, also opposed to the peace talks.

The killing, on a busy road linking Hebron to the Mediterranean coast, was the second in the occupied West Bank in two weeks. The stabbing of a settler Oct. 29 set off several days of riots.

Aharon Domb, a spokesman for the settlers, said they would make sure the territories would roar and tremble as long as Jews are being killed every week.

In Hebron, Jewish settlers from the nearby Kiryat Arba settlement burned Arab cars and rampaged through the market smashing windows, overturning tables and shooting in the air, Arab reporters said. Three Arabs were reportedly treated for bullet wounds in the legs or arms.

A fourth Palestinian was shot in the chest while driving by Kfar Darom, the Gaza settlement where Ayubi lived, Arab reports said.

Palestinians retaliated with firebomb assaults on Israeli cars in the Jerusalem area and the West Bank, but no one was injured, Israeli reports said. The army erected roadblocks throughout the territories to search for the Arab gunmen and closed off the Hebron area. Most Palestinians were prevented from entering Israel, where many work.

Several hundred settlers tied up traffic in downtown Jerusalem by sitting down in a main road after Ayubi's funeral. Protesting the peace accord, some held signs showing Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin dressed as PLO chairman Yasser Arafat.

Five policemen and two protesters were injured, and 38 protesters were detained.

Settlers said they would shut all West Bank roads to Arab traffic for three hours Monday morning.

"The anger is accumulating," warned Kiryat Arba council leader Zvi Katsover. He said an army commander who met with settlers Sunday was told, "Don't be surprised if, in the near future, some lone settler enters an Arab village and cuts down 30 or 40 people."

Tamari, the West Bank commander, said settler vigilance would not be tolerated and that six settlers were detained Sunday in the territories for unlawful actions.

Druchman, a strong advocate of Jewish settlements in occupied Arab lands, was headed to a study session at Kiryat Arba, a militant Jewish settlement, when he was attacked.

His station wagon was riddled with 18 bullet holes and hung over the edge of a steep drop. Its bumper sticker read "We're not leaving Gaza — The Security Zone of the South."

Many Jewish settlers bitterly oppose Israel's peace accord with the Palestine Liberation Organization, which initially will lead to Palestinian self-rule in the West Bank town of Jericho and in Gaza.

Swedes return fire at Bosnian village

Peacekeepers in midst of conflict in rescue attempt

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Three Swedish peacekeepers were abducted by Bosnian Serbs and held for several hours Sunday after shooting broke out while the Swedes were trying to rescue refugees.

Although the soldiers were released unharmed, the incident was a dramatic demonstration of how easily U.N. troops can become embroiled in conflict as the situation in Bosnia deteriorates.

About 35 Swedish soldiers have gone to the village of Dastansko to aid 500 refugees who have fled a recent outburst of fighting in the area.

Bosnian Serbs and Croats had formed an unusual alliance to defend the village from surrounding Muslim-led government troops.

The Swedes came under fire from unknown assailants and opened fire themselves, said Capt. Niels Pedersen, a representative at U.N. headquarters in Kiseljak, west of Sarajevo.

A Bosnian Serb officer was wounded by a ricocheting Swedish bullet and that was the reason for the abduction, he said.

However, Cmdr. Idesbald van Biesebroeck, a U.N. representative in Sarajevo, said the wounded officer was from the government forces.

After Serbs abducted the three soldiers, the rest of the Swedish contingent pulled back to nearby Vares, said Swedish defense ministry representative Jonas Mautizon.

NATO jets reportedly flew low over Dastansko in a show of strength while the Swedes were held for several hours.

Vares and its environs had been a patch of relative calm and ethnic harmony amid the bloodshed and shifting alliances of the Bosnian war.

The government army drove Bosnian Croat forces out of Vares last week, avenging a Croat massacre of Muslim civilians in the village of Stupni Do.

The taking of Vares could help the Bosnians break the siege of Sarajevo, the capital, some 20 miles to the south. But it also sent Muslim-Croat relations plummeting even lower.

Although Muslims and Croats had been loosely allied against the Serbs at the beginning of the war, that cooperation collapsed in recent months and left the Croats and Serbs fighting separate campaigns against the Bosnian forces.

But in Dastansko, Bosnian Serb artillery helped the Bosnian Croats beat back an attack by government forces on Saturday, said Lt. Col. Bill Aikman, a U.N. representative in Sarajevo.

Fighting resumed Sunday after the Swedes withdrew, Pedersen said.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTIVITIES

A look at what the legislative branch has in store in the near future.

Legislation aimed at substantially changing the Mining Law of 1872 is due to hit the floor of the House this week. The bill would require for the first time the environmental restoration of hard-rock mines and would increase fiscal responsibility of hard rock mining companies. The Senate already has passed a version of the measure, and the House Natural Resources Committee approved its version last week.

A House Government Operations panel will focus Tuesday on problems with a U.S. treaty with Mexico that provides for the extradition of people accused of crimes. Among the witnesses will be a 5-year-old girl who was sexually assaulted by a Mexican national who then fled to his homeland. The Mexican government has declined a formal U.S. extradition request for the suspect. The other key witness is the father of a Mexican-American woman murdered outside a hospital emergency room. In this case, too, the prime suspect fled to Mexico to avoid prosecution.

Hangout closed briefly in memory of Phoenix

WEST HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (AP) — It's quiet time at the Viper Room.

The trendy hangout for young Hollywood stars is mourning the death of River Phoenix, who collapsed outside.

On the sidewalk where he fell, there are candles, flowers and sympathy cards. On the club's black front door, someone has scrawled "Have A Nice Day, River," complete with a happy face symbol.

A telephone answering machine message at the club owned by teen idol Johnny Depp said, "With much respect to River and his family, the Viper Room will be temporarily closed. Thank you."

Amid the sadness over the 23-year-old's unexplained death, rumors fly.

Drug abuse by the rich and famous is nothing new here among the legendary speakeasies like the Whiskey A Go Go and the Rainbow. But Phoenix was known for his clean-living, neo-hippie vegetarianism. Did that all change?

The coroner's report on Phoenix's death is not yet in, but talk is cheap.

Royal Purple awarded 1993 all-American

The K-State Royal Purple yearbook has won again.

The Associated Collegiate Press awarded the Royal Purple the all-American award recently for the 1993 yearbook.

Publications are judged in five categories: concept/essentials, coverage, design, writing/editing and photography.

The Royal Purple received marks of distinction in all five categories, ranging from very good to superior.

"The Royal Purple has received more all-American awards than any other school in the nation," said Linda Puntney, assistant director of Student Publications Inc. and Royal Purple adviser.

Having received the award every year since 1980, a tradition of excellence has been firmly established.

"I think there's a bit of pressure to continue that all-American tradition," Puntney said. "But it's always nice when your journalistic peers recognize you for your hard work."

Staci Cranwell, assistant editor for the 1993 Royal Purple and senior in elementary education, said there is a certain amount of pressure to succeed.

"We've won it for so many years, but it is always neat to win an award you've worked so hard for all year long and to see the results of your work," she said.

Hit team assassinates Colombian senate VP

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — The vice president of Colombia's senate died Sunday of wounds suffered when he was gunned down in Medellin two days earlier by a hit team citing his role in writing a new drug trafficking law.

Dario Londono Cardona, 45, died of brain injuries. He never regained consciousness after being shot in the head and arm at the University of Medellin, where he taught.

A previously unknown group called Death to Protectors of the Cali Cartel claimed responsibility for the attack minutes after the shooting in a phone call to a radio station. The station gave the claim credibility because the caller knew details of the attack before they were reported.

The group said it attacked Cardona because he helped write a new penal code that offers leniency to drug traffickers who surrender and tell authorities about their operations. The group, which said it backs fugitive Medellin cocaine cartel boss Pablo Escobar, said the law favors leaders of the rival Cali cartel.

The two drug trafficking organizations have been fighting a behind-the-scenes war. Cali cartel members are believed to be among members of a clandestine group called People Persecuted by Pablo Escobar, which has been murdering his followers.

Leftist guerrillas also claimed responsibility for the attack on Cardona, but the claim has been given little credence.

The government has offered the equivalent of $625,000 as a reward for information leading to the capture of the killers.

Brazilian corruption inspires first protests

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — Thousands of people dressed in white marched down Rio's beaches Sunday in the first public protest against the country's latest corruption scandal.

Protesters were asked to wear white to clean the mud of Brasilia, the nation's capital, said city councilman Carlos Minc, a march organizer.

More than 30 current and former public officials are being investigated for their alleged roles in stealing money from public coffers, laundering it through the state lottery and receiving abundant bribes.

"The system is still rotten from years past, and now the rats are visible," said march organizer Herbert de Souza, one of Brazil's leading sociologists.

Approximately 10,000 people gathered for the march.

Luxurious waterfront apartments were decorated with big white banners, some of which said, "Jail for the crooks."

Puke Weasel rides success of 'Unclean'

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

Although their name might imply a sickly mammal trailing a stream of gastric juices, the members of Puke Weasel actually have a witty sense of humor.

An interview with the 2-year-old band was filled with seriousness and sarcasm. After scraping up enough money to share one drink among themselves, each member of Puke Weasel took a small gulp.

"We're the poorest band in town," Dave Boomer, bassist for Puke Weasel, said after putting down the hard-earned beer.

"Right now, we are trying to persevere," he said.

Despite the lack of funds, Puke Weasel continues by taking everything in stride.

Vocalist Andrew Sample said recent events have given the band new hope.

"We're in the right place at the right time," he said.

Crawling up from the dark, murky depths of Manhattan's music scene, Puke Weasel is drawing national attention from the music industry.

The band is riding the success of its second album, "Unclean," and is receiving airplay on college radio stations in Chicago, Memphis and even Canada. Positive album reviews in magazines such as "Foundations" and "Aiding & Abetting" also help with national awareness.

Drummer Alan Keithley said the new material on "Unclean" is more complex than ever before.

"There's a lot more of a thought process involved in (making new songs). We usually come up with riffs, and then we'll integrate," Keithley said. "The new album is more sophisticated."

The band cites Black Sabbath, Helmet, KISS, Iron Maiden, Henry Rollins and early Metallica as significant influences. Guitarist Brian Root said their music has a common goal.

"We play music that inspires an emotion or response," Root said. "We inspire aggression, but we don't like destructive things.

"We play real thrash, hardcore stuff," he said. "It's serenity through aggression."

Sample said he feels Puke Weasel's music was a creative outlet.

"It's controlled aggression," Sample said. "It's a good release."

Sample said the lyrics usually come from familiar situations such as personal experiences.

"I don't write anything I don't know about," he said. "The lyrics don't have to rhyme, but just sound cool."

Cool or not, Puke Weasel members said they are on the right track and expect big changes in the future.

Sample said several record labels, such as Roadrunner, Metalblade and I.R.S., are looking at their material.

Despite the national exposure, Sample said the local media and radio stations aren't giving them the slightest recognition.

Attitudes are about to change, Sample said.

"Not many know how close we are to getting labels," Sample said. "If they don't check us out now, they'll have to jump on the bandwagon later."

Both Boomer and guitarist Doug Minner said Puke Weasel deserves respect as an accomplished band.

"We're the tightest band in this town, with something a little better than everyone else," Minner said. "I want people to know we're here."

"If people want the heavy stuff, we're here," Boomer said.

Sample responded with a grin.

"We are the heaviest band in town," he said.

On the comical side, Puke Weasel members spoke about what they expect in the future. Minner said he would like to see future audiences remember a few tips.

"People need to learn to mosh properly," Minner said. "There needs to be mosh etiquette."

Sample said although the band enjoys the enthusiasm from the crowd, sometimes people are pretty foolish.

"It's cool to see, but we stand back and laugh," he said.

When asked what kind of audience Puke Weasel wants to attract, Boomer smiled and said he isn't picky when it comes to playing for certain crowds.

"We'll play for anybody that pays," he said.

Plans pour in for solution to world-wide water scarcity

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — People from Los Angeles to Beijing to Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, are having to look farther and farther away for fresh water, and a new report says water scarcity is a spreading global problem.

Proposals for solving the problem have ranged from towing in icebergs from Antarctica or giant plastic bladders filled with lake water to building desalination plants or international water pipelines.

But these ideas will not be enough to quench the world's thirst, said Bob Engelman, co-author of the report by Population Action International, a non-profit family planning advocacy group.

"Expense keeps getting in the way," Engelman said.

"The bottom line of this is simply that the rate of population growth in countries experiencing water scarcity is vastly outpacing population growth of the world as a whole."

By 2025, one out of three people will be living in countries with inadequate fresh water supplies, according to the report "Sustaining Water: Population and the Future of Renewable Water Supplies."

The current ratio is about one out of 15.

The report is based on projections of population growth for 149 countries, combined with known data on renewable fresh-water supplies. The country with the biggest supply is Iceland, with 666,667 cubic meters of water available per person per year. The lowest is in Djibouti, with 23 cubic meters.

Djibouti and 19 other countries are listed as water-scarce, with fewer than 1,000 cubic meters per person. That's not enough to sustain human health or economic development, scientists say.

Eight more countries have what scientists call water-stressed conditions, with fewer than 1,700 cubic meters per person.

Over the next three decades, between 46 and 52 countries will be either water-stressed or water-scarce, the report said.

"There are no substitutes — as human populations grow, there's less renewable water for each person," Engelman said.

Stick to the trend and leave Union free of all tobacco products

Don't sell it. Don't smoke it.

Union Governing Board is considering allowing tobacco produets to be sold in the Union again. This idea is unhealthy, unwanted and possibly unworkable.

Since August 1991, the Union has been a non-smoking building, and Union Director Jack Sills said K-State was the first in the Big Eight to completely ban smoking in a student union. We were on the cutting edge nationwide in regard to this policy.

Let's not be on the cutting edge of reversing this trend we helped start. There are several reasons for keeping the ban on smoking and selling tobacco products in the Union.

One of the most important reasons for continuing the policy is a basic health reason. It is a proven medical fact that smoking is harmful to your health.

Cigarette smoking claims more than 400,000 lives every year and is the leading preventable cause of death in the nation. A recent study by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention shows every cigarette steals seven minutes of a smoker's life.

The supporters of the proposal will say they just want to bring tobacco product sales back into the Union. The reality is after a few years of selling tobacco products in the Union, another movement will start up with their motto being, "If they can sell it, why can't we smoke or chew it?"

A non-scientific survey was taken of 72 students during the Activities Carnival. The first question was, "What services does the Union provide that you would like to see continued?" The largest number of respondents said they would like to continue the non-smoking environment.

On the other hand, the third question asked, "What services does the Union not provide that you would like to see added?" Only two people said they would like to see smoking brought back into the Union.

Granted, this is not a very large sampling of student opinions, but the fact that so many students said they wanted to keep smoking out of the Union to such an open-ended question sends a strong, clear message of how they feel.

To quote Sills: "It has turned out to be a pretty good policy." In keeping with what the students want and what is healthy for the majority of students, staff and faculty at K-State, we should keep smoking and the sale of tobacco products out of the Union.

Contact the student representative on the Union Governing Board and tell them to continue this successful policy.

Solving the parking problem

The parking crisis continues to grip K-State in spite of the many pledges and proposals offered by student government in recent months. Hundreds of students and faculty continue to deal with the evils of bipedal locomotion every day.

Historically, the bureaucracy of student government has spun its wheels when confronting the parking crisis. An official from the Skoog administration, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, estimated that last year Student Senate allocated $3,000 for a study of the studies that have been done on the parking problem.

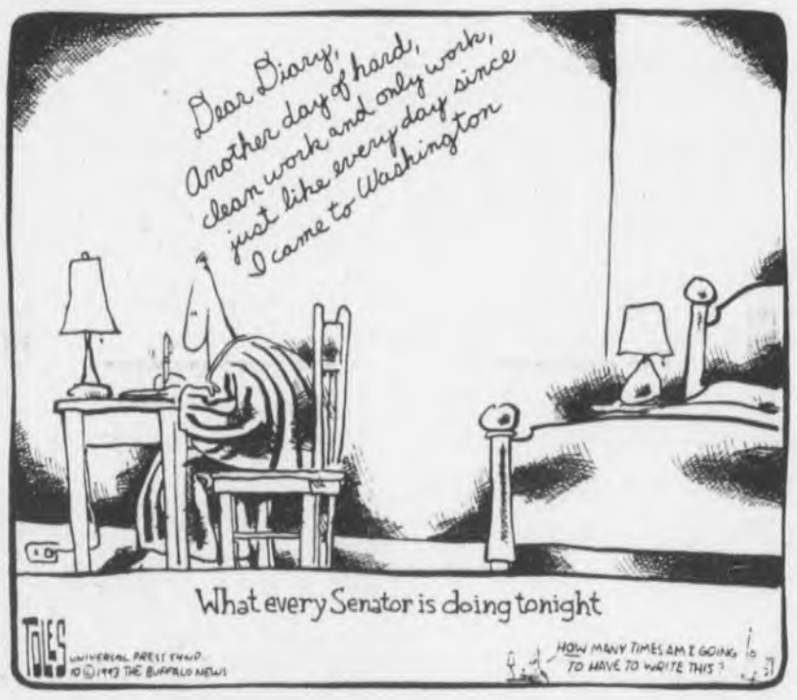
I have formulated several proposals I believe student government should consider as solutions to the parking crisis.

The first proposal is a gondola system stretching from the top of the "Manhattan" and "KS" hills to the roof of Bluemont Hall. A gondola is a car or cabin suspended from and moved along by a cable supported by elevated structures such as hills or towers.

K-State commuters could drive to either hill and park their cars inside the actual hill in a giant parking garage to be constructed by the developers of NORAD (North American Air Defense Command). Don't worry, the construction of the parking garage would come at no cost to K-State students. The Clinton administration would likely subsidize any such construction as part of its defense conversion plan.

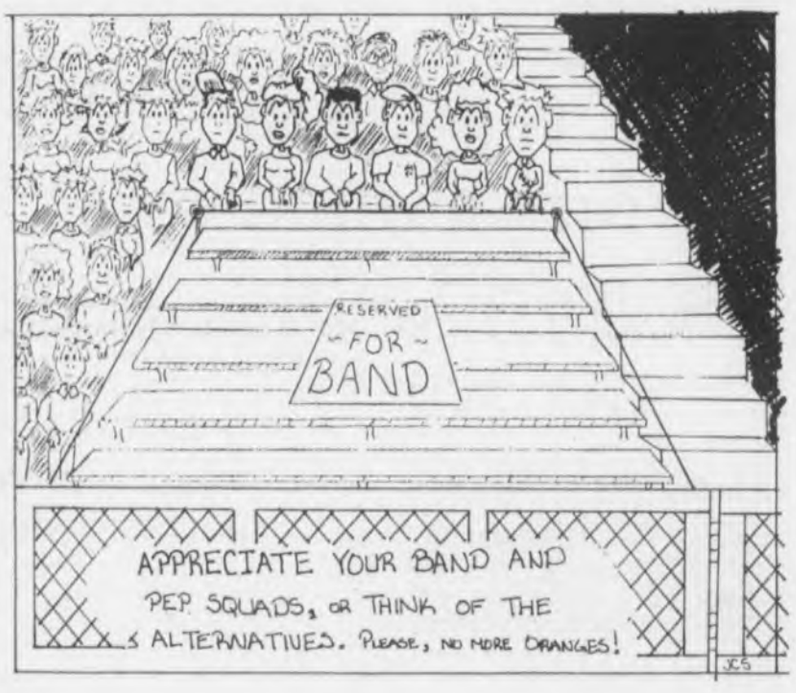
JOHN HART

The second proposal is a giant human catapult to be stationed in the Bramlage parking lot. The technology was perfected by the Roman Empire but has rarely been used for peaceful purposes since. A group of students weighing a combined total of as close to 1,000 pounds as possible, for reasons of trajectory, would be launched onto campus. A net stretched across the 'quad' area between Willard Hall, Waters Hall, Farrell Library and Leasure Hall would catch the incoming students.



The third and final proposal is a parking garage on the lawn of the president's home. Throughout the normal travels of the day, we rarely notice that the president's lawn is enormous and certainly too large for the parking crisis facing the University community.

Negotiating this proposal would be difficult. I would encourage student government to allow President Wefald to live in the Union. It comes complete with a kitchen, several sets of luxurious couches and chairs and automated bathroom facilities. The president's current home would then become the new Union.



With hard work, dedication and a lot of ingenuity, I believe the University community can solve the parking problem, but only if we band together and fight this crisis as a team.

I WOULD ENCOURAGE STUDENT GOVERNMENT TO ALLOW PRESIDENT WEFALD TO LIVE IN THE UNION.

Farrell's journal woes go deeper than just major-budget slashing

Editor,

I would like to clarify the issue of journal reductions in Farrell Library. Everyone has heard that $220,000 worth of serials will not be reordered this year; this is in addition to the $400,000 worth of journals we have lost in the past five years. Journals are the life of any intellectual community, and K-State is suffering because of these losses.

This lack of funding has been a problem for many years. President Jon Wefald has explained that before he came here in 1986, our library was inadequately funded for 75 years. Since then, Wefald and his staff have made Farrell top priority. Now we see another setback occurring. The companies that produce the journals in Europe and Japan are being taken over by larger companies looking for profit. They have jacked the prices up an average of 10-15 percent a year. Our University only gives Farrell a 2-4 percent increase in budget. This difference is the $220,000 in proposed cuts for this year.

Still, Farrell is the poorest-funded library in the Big Eight. Now, it is time for the University to find solutions. The Senate Faculty proposed a reallocation to solve the problem. Although reallocation should be done every year to ensure the money goes where it should, this cannot solve our dilemma.

We need to remember that a major reallocation was accomplished in 1990, and when two major base budget cuts were made to the University in the past seven years, the library did not feel those cuts. This means that other parts of our University have already been cut to help better fund Farrell. We can only take away so much from different areas before there becomes severe deficiencies throughout K-State.

In order to have a good, wide variety of journals K-State can draw on, we need to find money from outside sources. We all see how much money people are willing to give to athletics; there must be a similar financial reserve that the academics can use. It will be difficult to encourage people to donate money to a cause that leaves no names or plaques, but it is not impossible. We need creative ideas that will create the names and plaques that will bring in money to Farrell. Being a part of this University, we should support our academics just as strongly as we support our athletics.

Learning what is and what has been at K-State just fascinating

Editor,

I have been here at K-State for four years now, and, I admit, I am not the most knowledgeable student when it comes to K-State trivia. The other day, on my way home, I took a leisurely stroll through campus. I noticed a cult of people carrying purple folders so I followed. Actually, it was a student giving campus tours to high-school people. I listened as I casually peered from building to building. Anderson Hall is the oldest building on campus ... Nichols Hall was once a gymnasium before it burned down ... Memorial stadium used to house the football games ... What a wonderful service these tours are! In one 10-minute stroll, K-State suddenly had a history and an interesting past. The hall names were not just random names from a phone book or generous alumni, but rather, they bear the names of past University presidents. K-State has pride in its heritage that is reflected everyday. Someday, I will come back to see Wefald Hall and smile to myself for having felt a part of a long line of history. Again, keep up the good work, campus tour guides.

▶ SAFETY

Just because one is on foot does not mean one can ignore lights

Editor,

I am writing in response to William Wood's letter in the Nov. 5 Collegian. I agree totally with what Wood was talking about. However, if safety is the issue, then let's talk about the intersections with lights.

The University spent thousands of dollars to put in the stoplight at Denison Avenue and College Heights Road for the "students' safety." These same students cross against the red and, more times than not, do not even look. I drive Denison every day on my way to and from work, and half the time I have to slow down for pedestrians who are tired of waiting for their turn.

What are these people thinking? If a driver has the green light, they aren't always going to watch for every person on the side street to guess if they are going to step out in front of them. This shouldn't be a concern for the drivers. That was the other reason for the light.

I understand that the walkers have the right of way on campus, but when they just walk whenever they want to, on this size campus, it's a wonder more people have not been hit. It's sad, but it is a reality that all walkers should take into consideration — not everyone will stop.

Video exams improve accuracy

KRISTEN WELBORN
Collegian

The introduction of case-study videos has caused the traditional pen-and-paper form of exam-taking to become obsolete for some students enrolled in K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine.

John Pickrell, associate professor of clinical sciences, said first-semester juniors in the vet med program have shown a 20-percent increase in diagnostic accuracy within the six months of their clinical rotations in toxicology. Their improvement is partially due to using video technology in the students' first toxicology course.

This increase in the test scores can be attributed to the videos specially prepared for the students, which involve watching the actual procedure being performed on the animal and the decision-making process that results from drawing conclusions in a clinical setting, he said.

The videos are an intermediate step between being taught by pencil-and-paper illustration to actually visualizing and observing situations that the veterinary students could possibly face after graduation, Pickrell said.

"If these videos catch on, hopefully many of the North American Veterinary Colleges will purchase the videos and use them for teaching," Pickrell said.

The long-term plan is to sell K-State's videos to other schools and implement them into part of their curriculum.

Before this happens, however, a system must be worked out so that the professors using the videos at other schools would be able to use the tapes without Pickrell's direction and assistance.

The videos help students to first recognize the animal's health problem, learn how to treat the animal and execute the necessary steps needed to treat the animal.

By watching the tapes, the students are able to reinforce different techniques.

The students watch a video over the material but also perform a case format consisting of a hypothetical situation that an animal suffers.

Pickrell said he feels oral examinations give the students a good basis for the decision-making process.

The lengths of the videotapes rarely exceed 10 minutes, with a 50-minute video being the longest one produced to date.

Students are confronted with cases such as a dog that has a reoccurring skin problem, or a dog that had gauze left in its abdomen after surgery.

The students are asked how they would handle such a situation and what the response should be to the dog's owner.

"The videos have probably given the students a clearer idea of what they are expected to do," Pickrell said.

"They also provide a more uncriticized learning atmosphere," he said.

"The criteria used for diagnostic accuracy give the students a better understanding of how relevant this will be to their clinical practice."

Pickrell said he thought students seemed to like seeing the actual cases, and they also seemed to like the practice that came from seeing the procedure done on tape.

"It allows the students to demonstrate to themselves they can do this, and the system they're being tested in has meaning," Pickrell said.

"And they can succeed in it."

Moscow places ban on Revolution Day

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Heavily armed troops and police backed by armored vehicles blocked attempts by mostly elderly communist demonstrators to mark Sunday's anniversary of the 1917 Bolshevik revolution.

The government had banned Revolution Day demonstrations in Moscow, fearing an outburst of the violence that shook the capital in October.

But peaceful demon-strations were held in other cities.

Nov. 7 was the most important holiday in the Soviet Union, marking the day that Bolsheviks chased the post-czarist provisional government from the Winter Palace in St. Petersburg, then known as Petrograd.

On Sunday, scores of communists tried to gather at a giant statue of Bolshevik leader Vladimir Lenin in October Square in central Moscow but were dispersed by riot police and herded into a nearby subway station. Some scuffles broke out, and there were several arrests.

"Are you Russians? We are patriots," a woman screamed as police pushed the demonstrators. "We need another Stalin."

Riot police and paramilitary troops ringed the area, where riots erupted Oct. 3 in support of hard-line lawmakers defying an order by President Boris Yeltsin to disband.

Those riots grew into fatal fighting in several parts of the city. The violence ended after tanks fired on the parliament building and drove out the rebellious lawmakers.

With that bloodshed still fresh in memory, the government was taking no chances Sunday. Paramilitary units with cannon-mounted armored vehicles were deployed in side streets around October Square, and helmeted, flak-jacketed police were posted at other points around the capital.

Several hundred protesters who tried to demonstrate at Lenin's tomb in Red Square were dispersed by riot police, but small groups of people were allowed to lay flowers at the tomb.

Protesters later gathered in the Moscow suburbs, but their calls for support were either ignored or met by taunts from passersby.

In one of the largest demonstrations, some 5,000 people carrying communist flags and banners demonstrated in St. Petersburg.

"Yeltsin is a butcher," the crowd chanted.

Police did not intervene.

Revolution Day once was marked by huge military parades, which were reviewed by the Kremlin leaders as they stood atop Lenin's mausoleum and by vast flag-waving rallies.

The last military parade was held in 1990, 13 months before the Soviet Union collapsed.

Russians are being rewarded with a day off on Monday.

Aidid says U.S. troops should not return to Mogadishu

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid warned U.S. troops not to return to the streets of Mogadishu, saying Sunday their presence could violate a four-week-old cease-fire with foreign troops.

"There is no need to deploy U.S. troops on the streets of Mogadishu," Aidid said. "That may be provocative. I cannot see any reason for the massive deployment: Mogadishu is calm.

"Painful memories of U.S. massacres are still fresh in the Somali people," he said, adding the U.S. government will bear the full responsibility for any trouble that may break out.

U.S. reinforcements, Army troops on the ground, Marines still at sea, poured into Somalia after an Oct. 3 firefight killed 18 American soldiers. Their main mission is to protect U.S. and foreign troops, but officials said they also will keep roads open and put pressure on bandits.

President Clinton reiterated that position on Sunday, saying on NBC's "Meet the Press" that U.S. soldiers there cannot be expected to hide and stay behind walls. That almost puts them at greater risk, he said.

Aidid, accused of launching attacks that have killed dozens of peacekeepers since June 5, told the United Nations to get out of Somalia, saying the humanitarian effort has disintegrated into a bloody military campaign against his people with no chance of reconciliation.

"There are no negotiations, and I don't expect any in the future," said the man who controls south Mogadishu. The U.N. force is responsible for the current problems. They are the biggest obstacle to peace, he said.

He dashed the U.N.'s hopes that a newly formed Mogadishu Security Advisory Committee could be a forum for improving the dangerous streets and setting up more substantive talks on the country's future. He said his faction, which attended the second meeting last week, won't show up any more.

In having a news conference for about 15 foreign news organizations and local media, Aidid was making his most public appearance since late May. Until recently, he was the target of an intense search that has largely been called off with a change in policy here.

Aidid faction officials led a convoy of journalists on a winding trip through the city's dusty back streets, stopping once to ensure they weren't being followed.

The destination was a compound where anyone entering was frisked.

When Aidid finally arrived, about an hour late, he once again was dressed as the politician he wants to be, in a freshly pressed white shirt and dark paisley tie.

Although he welcomed the recent change in U.S. policy in Somalia, pursuing reconciliation instead of his capture, Aidid criticized the arrival of U.S. reinforcements and heavy armor.

He urged the U.N. to release 43 remaining Somali detainees, including three of his top aides, who were captured Oct. 3, sparking the nine-hour firefight that killed 18 U.S. soldiers and an estimated 300 Somalis.

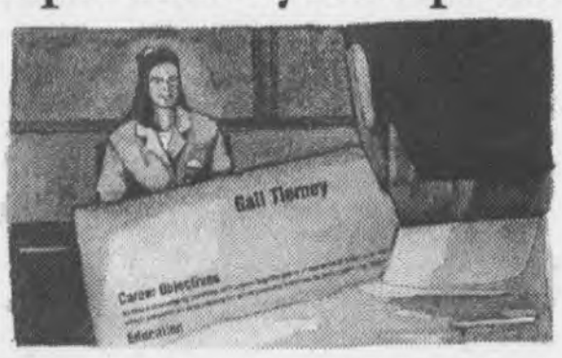
Sixteen detainees were freed overnight Saturday. One appeared at Aidid's news conference, claiming he was beaten during an interrogation and hit in the head with a rifle butt. Other than marks on his wrists from plastic handcuffs, he showed no sign of injuries.

Aidid said the detainees are getting sick and staging a five-day fast to protest their treatment, including alleged lack of access to doctors. U.N. officials were not immediately available for comment but have said the detainees have been treated well.

As he has for a month, Aidid tried to portray himself as a peacemaker and diplomat instead of the brutal warlord the U.N. has accused him of being.

Instead, he said, the U.N. operation has been the biggest obstacle to peace. He said the U.N. wants to rule Somalia for the next two years and deprive the people of their freedom and right to choose.

He also denied speculation that if the multinational contingent withdraws, the country will fall back into the civil war and anarchy that killed an estimated 350,000 people last year from conflict, starvation and disease.



He said there is no conflict between him and archrival Ali Mahdi Mohamed, who controls north Mogadishu, and claimed the streets are safe, even though fighting broke out nearly two weeks ago along the Green Line dividing north and south Mogadishu.

Iowa State serves up heartbreaker

K-State stumbles and falls 27-23 to Cyclones

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

AMES, Iowa — Whether it was overconfidence, a letdown or just the fact that K-State was outplayed Saturday doesn't really matter.

What does matter is the Wildcats still need one victory to qualify for a bowl game.

Iowa State rallied to stun K-State 27-23 Saturday at Cyclone Stadium, scoring 21 points in the final quarter.

"The emotion just wasn't there like it was for Oklahoma," wide receiver Andre Coleman said. "We just weren't in sync today, and it cost us.

"One of our main goals was to play on New Year's Day, and it's pretty much shot now."

Playing on Jan. 1, which would have been a coalition bowl game, would have been feasible if the Cats had won their remaining three games.

K-State dropped to 6-2-1 and 2-2-1 in the Big Eight Conference. The loss moved the Cats from a tie for second in the conference to fourth place.

The Cats took a 17-6 lead into the fourth quarter, but the Cyclones started to move the ball, and with 11:31 left, they scored on a four-yard run up the middle by quarterback Todd Doxzon, slicing the lead to 17-12.

"I felt a sense of urgency that we needed to score when they cut it to four points," Coleman said.

"But we didn't. They got the ball back and stuck it down our throats and scored. Give Iowa State all the credit in the world. They played hard for four quarters."

Iowa State held K-State to just 248 yards of total offense, a season low. The Cyclones' ground game, which yielded 247 yards, also allowed them to eat up the clock.

"It's a big letdown," running back J.J. Smith said. "They played better than we did today. I think we got too comfortable when we got ahead of them. We just didn't put things together."

The Cyclones had 35:26 of possession time, compared to 24:24 for the Cats.

"We are very confident in every game we play," Coleman said.

"Maybe we were a little overconfident for this game. I think we felt like there was no way this team could beat us."

The Cyclones ran the score up to 27-17 with 1:29 to play after Rodney Guggenheim ran it in from one yard out.

The scoring drive was set up after K-State quarterback Chad May threw four straight incomplete passes that enabled the Cyclones to regain possession from K-State's 29 yard line.

"We just did not do some of the mechanical things we needed to do in order to win, or have a chance to win," Coach Bill Snyder said.

"I don't believe our youngsters were not emotionally up to play this ballgame. There was too much at stake," Snyder said.

Defensive end Dirk Ochs set up K-State's go-ahead score in the second quarter with an interception at the Iowa State 46 yard line.

Cyclone quarterback Bob Utter tried to lob the screen pass over Ochs, but Ochs leaped in the air to make the catch. J.J. Smith took it in from the one yard line, capping a seven-play, 46-yard drive.

Tate Wright's 40-yard field goal and May's two-yard touchdown run were also a result of Cyclone turnovers. Percell Gaskins recovered an Utter fumble on Iowa State's nine-yard line, and Thomas Randolph intercepted a pass.

Iowa State took the opening kickoff 77 yards to set up a Ty Stewart 30-yard field goal, giving the Cyclones a 3-0 lead with 9:49 left in the first quarter.

K-State's offense was lethargic from the start and was forced to punt on its first three possessions. The Cats managed just 11 yards of output compared to 118 for the Cyclones in the first quarter.

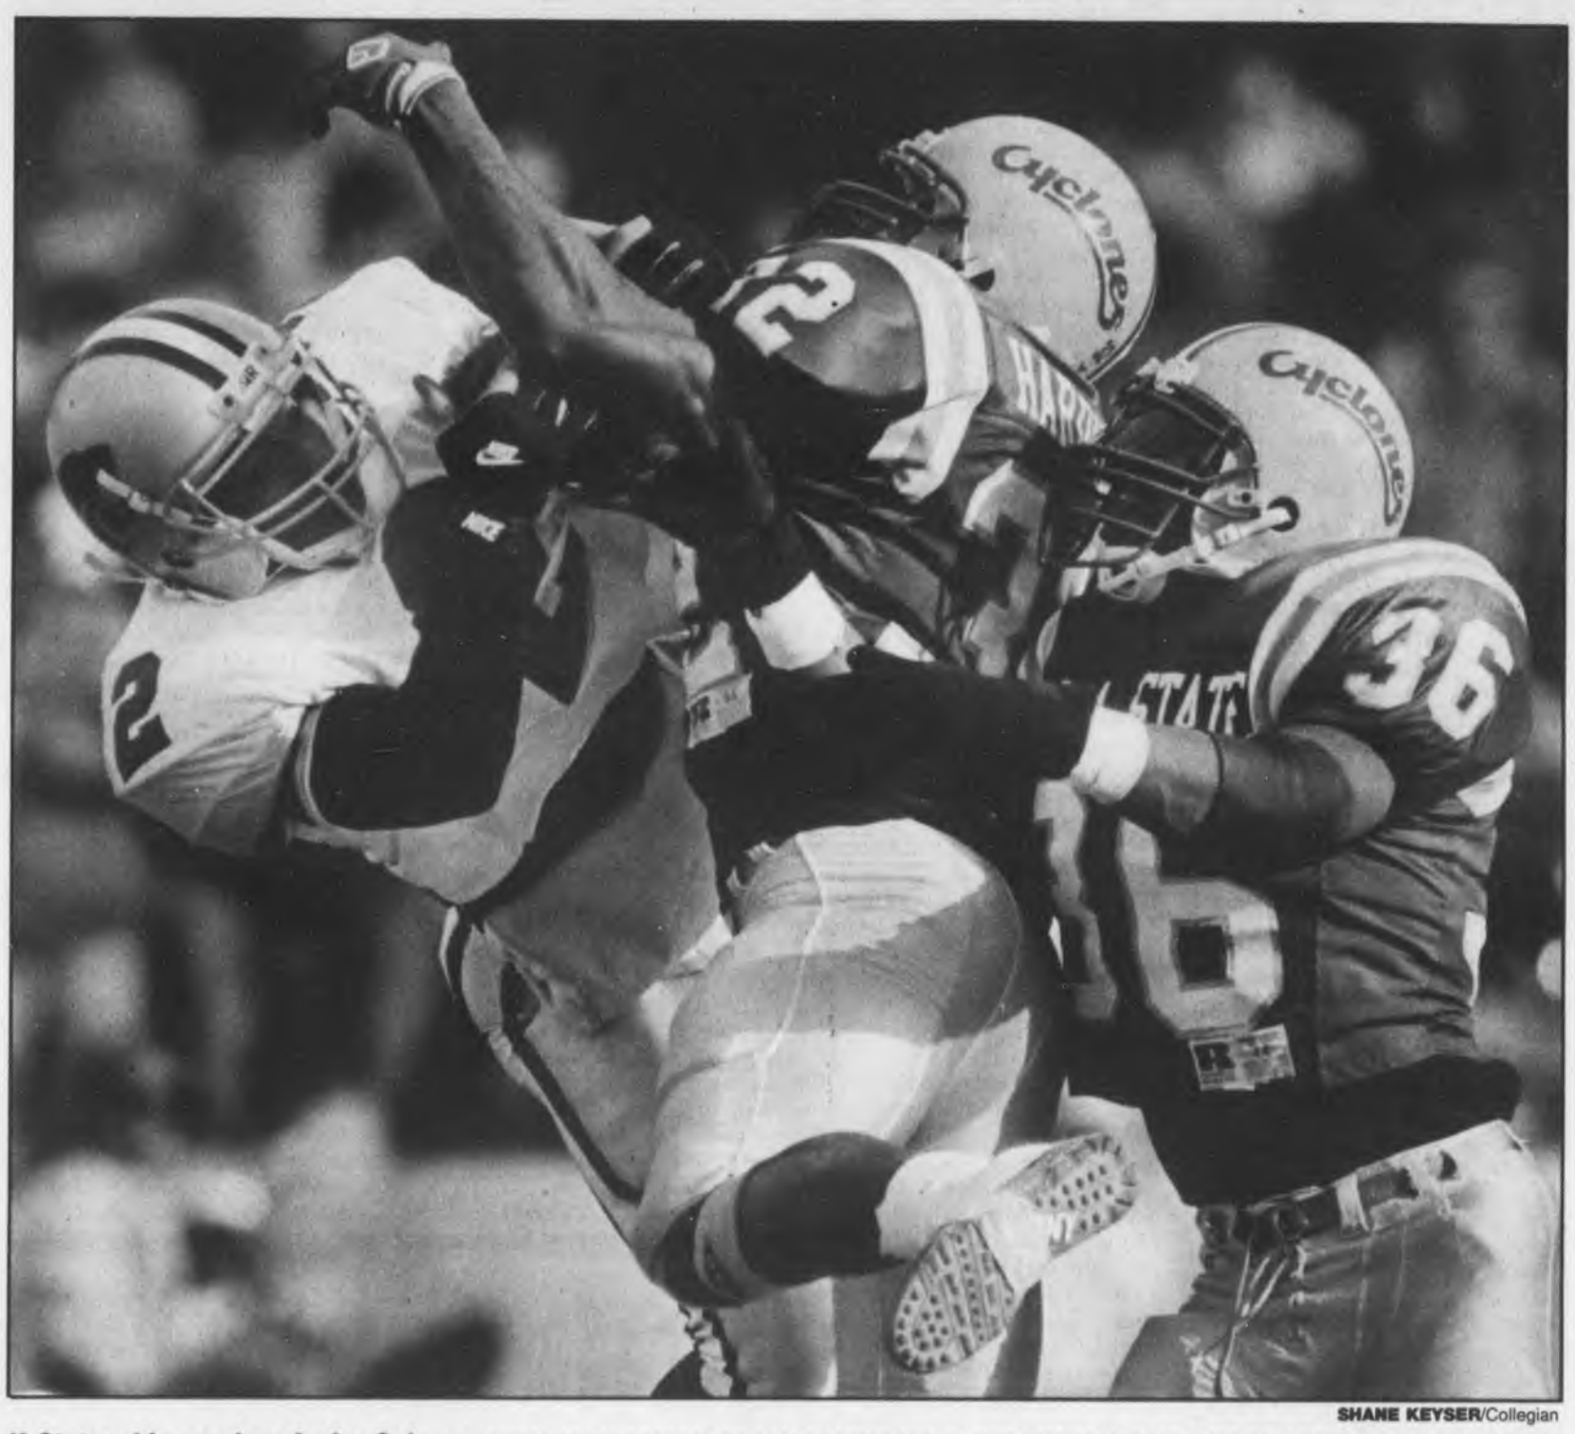
With 13:08 left in the first half, Stewart booted a 43-yard field goal. Iowa State took a 6-0 advantage before the Cats were able to cross the 50-yard line.

"We didn't earn it today. Iowa State earned it," Coleman said.

"We can't expect things to just fall our way. They executed well and made the plays when they had to."

With the loss, the Cats plunged to No. 24 in the Associated Press Poll and No. 23 in the USA Today/CNN Coaches Poll. K-State was previously ranked 18th in the AP poll and 17th in the USA Today/CNN Poll.

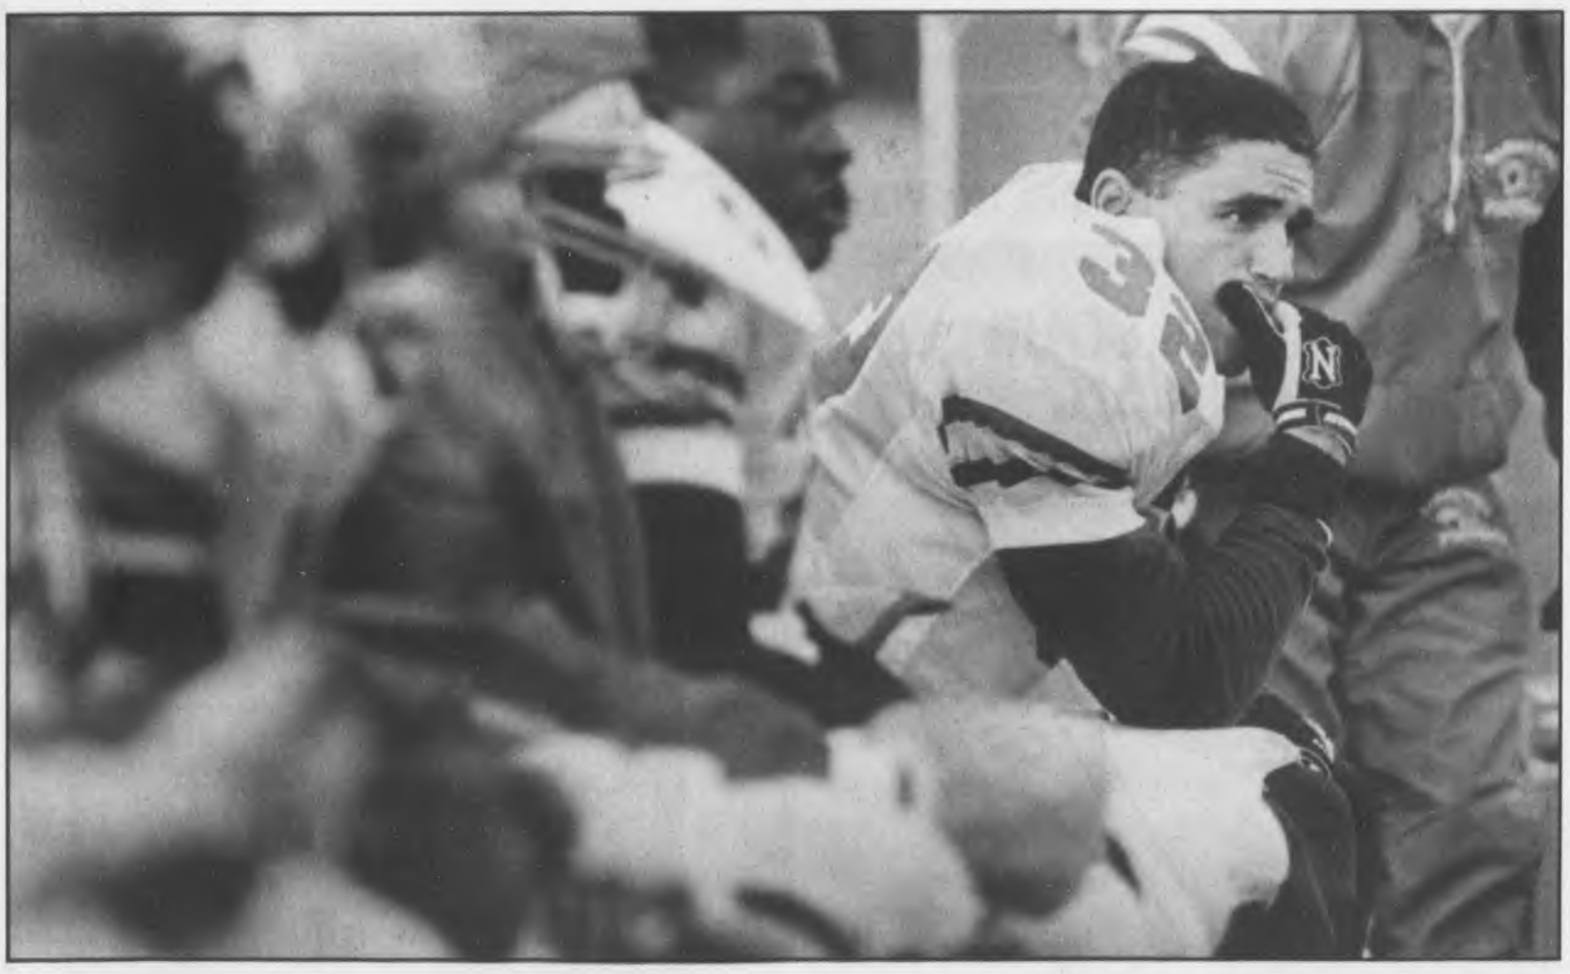
"They are tremendously disappointed," Snyder said.



"They hurt a great deal, and their pride was bent. I think they will handle it with class, come back on Monday and turn it on and make amends. But I know they are hurt."

Coleman said the setback wouldn't wreck the entire season.

"I don't think the guys will let this ruin our whole season," Coleman said. "K-State still hasn't been to a bowl game in a long time. We still have an excellent opportunity to be in one."



However. . .

"All I know is our dreams of playing on New Year's Day are over," he said.

K-State surrenders 3rd-quarter lead

Cyclones reel off 21 points in final quarter for victory

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

AMES, Iowa — The third quarter was over, and K-State was ahead 17-6, thanks to Iowa State's fourth turnover.

The Cyclones were ready to be buried, but the Wildcats forgot their shovels.

Iowa State opened the fourth quarter with a 16-play, 80-yard drive that soaked up seven minutes and 43 seconds from the clock.

The failed two-point conversion made the score 17-12.

"Considering the way our defense played in the first half, I really felt we would hold on better than that," Coach Bill Snyder said.

Iowa State followed with another touchdown drive of 68 yards on 10 plays, eight of which were running plays, to take a 20-17 lead with the successful two-point conversion.

Tony Booth, Iowa State center, caught a tipped pass on a third-and-six play at the 49 yard line and then muscled his way for a first down on the fourth play of the drive.

"Tony Booth should be the star," Iowa State Coach Jim Walden said.

"That is as big a play as a lineman can make."

The play allowed Iowa State to continue the drive that would eventually put the Cyclones ahead for good.

"I really didn't see anybody," Booth said.

"I just happened to look up and grab the ball, and that was my first instinct, to go for it. I didn't really worry about who was there."

The play typified the dominance the Cyclones had against the Cats in the fourth quarter.

The Cyclones added another touchdown with 1:29 remaining, after four incomplete passes by Chad May, giving Iowa State 21 points in the quarter.

The Cyclone offense controlled the ball for 11 of 15 minutes and rushed for 115 yards in the fourth quarter alone.

"I think they were getting tired inside," Booth said.

"They have a lot of quickness to cover the outside game, but inside we felt we could run right at them."

"Our offense didn't execute well. Our defense couldn't hold the lead in the second half, and our kicking broke down."

J.J. SMITH
K-STATE RUNNING BACK

The Cyclones had 20 running plays in the fourth quarter, 16 of which were up the middle at the heart of the K-State defense.

"Big plays came off the run after our passing loosened them up," Walden said.

The Cats' offense managed 86 yards in the quarter, 69 of which came on a last-minute drive capped off by a 54-yard catch and run by J.J. Smith.

Smith caught the 5-yard pass from May, then shuffled 49 yards for the touchdown with 22 seconds left.

"We didn't put everything together," Smith said. "Our offense didn't execute well. Our defense couldn't hold the lead in the second half, and our kicking broke down."

The Cats collected 248 yards of total offense. It was their lowest output of the year.

Game Notes K-STATE VS. IOWA STATE

✔ Running back J.J. Smith now has 66 points scored on the season. This is the fourth-best in K-State single-season history.
✔ With K-State's 10-0 scoring advantage in the third quarter, the Cats have outscored their opponents 70-3 during the third quarter.
✔ Chad May, with the 54-yard touchdown pass to J.J. Smith, has tied a Big Eight record by throwing a TD pass in eight-consecutive games.
✔ May now has 2,206 passing yards on the season, the third-best total in K-State's single-season history. He also has 2,180 of total offense, fourth-best in K-State's single-season history.
✔ Kevin Lockett has 628 receiving yards on the season with his 39 yards receiving on five catches. This is the sixth-best single-season mark in school history.
✔ Wide receivers Lockett and Mitch Running have pass receptions in all nine K-State games so far.
✔ A streaker ran across the field at the start of the fourth quarter.
✔ K-State was held to 248 yards of total offense — a season low.
✔ K-State still needs one more victory to qualify for a post-season bowl appearance.
✔ The loss was the first to Iowa State in four seasons.

Krieg to cover for Montana

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Dave Krieg brings out the diplomat in every opponent.

"Dave's a very smart quarterback," Green Bay quarterback Brett Favre said. "He can beat you at any time."

"I've always thought Dave Krieg was a fine quarterback," Packers' coach Mike Holmgren said.

Statistics are less tactful.

They say Kansas City's offense operates in one gear when Krieg's in control and quite another when the quarterback is Joe Montana.

Counting two possessions Montana started but Krieg finished, each quarterback in seven games has engineered 39 drives.

Behind Krieg, who makes his third start in relief of Montana Monday night against the Packers, the Chiefs have 54 first downs, 804 total yards and four touchdowns.

Behind Montana, who can't seem to heal a pulled left hamstring, it's 75 first downs, 1,311 yards and seven TDs.

The Montana Chiefs have run 129 pass plays as compared to the Krieg Chiefs 91.

The Montanas have kicked seven field goals. The Kriegs have kicked four.

In games where Montana has taken most of the snaps, the Chiefs are unbeaten. As a starter this year, Krieg is 1-1, not counting last week when he relieved Montana in the second quarter of a 30-10 loss at Miami.

It's no wonder the Chiefs (5-2), who are unbeaten at home this season, are favored by only 2 1/2 points over the Packers (4-3), who are making their first Monday night appearance since 1986.

"We won 10 games with Dave Krieg at quarterback last year," Chiefs' coach Marty Schottenheimer said. "You bet we can win with Dave."

Montana's nagging injuries are not a polite subject to raise at Arrowhead Stadium.

When they made a huge investment to wrest the NFL's all-time leading passer from San Francisco in the spring, a part-time starter was not what they had in mind.

"Did we think Joe Montana would play every down of every game?" Schottenheimer said. "We did not. That's why we have Dave Krieg."

The comparisons with Montana are not entirely fair since the offenses being used by the Chiefs and Packers trace their ancestry to the San Francisco 49ers of the 1980s.

It was designed for and built around Montana, who has helped tutor Chiefs' coaches as well as players in all its nuances.

Finally, however, Krieg is beginning to feel comfortable in the new attack..

"The longer you're around it, the more opportunities you get to practice it, the more comfortable you feel," he said.

"You can practice anything as much as possible, but it's not like getting game experience with it."

Krieg may get plenty of game experience this month. The hamstring Montana first injured Oct. 3 may require a rest of three or four weeks. Since three of the Chiefs' next four games are at home, it might be a good idea to wait for the injury to heal completely.

"Dave's a great quarterback," said Favre, who has the Packers on a three-game winning streak.

"I love the way he plays. He's a tough old joker. It's a tough situation for him, but if there's anyone who can handle it better than anybody, it's Dave."

Big Eight race expected to be close

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

OKLAHOMA CITY — The men's Big Eight basketball race this season is predicted to be a close one, league coaches and players said Sunday at the Big Eight conference's preseason media press conference.

Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton, whose team is predicted to win the conference this season, said having four starters returning from last year's Sweet 16 appearance in the NCAA Tournament is an edge.

"Our experience is a plus for us," said Sutton, whose Cowboys were 20-9 and tied for second in the league.

"I like our ball club. I think we are a top-20 team, but we aren't a top-10 team right now."

Sutton welcomes 7-foot center Bryant Reeves back to the Cowboy squad. Sutton said Reeves, who was named the Big Eight's preseason player of the year, has improved over the summer.

"He's more physical and more mature mentally," Sutton said.

"It helped that he went against Eric Montross (of North Carolina in the World Games) this summer. Going against Montross helped Reeves. I think he held his own."

EDDIE SUTTON
OSU COACH

Kansas, 29-7 and first in the league last year, is picked second for the Big Eight crown.

But the Jayhawks are ranked higher than Oklahoma State in many preseason magazines.

Coach Roy Williams said he isn't sure why the Jayhawks are picked as high as they are.

"I don't know why it happens," Williams said. "It might be our tradition, but we have lost several key players."

The Jayhawks lost four starters last year, including all-Big Eight guards Rex Walters and Adonis Jordan.

Nebraska's Danny Nee said this season will be the first time he won't use a center since becoming the Cornhusker coach.

"We'll go with four forwards and one point guard," said Nee, who was 20-11 and tied for second in the league.

"That means we've got to go to the boards with the lack of size, but we are a lot quicker and score a lot more points."

One team that usually scores a lot of points is Oklahoma.

Despite not making the NCAA Tournament last year, coach Billy Tubbs said the Sooners, who went 20-12 and tied for fifth place in the league last season, won't change their scheme with the newcomers.

"We have a chance to be a good team," Tubbs said.

"Our philosophy hasn't changed. We are going to get after the opposing teams on defense and cause some steals and shoot the three-pointers."

Colorado coach Joe Harrington said it will be difficult to shake his team's losing image.

"Overcoming our losing tradition is hard," said Harrington, whose Buffaloes are picked last in the league after going 10-17 and finishing in the basement of the Big Eight last season.

"I think we're making progress, but this league is difficult to play in."

Iowa State coach Johnny Orr said the Big Eight can perform well outside the league.

"There are no bad teams in the league," Orr said. "We should do great in the non-conference of our schedules.

"We should have a helluva year."

BASKETBALL

Kansas picked to win women's title

CHRISTOPHER WEAVER
Collegian

OKLAHOMA CITY — Expectations are high that more teams from the Big Eight Conference will be invited to the NCAA women's basketball tournament this year than in previous years.

The expansion of the field from 48 teams to 64 teams is one of the reasons for such high aspirations, which coaches expressed at the Big Eight media day on Sunday.

Out of the top 20 scorers in the Big Eight, 11 are returning from last season.

The conference also returns five of the top 10 rebounders, eight of the top 10 assist leaders, nine of the top 10 steals leaders and six of the top 10 shot blockers.

New Kansas State coach Brian Agler comes from the University of Missouri-Kansas City to inherit a Wildcat team voted to come in seventh by the other coaches in the Big Eight.

Agler is optimistic, however, and he said he hopes to implement a motion offense, taking full advantage of junior post Shanele Stires.

"Shanele is as good as anyone in the conference," Agler said.

"There are some key people we need a good year out of. We're going to control the tempo and give the right people the right shots at the right times."

Kansas is the Big Eight women's coaches' preseason pick as the team to beat.

The Jayhawks are led by junior guard Angela Aycock, who led her team in scoring, steals, assists and minutes played. The Jayhawks look to enter the national tournament for a third-straight year but must first get by such non-conference challenges from Georgia and the UMKC.

Predicted to finish second by the women's coaches is Colorado, anchored by senior foreword Jamiliah Lang and junior guard Shelley Sheetz.

Coach Ceal Barry must overcome the lack of experience entering the season with four sophomores and six freshmen.

Oklahoma State must depend on its sophomore class, highlighted by guards Stacy Coffey and Yogi York.

With no seniors and only three juniors, the Cowgirls are looking to continue challenging the conference and the nation as they did last year, finishing tied for 25th in both the Associated Press and the USA Today/CNN Polls.

Nebraska Coach Angela Beck looks to seniors Nafeesah Brown and Meggan Yedsena to pick up the slack from the loss of last year's Big Eight Female Athlete-of-the-Year Karen Jennings.

Nebraska's early challenge will come Dec. 8 from Southwest Missouri State in Springfield. All five starters from last year return for the Oklahoma Sooners, but their coach does not.

New coach Burl Plunkett will take his team to Lubbock on Dec. 21 to take on defending national champions Texas Tech.

Missouri coach Joann Rutherford has all but two starters returning and boasts an experienced backcourt led by senior guard Stacy Williams.

After finishing 2-25 last year, Iowa State looks to rebuild this year with the addition of 11 freshmen.

Rains harm public lands

MIKE HIND
Collegian

The heavy summer rains did not prove disastrous for this year's quail and pheasant population as a whole.

However, if your favorite hunting spot is on public hunting grounds around area reservoirs, you may be wasting your time trying to reach your limit, officials from Kansas Wildlife and Parks said.

In research biologist Randy Rodgers' yearly report on the statewide population of quail and pheasant, some hunting areas around the Tuttle Creek, Perry and Milford reservoirs were definitely hurt by the high water.

"Areas that were under water will not be good hunting because there is simply nothing there for cover," said Bob Berquist, district biologist for the Tuttle Creek unit.

According to the Wildlife and Parks Upland Bird Hunting Outlook, a book written by Rogers, the prospects for the rest of the state are considerably better.

Although conditions may vary from place to place, the outlook says the state as a whole should see a hunting season that is improved from last year.

"Overall quail populations are up, with the greatest increase being in the southeast portion of the state, which was hard hit by untimely rains in 1992," Rodgers said.

"Rainfall can be a double-edged sword," he said.

"It can mean lots of cover, or it can come in such a great quantity that birds will abandon their nests."

Last year the rains started during the nesting season in the southern part of the state, Rodgers said.

The rain gradually moved north, but the bird populations in northern Kansas weren't affected because the birds had already hatched out.

For most of Kansas, pheasant populations also appear to be better than last year, especially in the northwest and southwest.

"Wet areas that farmers weren't able to till have given pheasants more nesting habitat than normal, especially in the southwest," Berquist said.

"Birds look real healthy," Berquist said.

"All the rain has given them plenty to eat. Usually when birds have health problems, it is because of a drought situation."

Blood pressure testing offered for University

LORI ARMER
Collegian

A free blood-pressure check is available in the upstairs of the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex from 5 to 7 p.m. on Tuesday, Nov. 30, and the fourth Tuesday of each month.

Lafene Health Center provides the staff and equipment for the event.

The blood-pressure check began during the second semester of last year and has been offered each month since by Lafene registered nurses.

Along with the check, free handouts are available on blood pressure and related issues.

The event has been very popular with the general public and the students, Reita Currie, registered nurse at Lafene, said.

"People are genuinely interested, though we traditionally get more people in the cooler weather because they are inside," Currie said. "Last year, my first clients were an 82- and 83-year-old husband and wife that regularly work out at the rec. It's fairly popular."

The Rec Complex offered its location because of the importance of the health aspect of the event.

"Anything we can do to inform patrons of their health is important," Russell Spicer, assistant director/facility manager of Recreational Services, said. "It's important for your blood pressure because a high blood pressure causes serious side effects and poor health."

Having blood pressure regularly checked is important for people of all ages and health conditions, Currie said.

"Cardiovascular disease is the top killer, so it's important to take control and have your blood pressure maintained at a low level," Currie said. "Young people can still have a problem with high cholesterol."

Although age, race and family history are high-risk determining factors of high blood pressure, there are factors such as weight, alcohol, exercise and diet that can be controlled.

This is why frequently rechecking blood pressure is important.

"You need to take appropriate measures in your lifestyle through dietary and medical changes," Currie said. "It develops over a lifetime. Preventing measures can help because your chances of high blood pressure go up with your age."

"The concept is to inform patrons," Spicer said.

"Lafene offered it as a service, and since there are so many students here, it's a great place to have it," he said.

BLOOD PRESSURE TESTS AVAILABLE

■ Free blood-pressure checks are available in the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex from 5 to 7 p.m. on Tuesday, Nov. 30, and every following fourth Tuesday of each month.

Eating disorders addressed

Behaviors can change if found in early stages

SUSAN HATTEBERG
Collegian

Eating disorders are prevalent on college campuses everywhere.

To make students aware of this problem, Lafene Health Center is sponsoring a Eating Disorders Awareness Week Nov. 8-12, Reita Currie, registered nurse and health educator, said.

The goal of the week is to heighten awareness of eating disorders, Currie said.

"It's to help students be aware of behaviors indicating they have a problem with food or body image," she said.

The week also allows students to recognize signs that they or someone they know may have a problem, Kelley Fink, health educator, said.

"We are also trying to be preventive, getting individuals to recognize signs before they start," Fink said.

Currie said if individuals can catch it in the early stage, they can change the behavior.

Fink said the situation of eating disorders comes up often.

"We address this issue a lot. Students will come for information for themselves, and relatives and friends calling in for others," Fink said.

EATING DISORDERS WEEK ACTIVITIES

■ Eating Disorders Awareness Week is Nov. 8-12.

■ Presentation on eating disorders and proper nutrition at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in West Hall lobby.

"They need information to stop participating in these behaviors," Fink said.

National statistics show that one in 25 college students engages in some form of an eating disorder, Fink said.

We are hoping students will recognize symptoms and get help, Fink said.

Fink said tables will be set up from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday in the Union; from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Thursday in Justin Hall; and from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. in the residence hall dining centers.

Fink will give a presentation about eating disorders and proper nutrition at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday in the West Hall lobby.

They are hoping individuals will stop by, look and take the information at the tables, Fink said.

In the past, students have called up after a presentation or after reading materials handed out at the tables and asked questions about it, Currie said.

"We have students call in and say, 'I was reading this' or 'I have a friend who does this,'" Currie said.

The information and presentations make students more aware of what they and others are doing, Currie said.

Fink said students can meet with the dietitian at Lafene or, more importantly, seek counseling at the University Counseling Service.

Arguments about NAFTA rage on between Clinton, Gore and Perot

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Ross Perot predicts a giant sucking sound will put 5.9 million American jobs at risk. Bill Clinton says free trade with Mexico will create 200,000 new jobs by 1995.

As the battle about the North American Free Trade Agreement nears its climax, no issue has been more hotly contested than whether jobs will be gained or lost. It will be at the center of Tuesday night's televised debate between Perot and Vice President Al Gore.

The trouble, in the view of many economists who have studied the agreement, is that both sides are overstating NAFTA's effect.

They view Perot's claim of 5.9 million jobs at risk as absurd on its face. The United States would have to run a $100 billion trade deficit with Mexico — equal to its total deficit with the world this year — to produce a loss of even 2 million jobs, they contend.

While the administration is much more modest in its claim that 200,000 new jobs will be created by 1995 from NAFTA, economists say that figure is also being fudged.

They say the administration in its calculations is only totaling up the jobs gained from increased U.S. exports to Mexico while not taking into account any jobs lost from increased Mexican imports into this country.

So what is the right number?

Most analysts say the operative answer is small.

Some say the United States would gain jobs from the pact since the phase-out of Mexican tariffs — 2-1/2 times as high as U.S. tariffs — and the removal of other barriers would allow U.S. companies to sell more in Mexico.

One of the most-often cited studies in this camp was done by Gary Hufbauer and Jeffrey Schott, two economists at the Institute for International Economics in Washington.

Using 1990 as a base year, Hufbauer and Schott forecast that NAFTA and other trade liberalization measures already undertaken by Mexico will increase American exports enough to create 316,000 new U.S. jobs by 1995. At the same time, 145,000 U.S. jobs will be lost as a result of rising Mexican imports — a net gain of 171,000 jobs.

They arrive at that conclusion by tracking America's trade balance with Mexico and using the government's estimate that each $1-billion gain in U.S. export sales supports 19,600 jobs.

NAFTA opponents say by this reasoning, Mexico's trade liberalization has already provided America with 148,000 of the jobs forecast by Hufbauer and Schott, leaving only 23,000 that could be credited to NAFTA.

While outnumbered by the studies forecasting positive results, there are economic studies that show the United States will lose more jobs than it gains under NAFTA.

The pessimists generally base their forecasts on expectations of a greatly increased flow of U.S. investment dollars into Mexico to build new factories, capital they believe will come at the expense of American workers — Perot's giant sucking sound.

The Economic Strategy Institute put net job losses at between 32,000 and 220,000 over the next decade, based on an assumption that foreign investment in Mexico would increase by $63 billion during this period, much of it coming from the United States.

The ESI study, however, illustrates the difficulty of using economic models, no matter how complex, to predict the real world.

ESI President Clyde Prestowitz, a former top trade official in the Reagan administration, came out in support of NAFTA last month and said his think tank's earlier forecast was too pessimistic.

Bead Emergency Bead Famine
The cold war is over. Beads are back with a vengence. Everywhere you look people are wearing beads. What does that mean to you, the bead maker? Well, in the beginning it spells glory but in the end...possibly disaster.
When the cold Canadian winds blow again, expect shortages, rationing, and yes, possibly famine. Imagine a world in which December 22 rolls into town and you don't have your beaded necklaces, bracelets, and gifts made. It could happen.
Am I trying to alarm you? Not at all. But just as surely as Boris Yeltsin is sleeping with a pistol under his pillow these days, we are going to have problems. There won't be enough beads to go around.
I've hired extra staff to handle the rush and we're stocking up. Still, it isn't going to be pretty. Expect the lines to be long.
Plan ahead. Expect your friendly retailer to be less friendly as we fight off the mobs demanding beads now, now, now. Plan ahead.
It's time to get serious.
Thank You,

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Dear Cassandra,

Could you please help my roommates and me settle a dispute? We are arguing over which way the toilet paper roll (and paper towel roll) goes on the holder.

I realize this is absolutely ridiculous, but my mother has always told me that it should come over the top; however, both of my roommates insist that it should come off at the bottom.

If this is actually the proper etiquette, then please explain to me why the deer printed on our paper towels are appearing upside down when they replenish the paper towels.

Signed,
Toiletly Confused

Dear Toiletly,

These serious problems wreak havoc, don't they?

Anyway, everyone knows it doesn't matter which way your TP hangs. It's how you use it.

Now if you wipe from front to back or from back to front — yep, that's the real issue.

P.S. Perfectionism could be your downfall. Just be glad you, as a college student, have toilet paper at all.

Dear Cassandra,

Last weekend after attending a small soiree with chips, dips, chains and whips, I stopped at a local convenience store to relieve my bladder from its misery.

I stood at the urinal and stared at the ceiling in a drunken stupor. By chance, I sneaked a peek south to see if I was finished.

I was shocked to observe that the urine escaping my body was electric blue. I am really concerned about my bodily functions, but I am too embarrassed to go to Lafene to report this incident. What should I do?

Signed,
Feeling Blue

Dear Feeling Blue,

Hey, I just love that purple stationery you always send your letters in.

Seriously, though, you have a very grave illness called Blue Pee Disease. Caused by sucking on those 10,000 Flushes blue tablets as if they were breath mints, Blue Pee Disease is curable only when the victim eats the freshly roasted flesh of Fred Phelps.

James scores with 'Laid'

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

James is not a man. It's a band from England, and it doesn't suck. The band has been together in various forms for the better part of a decade, selling millions of records in the United Kingdom alone.

Since forming in Manchester, England, in 1983, James has steadily gained a cult following, as well as earning respect from such English musicians as Morrissey and U2 producer Brian Eno, who produced the band's latest album, "Laid." Prior to "Laid," James has released five albums, including the live album "One Man Clapping." With the release of "Laid," James is bringing its sound to the United States and the rest of the world.

James' lyrics are reminiscent of U2, only without the commercially cynical and jaded image the Irish quartet has put on for its latest tour and album.

James enters areas that seem to be very personal, as if we've stumbled on a private conversation between two lovers. This is evidenced by lead vocalist Tim Booth on the song "Five-O": "You find true love,/the missing piece./Do you really think that it will be the end of your fears?/If it lasts forever/hope I'm the first to die."

James has also established itself acoustically, playing a succession of acoustic tours, both alone and as the invited guest of Neil Young, another of the band's biggest fans.

The music on "Laid" reflects the band's desire to play acoustically.

James' members expand on the early U2 sound, cautiously adding violin and keyboard to their stripped-down ensemble to bring a fun, classic pop sound to the record. Producer Brian Eno's skill in the studio is to be credited with bringing this sound to life.

Although James' band members have lived in stardom in England, they've paid the price of experiencing relative obscurity in the rest of the world. "Laid" is James' way of telling the world's music community that it is ready to be heard, ready to play.

'City' spoofs detective stories

CRYSTAL GOERING
Collegian

A private eye, a murder and a beautiful woman are all part of the plot in the Tony Award-winning musical "City of Angels." The musical will be performed at 8 p.m. Tuesday in McCain Auditorium.

"City of Angels" was written by Larry Gelbart, the creator of "M.A.S.H."

The setting is 1940s Los Angeles.

"It's going to be one of the biggest shows we've had here," Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said. "It's calling for one of the largest crews to put on a show this year."

The story centers around a writer who is turning his detective novel into a film. The production shows the steps the novel goes through to be made into a film.

The play takes place on a split stage. The film version is seen by the audience in black and white, while the writer's life is in color. This will all be accomplished by special lighting effects, and the actors who play in the novel will wear black and white, Martin said.

This Sam Spade take-off pokes fun at Hollywood by spoofing the politics of behind-the-scenes movie making.

A romance develops, and a mystery is solved by the novelist-turned-sleuth. Martin said the lyrics will add to the play.

"The lyrics are witty and funny and can sometimes be biting," he said.

This is not the first time the production company, The Troika Organization, has visited Manhattan. They have presented other attractions like "Gigi," "Brigadoon" and "Gypsy."

After Manhattan, the company will continue touring all over the country.

Sigma Kappa dedicates new house

LISA STAAB
Collegian

After three years of living off campus, the members of Sigma Kappa sorority now have a place to call home.

During the house dedication and ribbon-cutting ceremony Saturday, house members expressed their commitment to Sigma Kappa.

"Everyone helped to make this a reality," said Linda Hope, president of the house corporation for Sigma Kappa. "We are proud of our home and plan to be in the community for several years."

Hope gave credit to parents and presented certificates of recognition to individuals who made the house possible. In addition, Amy Mull, junior in business and president of the house, said Hope deserved the recognition for the hundreds of volunteer hours she gave to the house.

Heather Keller, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said house plans began in March 1991, and construction started December 1992.

Architect Wade Walker, of Gastinger and Walker in Kansas City, designed the 60-member house.

Sigma Kappa members all had input into how the house was designed.

Since completion of the structure, Keller said the house has bonded its members.

"The relationships have stronger bonds because we can relate names to faces and don't just see everyone once a week," she said. "Instead, we see each other every night or every morning."

Before the construction of the house, Sigma Kappa meetings were in the K-State Union.

Barbara Fenters, national treasurer of Sigma Kappa arrived from California for the dedication. Fenters said her role involved the approval of the house plans as well as the finances to guarantee the loans.

"We are proud to be a new part of an old system," Fenters said.

Week focuses on sex crimes

MELISSA DUGAN

K-State is trying to increase awareness about sexual violence through Sexual Violence Awareness Week, sponsored by the Women's Resource Center and Women's Studies Program.

"We think every week ought to be Sexual Violence Awareness Week," Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, said.

Davis said she feels this week is important because it will bring attention to the crimes that are occurring and heighten consciousness on campus.

While Davis said sexual violence occurs everywhere, college campuses are most vulnerable.

Unfortunately, a lot of coercive activity goes on, she said.

Several sessions will be held throughout the week.

"Rethinking Consent" will be a discussion facilitated by Sandra Barnett, director of the Crisis Center, and John Exdell, professor of philosophy.

The discussion will tackle the issue of the legal concept of the consent-involving-rape law.

The "Battered Women and Mandatory-Arrest Law" session will be led by professor Kim Dayton of the University of Kansas law school.

This session will look at the Kansas arrest statute of 1982.

The statute was intended to reduce the amount of domestic violence.

The last activity during sexual violence awareness week is "A Story Of Rape," a presentation of the KSU Readers' Theatre.

This activity will include a dramatization of sexual violence followed by a discussion.

Fall TV programs cut back on violence

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The entertainment industry is ready to assume its responsibility and has already taken steps to reduce violence on television and in films, Motion Picture Association of America President Jack Valenti said Sunday.

"There is a great current running through the creative community trying to do something about violence, to make it politically incorrect," Valenti said on ABC's "This Week With David Brinkley."

He said this is already evident in the lack of violence in programs the television networks are showing in the 8 to 11 p.m. period this fall.

"Many of the people who are criticizing television today never watch television," Valenti said.

Congress and the Clinton administration have threatened to take action to regulate TV and movie violence as the nation searches for solutions to the epidemic of violence on its streets.

Attorney General Janet Reno testified to a Senate committee last month that while government intervention was not the best option, if significant voluntary steps are not taken soon, government action will be imperative.

Valenti said the entire film and broadcast industry is working right now in a continuing effort over the next year to exile gratuitous violence wherever it exists.

"The creative community is ready to assume its responsibility," he said.

Valenti said he was befogged by all the research on whether TV violence is responsible for real-life violence. Actor/producer Tom Selleck said he agreed that Hollywood bears a responsibility for its product.

"I'm not sure Senator (Paul) Simon or Janet Reno would be better arbitrators than the public in what we should see," Selleck said on ABC. "I'm not in favor of censorship, but I am in favor of people standing up and accepting the responsibility for the product they produce."

Selleck said it was scapegoating to point to Hollywood or the news media when really it rests with the individual and the individual's own sense of values and ethics.

Attack claims 10 South African teens as constitution talks near end

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Gunners attacked the compound of a Zulu chief loyal to the African National Congress on Sunday, killing 10 teen-agers and injuring eight people, authorities said.

The attack in the violence-wracked province of Natal came as talks to draft a post-apartheid constitution are scheduled to finish next week, paving the way for the country's first multi-racial elections.

The attacked occurred north of the port city of Durban in an area that has been a frequent battleground between supporters of the ANC and the Zulu-based Inkatha Freedom Party.

In Natal Province and especially the Zulu homeland of KwaZulu, there is a checkerboard of loyalties from village to village, with some loyal to one group and some the other.

The ANC, gearing up to contest the country's first non-racial elections next year, had planned a rally in the area Sunday but canceled after it heard there might be trouble, the South African Press Association said.

South African police spokesman Maj. Bala Naidoo said police had remained in the area into the afternoon as a precaution.

The attack took place about four miles from the rally site, at the homestead of Chief Alpheus Molefe of Nqutu.

The chief was injured in the attack and his son, Tsepo, was killed, the SAPA agency said. Nine of those killed were reported to be members of the ANC.

The spokeswoman, who was not identified by name, said among the injured was a woman and a 3-year-old child. There were no further details. More than 11,000 people have been killed in political violence in South Africa in the past three years. Most of the killing has been linked to rivalry between the ANC and Inkatha.

The SAPA news agency quoted an ANC representative as describing Molefe and his followers as a fairly isolated band of ANC members in the middle of an IFP area.

In Natal Province and especially the Zulu homeland of KwaZulu, younger, urbanized Zulus tend to support the ANC and its goal of a united South Africa with cultural freedoms for minority groups.

Conservative, rural Zulus tend to be loyal to Mangosuthu Buthulezi, the chief minister of KwaZulu. He seeks a semi-autonomous Zulu state within the new South Africa, and he has recently aligned himself with white, right-wingers who seek an autonomous white homeland.

CATEGORIES
To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD
Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Coffee and Global Perspective

Wednesday night chats offer an outlet for international students in Manhattan

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

On Wednesday nights, customers at the Espresso Royale Caffe may get more than just a cappuccino — especially if it is after 9 p.m.

They may encounter a loud, rather boisterous group of people. They may smell more smoke than usual. They may hear several languages they are unfamiliar with, and they may be asked to join in the event.

Every Wednesday night, students who are interested in learning more about the world and the different people in it meet at 9 p.m. in the Caffe for coffee and conversation.

"Last week, I was sitting here before the others arrived," Catharina Stokes, non-traditional student and freshman in human ecology and interior design, said. "This guy was sitting behind me, and I heard him saying how he wished that noisy group of foreigners wouldn't come tonight.

"I turned around and told him that if he didn't like it, he didn't have to stay, but better yet, he should join us," she said.

Stokes, who grew up in Holland, came to Manhattan three years ago with her husband.

Her offer was typical of the attitude expressed by those in the group, that conversation fosters friendship.

"Americans have a different perception of friendship than the Europeans," Jean-Bernard Rambaud, graduate student in business, said. Rambaud is from France.

Relationships in this country are different than those typical in Europe, he said.

His fellow club members agreed.

"We may have fewer friends, but we have deeper relationships with them," Nicolas Mounier, a graduate student in journalism and mass communications from France, said.

"Usually, Americans are friendly the first time they meet you, but the day after, they don't even remember your name," he said.

Mounier said he did not want to be judgmental.

"This is just the way I see things," he said.

Although Rambaud's viewpoint was similar, he had a different approach.

"As a foreigner in this country, it is my duty to be the one to make the first move," Rambaud said. "It's tough sometimes. Sometimes you can't overtake the barriers, but it's easier to make friends if you do.

"Generally, the people here are friendly. It's not deep, but they do talk to you."

Mounier said talking to people is not as difficult as actually spending time with them and getting to know them.

"It's easy to talk to people in bars or in the dorm or in class for 10 minutes, but then we don't do anything else together," Mounier said.

Dorota Zabicka, graduate student in genetics, said the French are not the only ones who seek more meaning in their relationships.

"Europeans have deeper relationships overall," she said.

Zabicka, a Fulbright scholar from Warsaw, Poland, is working on her doctoral degree in genetics at K-State.

Stokes said she thinks it all has to do with individual personalities.

"If you are straightforward, then you have better possibilities of meeting people," Stokes said. "Europeans are very up-front and open, but here we have to be more careful not to offend."

Stokes said one example of this difference between the two cultures can be seen at the Espresso Royale Caffe.

She said if someone was sitting alone at a table in a similar cafe in Europe and a stranger walked up and asked if he could sit there, the person would say yes, and they would have a conversation.

"Here, that just doesn't happen," she said.

Zabicka said she thinks Americans seem afraid to have direct, personal contact.

"For example, they ask 'How are you?' but they aren't really interested in the answer," she said.

Mounier said he thinks people here are just too busy to relax and listen.

"Why do people rush off in their own direction after classes?" Mounier said.

"In Europe, we often leave together and go to have coffee and discussion. In France, we take time to relax. I know students have to work and study, but it's important to relax, too."

Zabicka pointed out that some European people seem to be content to believe the stereotypes of America.

"Many people in Poland see America as a type of Eden where nobody has any real problems, only imagined ones," she said.

"Others see Americans as very boring people with narrow horizons," she said.

"There are many opinions, but generally they think America is a place where people live a very fast pace and don't see anything else but their work."

Rambaud's perception of the United States differs from that of the Polish.

"For me, the definition of United States is a country of extremes," he said.

"You have the richest people in the world and some of the poorest. You have the biggest highways and the smallest speed limits."

K-State students from many countries unite with an interest in European culture

RENEE DENNIS
Collegian

Not all of the Friends of Europe are from Europe.

At least this is the view of more than 20 K-State students who have come together to create a new organization on campus called Friends of Europe.

"I love the Europeans, even though I'm not from Europe," said Mort Hosseini, a fifth-year student in pre-law from Iran.

"The students in this organization are from many different countries," he said.

Some of those countries include Poland, Germany, France, Austria, the Netherlands, Switzerland, the Ukraine, Greece, Turkey, Denmark, Scotland, Spain and the United States.

"We were going to call it the European Club, but settled on the name Friends of Europe because anyone is invited, not just Europeans," said Constanze Voigt, president of the group and graduate student in business. Voigt is from Dusseldorf, a city in western Germany.

"By talking to people on campus, we realized there was an interest in European culture, history, politics and so on," said Katrin Toepfer, senior in marketing and vice president of the club.

"There was nothing for Europeans on the list of organizations they gave us at the International Student Center, so we decided to create our own," she said.

Toepfer is here on a Fulbright scholarship from Chemnitz, a town in eastern Germany.

The Friends of Europe meet officially at 6 p.m. the second Sunday of every month in the International Student Center. Unofficially, however, they get together for coffee and conversation at 9 p.m. every Wednesday at the Espresso Royale Caffe in Aggieville.

"One of the purposes of this club is to know more about Europe," Jean-Bernard Rambaud, graduate student in business, said.

"Not only is it a foreign club, but we also welcome American people to join and learn about different cultures."

Rambaud is from France.

Both Americans and Europeans learn from these gatherings.

"I'm coming in order to observe the attitudes of European people. It's a good opportunity to see how they think, their values and so on," Georgios Filiopoulos, senior in advertising, said. He is from Greece.

Filiopoulos said although Greece is considered a part of Europe, the culture and society are different.

Two residents found dead at Malibu

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MALIBU, Calif. — Fire, smoke and attending panic were racing into the canyon when Amy Yarrow came bouncing by in her pickup truck, down the winding dirt road that led to her home and husband, Donn.

Neighbors rushing to save their possessions weren't concerned. The Yarrows were fixtures in Carbon Canyon, experienced survivors of the cycle of fire and flood.

But something went wrong. The Yarrows may have misread the awful speed of the fire and lingered too long. Two days later, their bodies were found behind an aspen-topped knoll, where the firestorm overtook them a few hundred yards into their attempted escape.

"The fire seemed pretty close by then, but she was a gutsy lady. I figured she had enough time to go in and get him."

"They were real pioneers," said neighbor Janet Graham. "When I used to worry about the fires and the coyotes, Amy would tell me that if you learned about the land, there'd be nothing to be scared about."

A search helicopter made the sad discovery at dusk on Thursday. One body was in the driver's seat; another outside the pickup. The intense heat had incinerated the tires, melted the windshield and baked the truck's paint into flaky patches of white.

An impassive plaster Buddha, smudged with soot, contemplated the still scene from a nearby rise where it had been placed long ago by the Yarrows.

The couple had come to Carbon Canyon in the 1940s, spending $150 for a 30-acre chunk of paradise they named Starlight Ranch. They lived in a succession of abandoned cars, trucks and trailers, relying on cisterns for water and solar collectors and car batteries for electricity.

Acquaintances say the Yarrows couldn't afford a fixed structure as required by Malibu ordinances. But no one ever challenged their right to live in the sparsely populated canyon.

"The Malibu hills are full of people who moved in the 1930s and 1940s," said Harold Hutchinson, who knew the couple for 30 years. "These were real people. When the high society folks moved in, the Yarrows just went on with their lives, and the bureaucracy left them alone."

Amy was 67, a slight woman with short dark hair who worked as a postal clerk in nearby Santa Monica for 27 years. She had recently gone to work for Hutchinson, doing odd jobs in his gauge-making factory.

"She reminded me of a pioneer going across the country in 1860," Hutchinson said. "She could take care of herself."

Donn was in his 80s, short and stocky with gray hair. Despite recent hip surgery, he could be seen hobbling down the narrow trails lined with chaparral, oleander and eucalyptus trees.

"He had a wonderful smile," Graham said. "If you saw him hiking he would always welcome you to his land. He was very proud of it."

The couple was private. What people knew of them came in snatches of conversation. Amy had been a school teacher; Donn, a college professor.

"They were very pleasant people, but they weren't into socializing," Richard Feinstein, another neighbor, said. "They were devoted to each other, and that seemed to be enough."

It was that devotion that sent Amy rushing out of Hutchinson's Santa Monica factory Tuesday when word came of another wildfire in the mountains. Donn often accompanied her to work, but that day he had stayed home.

"It didn't take Amy more than 5 seconds to go for him," Hutchinson said.

Neighbors saw her between noon and 1 p.m. By that time the fire had crested the sharp summit of Saddle Peak and was rushing down the steep canyon walls.

Matt Sorum, drummer for the rock group Guns N' Roses, saw her disappear down the narrow road.

"The fire seemed pretty close by then, but she was a gutsy lady," he said. "I figured she had enough time to go in and get him."

Neighbors said they think the Yarrows should be returned to the land they lived and died for. Maybe near their trailer, from that vantage point the vast canyon hills drop down into the shimmering Pacific.

"It's the place they belong," Feinstein said. "It's what their life was all about."

Bennie stresses tough politics

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

Bob Bennie told the College Republicans his beliefs as a statesman set him apart from other second district congressional seat candidates.

Bennie spoke on Monday evening in the K-State Union.

"Statesmen vote according to their values and their conscience, whereas politicians vote according to their own self-interest," Bennie said, quoting Rush Limbaugh.

Bennie said he is a straightforward candidate. He said he knows where he stands on the tough issues. This is what qualifies him as a candidate for the second district Congressional seat being vacated by Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., he said.

Bennie is a sales representative for the Monsanto Agricultural Company.

Today's candidates either sidestep the issues or delay taking a stance until polls indicate what is the majority opinion, Bennie said.

"That's why we have so many politicians in office today rather than statesmen," he said.

If a candidate isn't going to take a stand on a issue during a campaign, Bennie said, the public can't expect the candidate to take a stand in Congress.

He said he believes the public should demand the candidates state where they stand during the campaign.

Kim Smith, Manhattan resident, said she believes Bennie is different from other politicians.

"I have never found Bob Bennie to say one thing and do the other. He has always been consistent in word and action. I am really excited he decided to run," Smith said.

Bennie said he is fed up with the way President Clinton is handling the government. He said he is particularly upset with the health-care plan.

"In orchestrating the health-care plan, the Clinton administration has made three basic presumptions.

"The first is that health care is a basic right for all Americans. The second is that our nation is in a national health-care crisis," he said.

"The third presumption is that government's intervention into the medical industry can improve efficiency and lower cost," Bennie said.

"The truth is these three presumptions are false."

If the government is going to claim health care as a basic right, what's to stop them from claiming other things? Bennie asked.

He cited examples of food distribution, clothing, shelter and transportation to all Americans. The idea of government expansion is the same as job security for the government, Bennie said.

The idea of a crisis was manufactured with the help of the media, Bennie said.

He said the liberal handbook suggests to create a crisis for society and then empower yourself by trying to be able to solve it. Bennie said this is wrong.

"The administration wants to classify health care as a right so they can give government the responsibility of providing this right to everybody," he said.

MIKE WELCHHANS/Collegian

U.S. Rep Jim Slattery, D-Kan., speaks to a group of students Monday in the K-State Union about some of the issues his gubernatorial campaign will face. Slattery talked about education, health care and welfare, among other topics.

State needs change

Slattery to focus on five issues of Kansas reform

MELISSA DUGAN
Collegian

Kansas needs a governor who will sell the state of Kansas, U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., said to a group of K-State students Monday afternoon.

The way to make Kansas an inspiration to America would be to focus on and improve five issues: health care, welfare, education, crime and the economy, Slattery said.

Slattery said he believes that a community-based premium rather than a risk-based premium would be beneficial for America. He added that health insurance for everyone at a fixed price, regardless of health condition, would give people a sense of health-care security.

Beth Hochberg, freshman in pre-medicine, said she agreed with Slattery's views on health care. She said his proposal for health care would be the most efficient way to provide health care for everybody.

Slattery also discussed his stance on abortion. While he said he always recognizes a woman's right to choose, he does not agree with state-funded abortions.

The dependency on welfare increases when health care is inadequate, he said.

One way to improve the welfare system would be to improve health care, Slattery said, adding that many people have to rely on welfare because of the Medicaid and health benefits they receive through it.

Slattery also discussed education.

"We need to have a bloody good education foundation, or we'll all be in trouble," Slattery said.

He also said more emphasis is needed at a lower level of education by connecting employers with the educational institutions.

This would increase the educational level of most Americans, he said. Other ways to improve the system would be to motivate people to pursue education and look at it as a life-long learning process, he said.

In another part of his speech, Slattery said the crime rate among Americans, specifically Kansans, needs to be reduced.

"We need to have a bloody good education foundation or we'll all be in trouble."
JIM SLATTERY
REP., D-KAN.

"We need to find alternative ways of dealing with youthful offenders," he said.

The only opportunities for juvenile offenders are jail or school. Slattery said those options don't always work because of the different levels of crime committed and the disruption caused by violent offenders in the school setting.

Another aspect of crime that needs to be reformed is punishment and prisons, Slattery said. He said he feels America needs to do a much better job by keeping violent people in jail and away from the non-violent offenders.

Slattery said he thinks the non-violent offenders can be plugged back into the community.

"I support a limited capital punishment," Slattery said.

The economy was the last subject Slattery discussed with the group. He said he would like to see an environment conducive to business in Kansas and attractive to businesses outside of the state.

"I am an unabashed pro-growth democrat," Slattery said.

While discussing the economy, Slattery also mentioned his stance on the North American Free Trade Agreement.

"I think we can get a better NAFTA," Slattery said.

Slattery said his main objection to NAFTA is the lack of commitment on the part of the Mexican government for free labor. He said if this was resolved, NAFTA would greatly improve.

Suspect flees after assault near Anderson

KIM DILLON
Collegian

Saturday evening a female K-State student was assaulted on the lawn in front of Anderson Hall.

Capt. Charles Beckom, chief of K-State police, said after further inquiry there is no indication the incident was an attempted rape, although the person who called 911 reported it as an attempted rape.

The exact time the incident occurred is not known. It happened when it was still light out and the sun had not yet set.

Beckom said the victim was walking west across the lawn in front of Anderson Hall when she heard someone running up behind her. Before she could turn around, the suspect grabbed her in a bear hug that knocked her to the ground.

SEE PAGE 8

When she fell, the victim's glasses were knocked off. When the victim fell she was facing in such a way she had to turn over to see who her attacker was. The suspect jumped up and ran north toward Eisenhower and Holton halls.

The victim did not get a clear view of the assailant, but she thinks the suspect was a male. No words were spoken during the incident, Beckom said.

"We would like to have those people who, between the hours of 5 and 6, were on campus, especially in the area of Eisenhower Hall, Holton Hall, Anderson Hall, All Faiths Chapel, McCain and Fairchild contact our office. The number would be 532-5860, as these people may have seen or know someone that may have information that could help us," Beckom said.

The victim sustained minor injuries, including a bruise on her forehead from the attack, Beckom said.

The Riley County Police Department received the 911 call at 6:40 p.m.

Lt. Rodney Jager, Riley County Police Department, said the emergency service answered the call, took the information and notified the proper department.

In this case the victim was not the reporting party. Someone called for her after she returned home, Jager said.

After the information was taken, a female police RCPD officer contacted the victim, and the campus police were notified of what was going on, he said.

Because this incident occurred on campus, it falls in the jurisdiction of campus police, Jager said.

RCPD does not release the names of victims of these kinds of crimes to prevent victims from further attacks, harassment or emotional duress, Jager said.

Dispatchers of the 911 emergency service try to get as much information as possible, including where the incident took place and what happened. All departments that need to respond can be notified after the information is gathered.

AVOID BEING ATTACKED

K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom provided these tips to reduce the chances of being assaulted.

- Stay in well-lit areas.
- Be observant and walk with your head up.
- If you notice someone acting suspicious, contact the police.
- If you feel you are being followed, cross to the other side of the street.
- When approaching someone, look them in the eye. This gives you the advantage in identifying a possible attacker. Some attackers will change their mind if they know they may be identified.

Oleen announces bid, promises efficiency

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — State Sen. Lana Oleen officially launched her campaign for secretary of state by attacking what she described as a political dynasty that has held the office for more than 40 years.

The Manhattan legislator promised to make the office more efficient and more responsive to the public if elected. Her opponent in the Republican primary is the assistant secretary of state, Ron Thornburgh.

"The office of secretary of state has come perilously close to becoming hereditary," Oleen said during a Statehouse news conference. "I believe there is a problem with anointing a handpicked heir. It discourages a critical review of the way the office operates."

Oleen abandoned the traditional approach of scheduling a tour of several cities to make her announcement. Instead, she held a small rally for about 50 supporters in the Statehouse, then a reception in her legislative office.

SECRETARY OF STATE CANDIDATES

■ Ron Thornburgh, assistant secretary of state

Thornburgh has not formally announced his candidacy, but he has been campaigning and raising money for about a year. Although she questioned his qualifications, Oleen did not refer to him by name, calling him only a young man who works in the office.

Oleen acknowledged that Thornburgh can promise voters to bring continuity to the office's operations, but dismissed that ability as knowing where the paper clips are kept. She said a secretary of state should have broader experiences.

"It's time to raise the blinds, open the windows and let in some fresh ideas and new perspectives," she said. "It's time to start asking some questions about how the office operates."

PEROT, GORE TO SQUARE OFF

Ross Perot and Vice President Al Gore are scheduled to debate the North American Free Trade Agreement tonight on CNN's "Larry King Live."

- Bob Dole, Senate minority leader, said the debate is a big mistake. He said he thinks it's dangerous "just to walk into a debate with Ross Perot, who is going to go for the sound bites and play the the audience as he does so well."
- The debate is not following a formal format. "Discussion" might be a more accurate description, although "free-for-all" is the favored phrase of those who expect things to get a bit unruly.
- Perot follows up the debate with anti-NAFTA rallies in Detroit and Seattle.
- President Clinton, Gore and much of the Cabinet plan to spend the next week promoting NAFTA.
- If Gore fares well in the debate, look for the administration to cast the event as a turning point in the NAFTA debate.

Wichita man will not run for governor in '94

TOPEKA (AP) — Nestor Weigand, who almost kept incumbent Gov. Mike Hayden from winning the Republican renomination three years ago, said Monday he will not be a candidate for the GOP gubernatorial nomination in 1994.

However, Weigand emphasized that he was not removing himself from candidate politics, leaving open the possibility he might run next year for the 4th District congressional seat held by Democrat Dan Glickman.

The Wichita real-estate executive, who lost the 1990 GOP governor nomination to Hayden by 7,651 votes out of nearly 310,000 cast for six candidates, made his decision known Monday morning. He then answered questions at afternoon news conferences in Wichita and Topeka.

Congress agrees on bills limiting troop use

WASHINGTON (AP) — House and Senate negotiators have agreed on a $241-billion defense-spending bill that embraces resolutions giving Congress a say on President Clinton's use of troops in Somalia, Bosnia and Haiti.

Lawmakers agreed on the package over the weekend and planned to file the bill Monday. The legislation, which the House and Senate hope to vote on this week, is $13.5 billion below last year's level and $511 million short of what Clinton sought.

During nine days of contentious debate last month, the Senate approved two non-binding resolutions that amounted to a compromise between lawmakers and Clinton on sending U.S. troops abroad.

Woman says rape precipitated assault

MANASSAS, Va. (AP) — A woman who cut off her husband's penis sobbed on the witness stand Monday as she told the jury he pinned her to the bed and raped her.

John Wayne Bobbitt, 26, is accused of marital sexual assault.The prosecutor told the jury of nine women and three men that Bobbitt frequently forced his wife to have sex. The defense said the sex was consensual.

Lorena Bobbitt, 24, testified she objected several times but her husband said her objections did not matter. She said after intercourse she was angry, grabbed a knife and returned to the bedroom. She severed two-thirds of her husband's penis while he slept.

Lorena Bobbitt described how she fled the couple's Manassas apartment the night of June 23, still clutching the penis and the red-handled filleting knife. She said she realized she was still holding the organ midway between the apartment and her office. She then threw it away.

Pictures prompt Princess Di to sue

LONDON (AP) — After years of racy stories about her troubled private life, Princess Diana went to court Monday, outraged by newspaper photographs taken by a hidden camera while she worked out in a gym.

Diana's lawyer, Anthony Julius, said she would also sue the gym and Mirror Group Newspapers, which published the pictures, for breach of confidence and contracts.

The Mirror Group remained defiant, but other newspapers feared that Britain's latest peek at its royals at play would provoke government curbs.

Man charged with threatening arson

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A man was charged with threatening to set fires to get even with the government for seizing his property, but prosecutors said they had not linked him to any of the recent wildfires.

Thomas Lee Larsen, 43, of suburban Van Nuys, was charged with one count of mailing a threat to damage or destroy by means of fire, said Carole Levitzky, representative for the U.S. attorney. The charge carries a maximum five-year prison term.

U.S. Attorney Terree Bowers said prosecutors had not linked Larsen to any of the 26 Southern California wildfires in the past two weeks.

The FBI, city arson investigators and other authorities had been investigating letters sent to law enforcement agencies in which the sender threatened to set fires because the government seized his property.

Bosnian soldiers attack U.N. vehicle

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnian Serb soldiers seized two Croats from a U.N. armored vehicle Monday when they left Sarajevo on a peace mission to a central Bosnian war zone.

At the same time, four buses of the first major evacuation convoy since May began leaving Sarajevo with Serb women, children and elderly men going to Belgrade, capital of Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

The abduction of the Croats in the Serb-held suburb of Rajlovac underscored the disdain many of Bosnia's combatants hold for U.N. troops and the difficulties facing the lightly armed peacekeepers.

Six Croats and their U.N. escorts in three armored personnel carriers were stopped at a checkpoint as they headed to Vares.

K-STATE POLICE

MONDAY, NOV. 8

At 8:22 a.m., Philip Fay reported the fire alarm sounding in Bushnell Hall. A Riley County police officer and the Manhattan Fire Department responded and discovered a water pipe was dripping on to the alarm panel. A plumber was notified and responded.

At 10:21 a.m., Amit Desai, Jardine Terrace, Apt. 826, reported the theft of two shirts from a clothesline in the Jardine area. Loss was $50.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

MONDAY, NOV. 8

At 7:44 a.m., a major-damage, injury accident occurred at 17th Street and Fort Riley Boulevard. Driver of the first vehicle, Brian Casey, 1933 Judson, was not injured. Driver of the second vehicle, Tami Prescott, 830 Dondee Drive, and passenger of the first vehicle, Faith Casey, were transported to the Saint Mary Hospital by ambulance for head, neck and back pain.

At 8:00 a.m., Kristen Falsman, 1904 Plymouth, reported she heard what sounded like an adult male screaming behind her house. An officer made contact with a neighbor who said his dogs had been howling earlier.

At 1:38 p.m., Rick Peterson of Auntie Mae's Parlor, 616 N. 12th St., reported a Coors Light service truck was blocking vehicles in front of the establishment. An officer spoke with the driver.

At 3:08 p.m., at the corner of Poyntz and South Manhattan avenues, a subject was reported playing a guitar with speakers attached on the roof of a house. An officer spoke with the subject and told him of the complaint. Subject said he would go inside and practice.

SARAH HUERTER/Collegian

Virginia Moxley, associate dean of human ecology, spoke to female students Monday evening in West Hall TV room. Moxley spoke about women in a male-dominated workforce.

Communication between sexes important at work

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

A group of female students at West Hall listened to Virginia Moxley, associate dean of human ecology, last night as she discussed the difficulties women face in the business environment.

Young women in college need to know the business world is male dominated world, Moxley said.

"This puts you in the position of being in a minority status," she said. "The way girls talk, and the way boys talk is quite different."

Women working in this male culture should be aware men see things in a different fashion, she said.

"I grew up in a household with two brothers, and it was a male culture," Moxley said. "I figured out real fast I had a choice of one or two things. I had to be either quick or strong."

She said her brothers taught her several lessons.

"I learned you have to be good at something, and that was if you really cared about your future," she said.

"You were discreet about what information you share with other people, and that has served me well," Moxley said.

Moxley gave the women in the forum several suggestions on how to communicate better with men in the workforce.

Women need to be clear and consistent when they speak to members of management, she said.

"Giggling and bobbing your head up and down gets in the way of clarity," Moxley said.

Try to keep everyone informed if your in a management or leadership position, and don't leave until you have received confirmation that the person understood the assignment given to him or her, she said.

"No matter what job you do, your success will depend on how you motivate people," Moxley said.

Good managers find beneficial ways to appeal to someone's emotions or desires, she said.

"Responding to a persons intellect is not enough, but if you can get them to respond to an emotion, you will be a better manager," she said. "You need to get good at telling stories.

"You'll be remembered in business when you touch people's emotions," Moxley said. "You can do that with humor."

Jordan's election returns King Hussein to power

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMMAN, Jordan — Lines of voters spilled into the streets Monday in Jordan's first multi-party elections since 1956, giving King Hussein the heavy turnout he sought to thwart Muslim fundamentalists opposed to the Mideast peace process.

Early returns showed fundamentalists trailing by wide margins in districts that had been their strongholds. Nearly complete results released by the Interior Ministry indicated they could lose six of the 22 seats that had made them the largest voting bloc in Parliament.

Hussein's secular, pro-Western government had feared a low turnout would favor the well-organized fundamentalists and possibly deny the king a free hand in negotiating with Israel.

But the Interior Ministry said 68 percent of the country's 1.2 million registered voters cast ballots, surpassing the 1989 turnout of 62 percent.

Lines of voters were so long at some polling places they spilled into the streets and blocked traffic. Turnout was heaviest in rural areas where Bedouin tribesmen, some firing their rifles skyward in celebration, crowded into polling stations to support local chieftains.

Returns showed one of three women candidates, Toujan Faisal, becoming the first woman elected to Parliament. Faisal is a women's rights activist who has been denounced by fundamentalists for her views. The other two women candidates did not win.

Leftist candidates linked to hardline Palestinian factions that oppose peace with Israel also fared badly. But some leftist parties, such as the Communists, were scoring well in a few districts.

None of the 20 diverse and largely ill-defined parties had enough strength to win a majority and could hope only for bargaining power in forging a coalition. Hussein now must decide whether to appoint a prime minister to form a coalition or retain Prime Minister Abdul Salam Majali.

The Interior Ministry said definitive results from the hand-counting of paper ballots would not be available until Tuesday.

Hours before the polls closed, the king again appealed publicly for a Parliament that would back his peace efforts.

"I hope that we will see lawmakers who will be able to carry out their duties because we all have to bear the responsibilities in this sensitive time toward the future," Hussein said.

Despite the possible consequences for Arab-Israeli peace, the election was without a central, galvanizing issue, one that offered bewildering choices between 534 candidates — most with only loose party affiliations and vague campaign platforms.

Balloting was only for the 80 seats in the lower house. The 40-member upper house is appointed by the king.

A new one-person, one-vote system seemed designed to counter the fundamentalists by helping pro-establishment conservatives and Bedouin tribal leaders staunchly loyal to the king.

Under the old law, Jordanians could vote for a number of candidates equal to the number of seats in their district. That favored the larger and more populous urban districts — strongholds of the fundamentalists.

With only 36 candidates, the fundamentalists, who seek to turn this predominantly Muslim country of 3.9 million people into an Islamic state, have no chance of winning a majority. But they could remain a formidable voting bloc.

Hussein has feuded openly with the fundamentalists, warning them his patience is wearing thin with their opposition to the peace process.

Jordan and Israel signed an agenda for peace Sept. 14, a day after the Jewish state and Palestine Liberation Organization reached an accord to give Palestinians limited self-rule in the Gaza Strip and West Bank city of Jericho.

About half of Jordan's population is made up of Palestinian refugees and their descendants.

State-run television and radio pressed the government's drive to get out the vote, broadcasting patriotic music and telling Jordanians voting was a duty that reflects keenness for the survival of the nation.

While the peace issue is important to Jordan's government, it failed to generate much excitement among an electorate more concerned about widespread poverty and an estimated 30 percent unemployment.

Economic issues appeared to help conservatives and tribal leaders.

The elections, considered the freest in the Arab world, are seen as a reflection of Hussein's commitment to a liberalization program launched in 1989. The 1989 elections were held on a non-party basis. In September 1992, Hussein lifted a ban on political parties that had been in effect since 1957.

Too many problems arise from building a Union smoking room

On Monday, the Collegian came out against the selling of tobacco and smoking in the K-State Union. This opposition also includes the building of a new smoking room in the Union, no matter how it is paid for.

One of the first plans discussed was to use the profits from selling tobacco products to build a well-ventilated smoking room in the Union. But how do you totally assure smoke will not escape from the room? For example, what if the room is filled to capacity and still more people want in and they prop the door open to get in, allowing the smoke to get out? There are several more situations in which the smoke could escape the room.

Another problem that comés along with this smoking room is financing. The last year tobacco products were sold in the Union the gross profit was $13,581, not $25,000 or $50,000 like some have suggested. However, the gross profit is not the true profit because it does not take into account the cost of storing and selling the tobacco.

And to quote Union Director Jack Sills, "Since you currently can't smoke in the Union, it will never return to that level (of profit)."

Another problem with the plan of selling tobacco products and using the profits to build a special smoking room is that it may be illegal.

The University's attorney, Jennifer Kassebaum, is looking into the legality of taking the profits from one specific item and using it for a specific project.

Students should contact representatives on Union Governing Board and let them know their opinions on the selling of tobacco products and allowing smoking in the Union.

Mr. Packwood's real last diary entry

Dear Diary,

It saddens me to write this, for this is probably the last time I will be able to talk to you freely while relaxing with a Jack Daniels slushie at the end of a long day on The Hill. There is a chance the morons I work with will subpoena you, Diary. As if I would be as stupid as Nixon was with that whole tape thing and just hand you over.

Today was a very stressful day. I can't understand why they won't leave me in peace. I've done nothing wrong, and I can say that without reservation to you, Diary, because I have removed pages 65, 76, 83 and 110-124. My conscience is clear.

I know I'm not the smartest guy in the world, sexually harassing all those women and then pushing around my staff like that. But I did notice one thing today about my fellow senators.

Time is nothing to them. They can talk about something like my diary or Anita Hill for weeks on end and not get tired of it. I'm sort of the same way, I guess, but not about this particular issue. I wish they'd move on already.

I was thinking that we do have this NAFTA vote coming up, not to mention the health-care legislation we haven't even started on. And it does seem kind of silly to harp on little old me.

What I did was wrong, sure, but it's not like it's a free-trade agreement or foreign policy or something. Why can't they just leave me alone? I don't think I want to resign. I just got reelected. If they're going to fire me, they should just go ahead and do it. But we never just do anything.

I guess that's one of the hazards of working in the Senate. Everybody I work with is crooked. Everybody! And they're all out to get me to save themselves and make themselves look better.

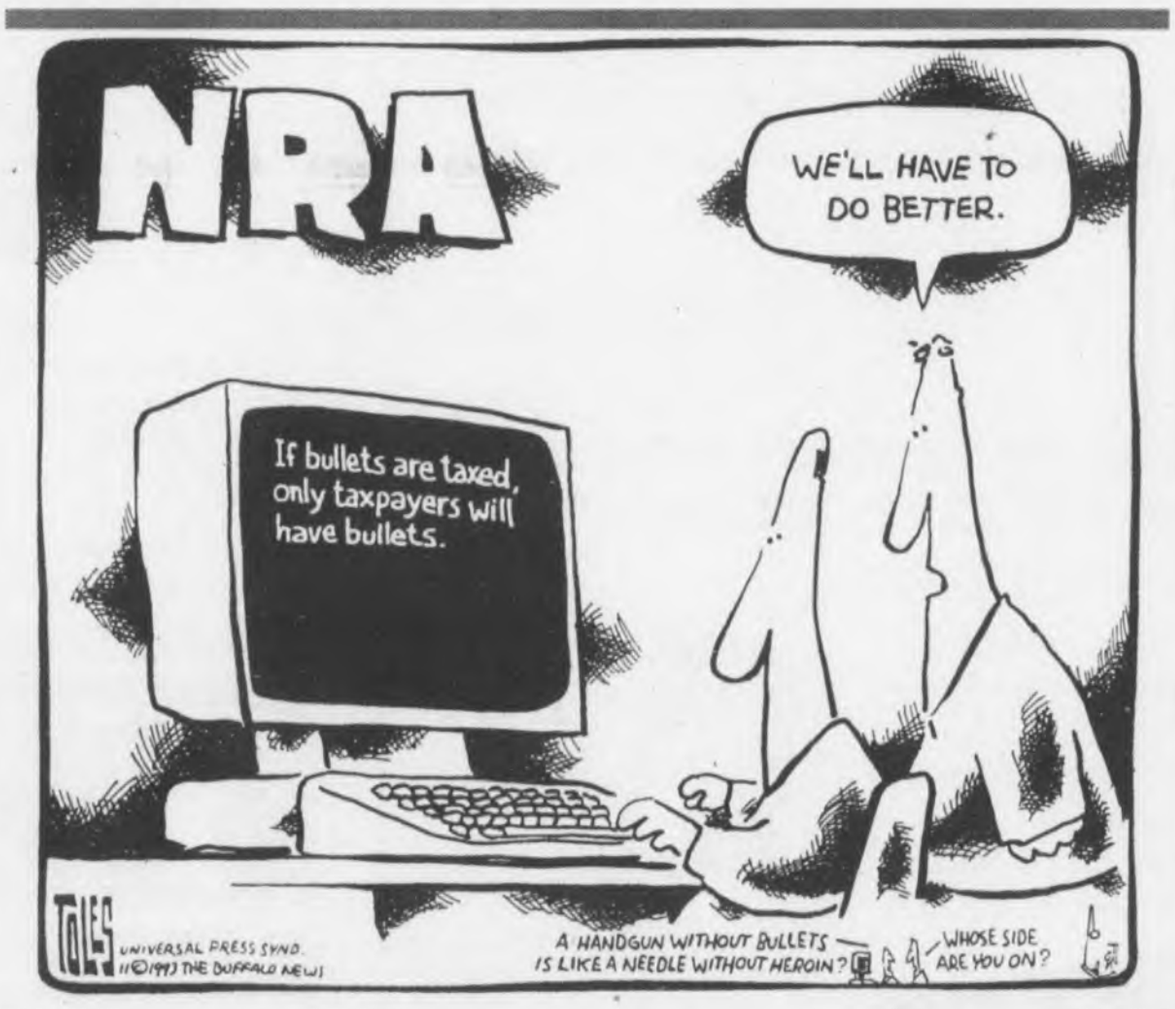
SARA SMITH

Everybody is against me. Those 24 women, Bob Dole and Dan Rather are all out to get me. Katie Couric wants my head on a platter. Thank God I'm in Washington, or I'd have been removed from office by now.

A funny thing happened today. I was talking on the Senate floor, C-Span was there, and I was in the spotlight talking about you, Diary. I was talking about not giving you up.

And then I totally forgot what I was talking about. The issue wasn't the two dozen women or what I had done to them. It sort of got turned it into an individual-liberty-right-to-privacy-constitutional-type thing. You know that when you're dealing with issues like that it's easy to forget about the fact that I am accused of sexually harassing 24 women. So I just kept talking.

I may not have mentioned this to you before, Diary, but I have constituents in Oregon. They're who I represent. I'm glad they're in Oregon and I'm in Washington. Most of America would have handled the charges against me a lot differently.



This whole diary thing is a great example. Who cares? They don't actually think I'm going to hand over incriminating information, do they? The way this place works, I could debate on the floor about it for the rest of my term, and we'd never get anything done. Not that we did anything productive today. If they make me resign, I think I'm going to get a real job.

If I were on the ethics committee, I'd hold a hearing in a semi-legal fashion, call all of these women to testify, and have a simple vote to kick the guy out.

End of story. Then we'd move on to making some laws. Wow. Scary thought. I mean, that would work. Don't tell anybody, Diary. We're in Washington. We don't want to scare anybody.

EVERYBODY IS AGAINST ME. THOSE 24 WOMEN, BOB DOLE AND DAN RATHER ARE ALL OUT TO GET ME.

Take a look to see how hard Willie, band and cheerleaders work

Editor,

This is in response to the letter from Anson Renshaw and Eric Helgoth in the Oct. 28 Collegian.

I agree with you that some of the students have been "shafted" from their seats in the student section by people who do not have tickets. This is not only a problem on Family Day, but on every other game day as well. Why is it you only get annoyed at parents when your fellow schoolmates do it all of the time? Where were you at the K-State/KU game?

I strongly disagree with you, however, on the lack of spirit from Willie and the cheerleaders. Which game were you watching? Every time I saw the cheerleaders and Willie, they were working their tails off to try and pump up the crowd. K-State's fans have got to be the hardest crowd to get going. You should try it sometime. I think they are doing a great job.

Plus, what about the band? Are you guys deaf? As a third-year member of the marching band, I was so tired after the game that my lips were numb. I know I'm just one of many who feel that way. We play our hearts out for the whole game, and the students don't seem to care most of the time.

The band, cheerleaders, Willie, the Classy Cats and many others put in 8- to 12-hour days on game days just to bring excitement to the crowd.

Next time I encourage you guys and the rest of the students to start paying attention to what's going on right in front of your face.

My friend is gone, but together we can beat society's little ideals

Editor,

I have a story to tell. The other night at 10:40 my friend John from Kentucky called me to say that his wife, my very best friend, Kerri, was dead. She died of an embolism that shot to the heart. I am not a doctor or a medical student, so I cannot testify to all the antecedent causes of this medical condition. One thing I do know, and this is why I am writing this letter, is that over many years Kerri's body had been weakened from bulimia.

Kerri was an amazing person. She had gone to Calcutta, India, for two summers to take care of children in Mother Theresa's orphanages. In her free time these days she visited female prisoners to give them a sense of respect.

She introduced me to Carlos Nakai and Tori Amos. She gave great New Year's Eve parties. And she was raised in a culture that has sent a strong message to women that their bodies must conform to a particular ideal. Otherwise they, as individuals, as women, count for nothing. So she tortured her body. Now, instead of her two little daughters having a mommy to play with, they will have pictures of society's ideal.

I am writing because I miss Kerri already, and because she was so wonderful that I want to say very strongly to the women on this campus that they are beautiful. No matter the size and shape they appear. To spend our psychic energy as women on conforming to this bitter ideal is to rob us of vital energy, the energy that Kerri ultimately had. The energy that made her into the woman she was.

I want to say to the men on this campus to help us out. We are battling something that is bigger than ourselves, and we could use your loving and kind assistance to not destroy our lives.

▶ PLAY REVIEW

Good reviews require a little more than just occasional commentary

Editor,

This letter is actually directed toward Kim Dillon in response to her review of the play "The Beautiful People." Your article was a job that "went well." It is understandable how difficult it is to write a review of a play that must be turned in to the paper the night of the first performance. What is also understandable is the burden on a person's schedule when one has a report that requires outside research. But if you are assigned to or volunteer for the duty of the reviewer, then you must first know how to review a play.

I know reviews contain negative and positive remarks — that is what reviews are for, right? But a review is supposed to center on the overall performance and the play itself. Your article did not seem to accomplish this.

The body of your article headed in the right direction, although you didn't discuss the synopsis of the play. Your article described characters and how convincing actors were with their roles. What readers want to know from a review is if the play is worth their attendance. Not silly stuff like the audience's failure to quiet down right away after scene changes.

The warning about the smoke from the cigarettes and the gunshots was a very good tip, considering the many people who are allergic, but complaining about the static from the telephone sound cue was extraneous. Yes, all plays are subject to technical difficulties, and most playgoers are aware of this possibility.

Also, your lack of tact in criticism was apparent. To single out a single cast member in the beginning of your article was just plain cruel. K-State Theater is not professional, nor is the K-State Collegian.

Hopefully, you will be able and willing to review another play in the future with a better idea of how a review should be written. Then we all will congratulate you and pat you on the back for a job that "went well."

Children taught by Japanese legend

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

Believe it or not, a group of college students, 1,000 origami birds and grade-school children all have something in common.

They are part of the Growing Theatre Company, a community outreach program designed to bring entertaining and educational theater to grade-school children. The group performs at an different grade school each Thursday.

The company, which is sponsored by the Manhattan Arts Council, KSU Theatre and the Kansas Arts Commission, is composed of four student actors led by director/manager Laura Camien.

Camien said she started out as an actor in the company when it was founded in 1992 by former K-State student Jennifer Catney. Camien said she took over as director and manager after Catney graduated and left for a similar company in Columbus, Ohio.

So, where do the birds fit in? They're part of the play that the group is performing this year.

"A Thousand Cranes," by Kathryn Schultz Miller, is based on the true story of Sadako Sasaki, a Japanese girl who was diagnosed with leukemia at age 12, 10 years after the atomic bomb was dropped on her hometown of Hiroshima.

Sadako, willing to try anything to stay alive, learns of a Japanese legend stating that if she folds 1,000 paper cranes, the gods will then grant her wish to live.

She does not live long enough to complete the task. Her friends finish the remaining birds after her death and raise money to erect a monument to her and the other children who died because of the bomb.

Camien said the children have responded well to the play's message of peace.

"It's amazing that children are so open-minded," she said. "It's wonderful to watch them react to the performances."

Dale Baker, a teacher at Eugene Field Elementary School, said his students responded especially well to the performance.

"They got into it seriously," Baker said. "You could hear a pin drop during the show."

After the show, the members of the company go around to different classrooms for a discussion involving the issues brought up in the play.

For "A Thousand Cranes," issues such as war, peace, the atomic bomb and Japan were discussed. The discussion was not limited to those topics, however.

"Most of the questions were about what it's like to be an actor," Baker said. He said the company was professional and seemed to enjoy talking to the children.

"We almost had to push them out the door," Baker said with a laugh.

The actors of the company said they enjoy performing in front of children because it is often more of a challenge than performing for an older audience.

"Adults keep their reactions to themselves," Marci Corey, senior in theater, said. "Kids will let you know what they think."

Carrie Gilhousen, who plays Sadako, said it is kind of an exercise in concentration.

"The audience squirms, giggles, sniffles and coughs," Gilhousen said. "I'm not used to that."

All of the actors have performed for adult audiences before, but acting for children was a new experience for most of them.

Jim Purvis, senior in theater, said he got involved with the company for that reason.

"It's a different aspect of theater not offered through the University," Purvis said. "Kids are much more critical. It's an interesting way to perfect a craft."

Performing for kids is nothing new for Eric Stonestreet, senior in sociology. Aside from acting, he said he is a professional clown.

"It was a natural thing for me to perform in front of kids because I'm a clown," Stonestreet said. "I'm used to everything they throw at you."

The Growing Theatre Company is booked solid every Thursday for the rest of the semester. The group plans to do a performance at Ogden Grade School, as well as performances at Roosevelt and Amanda Arnold elementary schools.

Chiefs down Packers, remain in 1st place

Saleaumua sparks
17-point swing for K.C. with touchdown run

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — With no Joe Montana, the Kansas City Chiefs needed the defense to provide some offense.

So, 315-pound nose tackle Dan Saleaumua took over where the injured Montana left off.

Saleaumua ran 16 yards for a touchdown early in the third quarter with a fumble stripped by linebacker Derrick Thomas from Packer quarterback Brett Favre.

This helped to set the Chiefs off on a 17-point run that gave them a 23-16 victory over Green Bay on Monday night.

Then, Saleaumua forced a fumble by Darrell Thompson that linebacker Tracy Rogers recovered in the end zone as the Packers threatened to go ahead with just under six minutes left.

An interception by Martin Bayless, Kansas City's third of the game, ended Green Bay's final threat with 1:40 left.

"It just goes to prove that you can be 315 pounds and still score a touchdown," Saleaumua said.

"There ain't no weight limit."

Lamented Green Bay coach Mike Holmgren said miscues would be a factor.

"I knew turnovers would decide this game," he said.

The victory kept the Chiefs (6-2) in first place in the AFC West and ended a three-game winning streak for the Packers (4-4).

But it wasn't easy.

The Kansas City offense was limited to just 60 yards in the half without Montana and could have gone off trailing by more than 9-3.

The only Kansas City points were set up by the defense, a 23-yard field goal by Nick Lowery set up by Kevin Ross' interception and 48-yard return.

Green Bay, failed on a first-and-goal from the 2 when Thomas forced a third-down fumble.

And the Packers settled for a 19-yard field goal by Chris Jacke, who also converted from 53 and 19 yards, instead of trying to score on fourth-and-goal from the one with 56 seconds left in the half.

Said Coach Marty Schottenheimer: "When we left the locker room, I told the players 'we're one big play away from being in the lead.'"

Indeed they were.

On Green Bay's first offensive play after intermission, Thomas broke behind Favre and swiped at the ball, knocking it straight at the feet of Saleaumua.

He grabbed it like a shortstop and rambled 16 yards into the end zone to give the Chiefs the lead.

"You know how you're watching TV and all of a sudden it goes into slow motion?" Saleaumua said.

"I saw Derrick coming around the corner and the quarterback holding the ball and said 'damn, he's gonna knock it loose.'

"It came right to me, and I said to myself, 'I'm gonna run it in, not fall on it.' See ... big guys can run," he said.

"It was a great play by a great player," said Green Bay center Frank Winters, a former Chief.

"They caused the fumble and bounced right into his hands. I was standing right in front of him, and I had no idea he had the ball," Winters said.

Green Bay went three and out, and the Chiefs, whose only first half score was set up by Kevin Ross' interception, drove 46 yards in 10 plays to make it 13-9 on a 34-yard field goal by Lowery.

The Chiefs made it 20-9 1:06 into the fourth quarter after a 76-yard drive, their only sustained offensive sortie of the night.

The key play was a 32-yard pass from Dave Krieg to J.J. Birden that put the ball at the Green Bay 4.

Krieg, subbing while Montana rested his pulled hamstring, was 17 of 30 for 170 yards and was sacked four times, three by Bryce Paup.

But 55 seconds after the Chiefs TD, Green Bay cut it to 20-16.

Marcus Wilson returned the kickoff 37 yards to the 45.

Then Favre found Sterling Sharpe for 21 yards then found Jackie Harris all alone for a 35-yard pass.

Seven minutes later, it looked like it would be 23-20 Packers as Green Bay, aided by a 30-yard pass interference call against Dale Carter moved to a first down at the Chiefs' 3.

But on second down, as Thompson charged toward the end zone, Saleaumua stripped him, the ball came loose and Rogers fell on it.

Todd McNair's 48-yard run set up a 40-yard field goal by Lowery that made it 23-16 with 3:26 left.

CHIEFS ROUNDUP

- Dan Saleaumua ran 16 yards for a touchdown early in the third quarter with a fumble stripped by Derrick Thomas from Brett Favre. Saleaumua also forced a fumble by Darrell Thompson that Tracy Rogers recovered in the end zone.
- The victory kept the Chiefs (6-2) in first place in the AFC West.

Timely catch lands Booth weekly award

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Iowa State center Tony Booth was named the Big Eight Conference Offensive Player of the Week Monday.

This is the first time since 1987 that an offensive lineman has won the award.

Booth caught a tipped pass for the Cyclones on a third down and six play and stumbled 8 yards for the first down to keep a key drive sustained.

The catch, which was originally tipped by K-State defensive tackle Kelly Greene, kept the drive alive and eventually led to a touchdown, giving Iowa State an 18-17 advantage.

"I think it should be something every offensive lineman should take a piece of," Iowa State coach Jim Walden said. "Tony would want every offensive lineman in the Big Eight to feel good today."

The Cyclones went on to win the game 27-23, scoring 21 points in a critical fourth quarter. Booth was part of an offensive front that allowed the Cyclone running backs nine rushes of 10 yards or more and a total of 222 yards on the ground.

Senior defensive tackle Chris Maumalanga of Kansas received the Defensive Player of the Week honor.

Maumalanga was credited with 10 tackles, two of them unassisted, in the Jayhawks' 21-20 loss to undefeated Nebraska.

Maumalanga was part of a defensive front that helped hold the Cornhuskers to 146 yards and 7 points in the second half.

Fans spend big bucks for game

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — College football's game of the year has produced one of the most sought-after college-football tickets of all time.

Good seats to Saturday's titanic collision between No. 1 Florida State and No. 2 Notre Dame have been going for $1,000 or more in the past weeks.

The price dropped to around $400 this week, but people still are clamoring to buy and sell seats, ticket agents said Monday.

"Other than Super Bowls, this is the biggest football game I've ever had to deal with," said Scott Goldberg, who owns All Seasons Tickets in Los Angeles. "I think this is the biggest regular-season college ticket ever."

Goldberg said his top selling price was $850 apiece for four seats near the 25-yard line. He has heard of tickets going for as much as $1,100.

Tickets to 59,075-seat Notre Dame Stadium have a face value of $27.

The Florida State vs. Notre Dame game has drawn more attention from ticket agents than other big games, primarily because it is being played at Notre Dame, Goldberg said.

The stadium is small compared to other schools, and the tradition is immense, he said. Saturday's game will be only the third time the nation's top two teams have played at 64-year-old Notre Dame Stadium since the Associated Press poll began in 1936.

Goldberg had sold 64 tickets and expected to move about 40 more. He said most of the people looking to sell tickets through his agency are from the South Bend area, which surprised him.

Playoff could end bowl questions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Nobody who argues in favor of a football playoff will get any argument from Nebraska coach Tom Osborne.

Especially not this week.

Although the Huskers defeated Kansas to remain unbeaten and jumped from No. 6 to No. 4 in the Associated Press poll, they saw Miami jump over them in the Coalition Poll that determines the matchups for most of the Jan. 1 bowl games.

That means even if the Huskers beat Iowa State and Oklahoma in their regular-season finales, they might get shut out of a national title game.

"The ideal way to settle it is on the field with a playoff, but we can't seem to come up with a format everybody can agree with," Osborne said Monday during the Big Eight's weekly coaches teleconference.

The Coalition Poll is a combination of the Associated Press' media survey and the CNN-USA Today coaches' poll.

Osborne votes in the coaches' poll and wouldn't disclose where he puts his team this week.

"I guess one thing that does bother me some is the lobbying and some of the commentary they have nationally or in print about who ought to do what," Osborne said. "I think that does have some impact on some voters."

Coaches watch more film than writers and broadcasters, coaches are quick to point out whenever the subject is raised.

"I've seen most teams play now, one way or another," he said. "Yet I know there are a lot of voters out there who have a very limited view of college football. They see two or three teams in their area, but not much else. And they're going to be very instrumental in who does what."

OUTDOORS COLUMN

Floods didn't hinder hunting on public lands

This weekend marks the opening of pheasant and quail seasons in this part of the state. I would suggest you to go out and buy a couple of boxes of extra shells before reading on.

Wildlife managers and biologists are saying the populations of these birds do not seem to be affected by unusual weather we have experienced since last season. They do say, however, that the birds are not occupying the same grounds in low-lying areas because of the floods.

TAD MUSSELWHITE

I am telling you from constant observation there are a lot of birds and a lot of cover out there waiting for hunters, even in the flood plains, which were under water.

No matter what any scientist or wildlife manager, who do their studies on the birds between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m., tells you, I am telling you that the numbers of pheasant and quail is phenomenal.

I have been out bow hunting for the past month, and deer aren't the only thing I have seen. There has not been one time I have gone out and not seen a couple of coveys of quail and a fair number of pheasants.

I read where one wildlife biologist said the public hunting areas around the lake are not places where you will find the birds.

Wrong.

True, the cover is not as thick as before the floods, but I can tell you the vegetation has started growing back in areas where the flood devastated it, and the cover is still there. The only effect this will have on the birds is that it has made this cover easier for all of us hunters to hunt.

The birds have moved back into the previously flooded areas and are there. It will be just as good of hunting on public ground around Tuttle Creek Reservoir as in the past.

I suggest not abandoning these areas for hunting unless you have a found some place you believe may be better.

Tuttle offers ample area for hunters to go out and hunt and so does Fort Riley. There is a vast amount of land available, and more than enough birds to go around. So, hunters should not hang their heads but go out to give these areas a try.

Pheasant and quail season opens at sunrise Nov. 13 for areas east of state highways 28 and 23. Quail season does not open in the western portion of the state until the following weekend.

If you have a hunt planned, I strongly suggest including a good pointing dog or flushing dog. There is so much cover throughout all of Kansas it will be hard to get up on some of these birds.

If you don't own a dog, find one of your hunting buddies who does, and invite them along. It will definitely increase your chances of limiting out.

The weather forecast calls for a rather warm weekend, which means the birds will be running pretty well. It will be hard to get a good shot at some of these birds without a dog to locate and hold them. Don't be afraid to let your dogs range a little farther than usual, too. They have a better chance of getting on top of the birds and getting them to hold until you are in a position to get a decent shot.

So, as far as the weekend looks, the weather is not great, and the birds are pretty active, so daily bags may not be filled. But it will be well worth your time to get together with all of your hunting buddies and go out to hunt.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Dear Cassandra,

In response to the horrible foot-bashing letter published earlier, I was so outraged I had to write. I.P. Freely is obviously a very sick individual.

Feet are one of the most beautiful, sensitive parts of the body. Feet have more nerves per cubic inch than any other part of the body except the sexual organs.

Therefore, feet are capable of feeling exquisite physical pleasure. Feet should, in a perfect world, be free and happy instead of imprisoned in shoes.

People imprisoning their feet in shoes too much of the time cause germs, rot, disease and smell of their feet. In their natural state feet are very clean and healthy. No one should be denied the pleasure of allowing their feet out of shoes to experience pleasure, freedom and good foot health.

I.P. Freely must be a very neurotic and sexually repressed individual to feel so abhorrently and repulsed at the sight or thought of feet. Perhaps I.P. Freely should seek counseling.

Signed,
I Cannot Allow Insults to Feet

Dear Foot Lobbyist,

Thanks for your insights on feet. You'll be happy to know that while I may have a potty mouth, I do enjoy the pleasure and freedom of good foot health.

Dear Cassandra,

I don't have a problem. I'm just looking for a means to voice my suggestion. The Cats are 6-1-1, and it's safe to say that we'll end up 9-1-1.

Since our last regular-season football game is at Oklahoma State University, I think all the K-State fans attending the game should rush the field after our victory and tear down their goal post.

What better way to end the most exciting K-State football season ever?!

Signed,
Must Be Heard

Dear Must Be Heard,

First, after Saturday it isn't gonna be 9-1-1.

Second, while the Cats have had a very exciting season — after the incident at Wisconsin I think the dangers of rushing the field are obvious. Cassandra says no.

Band jams to blues

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

A good indicator of a band's sincerity is how the group sounds live.

It is easy to sound tight when surrounded by sound engineers who correct for sloppy playing. It takes hard work and talent, however, to pull off a good live sound.

REVIEW

The New York City-based Hatters prove their on-stage talent in their first major-label release, "Live Thunderchicken." Seven of the album's 10 tracks were recorded live in July at New York's Wetlands Preserve, and they all but overshadow the three studio tracks on this Atlantic recording.

The Hatters have a heavy blues influence, and a live format is always the best vehicle for letting the energy of the blues shine through. "Live Thunderchicken" features plenty of high-intensity, improvised jams to satisfy blues enthusiasts.

The drums, played by Tommy Kaelin, and the bass, played by Jon Kaplan, actually have a noticeable funk quality to them. Kaplan's pop-and-slap bass creates an unusual style of blues fusion.

The guitars themselves, played by Adam Hirsh and Adam Evans, are unmistakably blues.

The two Adams weave from rhythm to lead smoothly and effortlessly, occas-ionally cutting loose with searing blues solos. Every now and then, a haunting Santana-like run will float in the background.

The Hatters' sound is rounded out by Billy Jay Stein's keyboards, which fill in the rough edges and complete the band's legitimacy.

Even for those not totally enchanted by the blues, the Hatters should entertain, even if only as background drinking music.

Anyone who doubts the Hatters' dedication to music should check out the lyrics to the album's final track, "When I Write My Last Song":

"When I write my last song/kill me there before I'm gone/Let that melody be sweet/Let me smile as I'm falling from my feet."

CD features many bands

HAROLD RING
Collegian

"Dining Hall Classics" offers a smorgasbord of music. The album is a variety of college radio music. Almost every style of music is represented here.

The harder side of "Dining Hall Classics" features Bad Brains doing its new single "Rise," and Kansas City, Mo., band Season To Risk doing "Mine Eyes," which has been played on KSDB 91.9.

REVIEW

Not much can be said about Bad Brains except the band members have been together now for more than 10 years and are still blasting out hardcore songs better than most people. Season To Risk needs to play anywhere in Manhattan now. This band is amazing.

The Red Hot Chili Peppers are represented by SSL and Silverfish. Both bands could easily pass as the MTV-popular Chili Peppers, and their songs are just as disposable.

The rest of the stuff on "Dining Hall Classics" is pretty much engineered to top the college radio charts. There are two outstanding tracks, though: "Freak Momma" by Mudhoney and Sir Mix-A-Lot and "Don't Whiz On The Electric Fence" by everyone's favorite dog and cat, Ren and Stimpy.

"Freak Momma" is featured on the "Judgment Night" soundtrack and kicks ass. This song is just the next link in the chain since Anthrax and Public Enemy did "Bring The Noise" together. Rap and heavy-duty guitars just go together well.

The classic song "Don't Whiz On The Electric Fence" alone makes this album worth owning. It is the same one featured on the "Ren and Stimpy Show." How could you pass this up?

This album is tailor-made for parties because you don't have to live by the stereo to keep the music interesting. Just slip this one in and let it play. Another plus is the benefit of being able to hear a band before forking out $16 for a compact disc. There is something for everyone on "Dining Hall Classics." If you can't find something to like on it, there's something wrong with you.

Consent rules need changes

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

Society must change its perception of how a woman consents to sex.

This change in perception was the topic of a discussion lead by Sandra Barnett, director of the Crisis Center, and John Exdell, professor of philosophy, Monday afternoon in the K-State Union.

"Only 10 percent of assaults are reported, and of those cases, less than 1 percent result in a conviction," Barnett said. "The major problem that we have in obtaining conviction has been the one of consent."

The low conviction rate is partly the result of a misunderstanding of what consent truly is, Exdell said.

For example, there is the perception by some that merely acting sexually provocative constitutes consent, which is not necessarily true. This type of reasoning puts the blame on the victim, not on the criminal, Exdell said.

In the state of Kansas, the courts assume consent to sex is given until the person says no, Barnett said.

This makes rape and sexual assault different than any other crime, she said.

"There is a different standard for all other crimes in the state of Kansas than the standard we use for the basis of rape," Barnett said.

Attempts to change the standard have failed so far.

"It is much easier, for some reason, to interpret what no means rather than to have to interpret what yes means," Barnett said.

However, in other states and countries, laws are being changed to incorporate the woman's perspective on what constitutes consent.

For example, the law dealing with rape in California now states consent means positive cooperation in actions or in attitude, Exdell said.

Just changing the law is not the ultimate solution, however, Barnett said.

A significant amount of education needs to take place in society for new laws to make a difference, Barnett said.

There is no way we can resolve the problem of defining consent until we can get rid of the false ideals of masculinity and femininity, Exdell said.

"We've got to fight these ideals, and until we can get rid of them, women will continue to be prey. They won't be respected, and they won't be able to live freely," he said.

Self-defense increases safety

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

In light of Saturday's reported assault and two previous assauits this semester, Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, is encouraging women to take precautions to avoid being attacked.

A self-defense course is one of the best methods to defend oneself in the event of an attack, Davis said.

"You're not going to be able to defend yourself successfully if you've never thought about self-defense," Davis said.

Davis said she hopes by being familiar with self-defense, a woman increases her security without restricting her liberties.

When walking on campus, Davis said, a person should be familiar with the surroundings and should stay on well-lit paths.

"You will be in a better position to defend yourself," she said.

Davis said she does not recommend the use of weapons to defend oneself.

If a person carries a weapon, such as Mace™, the person has to be ready to use it at a moment's notice, Davis said. If a person hesitates, it could result in a negative situation and be used on the person.

A person should cultivate good neighbors, Davis said.

Others should be willing to intervene and call for help if they hear someone in distress, she said.

Davis said she also encourages everyone to keep an eye out for people who are behaving strangely.

Assaults result in escort service expansion

TARA EUBANKS
Collegian

The all-campus escort training sessions, conducted by Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, gives members of the escort services the ability to rejuvenate their program.

Since the attacks more people are showing interest in the program, and it is a good opportunity to get involved, said Kate Kiernat, graduate student of personnel and assistant director of Moore Hall.

"It served as a kick start to our program at Moore," she said.

Women are also taking a role in helping with the escort staff.

On-call staff members are able to send out either one male and one female together or two females to escort students on or off campus.

The assaults have increased the awareness of the dangers of being alone on campus at any time of night.

"I think people are more aware and cautious since it (the first two assaults) happened," Kiernat said.

One change that has taken effect this year with the escort programs is students can contact an escort without needing a telephone to make an appointment.

Yellow emergency boxes throughout campus have a button inside that will directly ring the campus police.

K-State Police can then arrange an escort for the individual in need, said Steve Eidt, senior in pre-medicine and Goodnow Hall escort.

There should no longer be an excuse for not calling with the new system, he said.

Formalized campus escorts are available at K-State 24 hours a day. All campus students are urged to utilize these programs.

"We don't like seeing things like this happen. We're here to help," Eidt said.

Residence halls that have escort services include Goodnow Hall, Haymaker Hall, Marlatt Hall, Moore Hall and Strong Complex.

Ford Hall is in the process of implementing a program.

Residence halls that participate in escort services are able to cover all of the students living on campus, Eidt said.

He also said they try to accommodate all students, whether they live on or off campus.

"We are always available. If anything we are over-staffed and under-used," Eidt said.

contacted the victim, and the campus police were notified of what was going on, he said.

Because this incident occurred on campus, it falls in the jurisdiction of campus police, Jager said.

RCPD does not release the names of victims of these kinds of crimes to prevent victims from further attacks, harassment or emotional duress, Jager said.

Dispatchers of the 911 emergency service try to get as much information as possible, including where the incident took place and what happened. All departments that need to respond can be notified after the information is gathered.

The goal of the emergency service is to get help to the victim as soon as possible, Jager said.

By calling 911, the RCPD can get help to anyone who needs it, even though they may be on campus, Jager said.

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said after meeting with Beckom today, a decision will be made about whether to conduct campus programs. Beckom said this attack and the previous two reported attacks on campus do not seem related.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Diversity essential in curriculum

Balance between competition, collaboration is key

LORI ARMER
Collegian

"Multicultural awareness is critical and such an opportunity for Americans to see all the colors in the fabric," said Cheryl Linn Hewitt, consultant of education reform and restructuring for W.P. Dolan and Associates.

"The wellness of our country depends on the understanding of all people," she said.

Reflecting upon this statement, diversity was the subject of the second lecture of the third annual Blue Key Senior Honorary Leadership Week at 2:30 p.m. Monday in Union 213. Hewitt's speech was titled "Incorporating Diversity for Productive Personal and Professional Lifestyles."

Hewitt, an alumna of K-State, began her speech by reminiscing about K-State and its athletic department, later comparing sports to the implementation of diversity in education.

"The whole American society is engulfed in sports," Hewitt said. "If we could re-do business and education and put them into the framework of sports, we would have it made."

Children would be in schools because they would want to be in school, and educators would work together as a team, she said.

Hewitt also said that if education were run more like sports, funding for education would not be cut as frequently. She reflected many opinions of diversity to the education profession.

"Teaching diversity is to enrich students," Hewitt said. "Schools are a cross section of American behavior and attitudes. Negative behaviors have been learned and can be unlearned."

"Teaching diversity is to enrich students. Negative behaviors have been learned and can be unlearned."
CHERYL LINN HEWITT
CONSULTANT OF EDUCATION REFORM

Though the majority of those who attended the speech were Blue Key members, some students attended out of personal concerns.

"I came to the speech because it was diversity-related, and being part of the diversity overlay committee, I take the opportunity to explore any avenue that it can be integrated," said Sherry Sperman, senior in sociology, American ethnic and women's studies.

In the question-and-answer period, Hewitt said she had seen the list of proposed courses for the diversity-overlay requirement, and that it is essential in any college.

Hewitt finished her speech by stressing the issue of diversity on the theories of competition vs. collaboration.

"Finding a balance between competition, your inner drive and collaboration of how you're going to grow is healthy and the way to survive," she said.

"When you want to win at all costs, it's unhealthy. Open accepting communication is the key. Over time, negative messages can be destructive to the self-esteem of any group."

Though the topic of Hewitt's speech was diversity, a majority of her speech included information regarding teaching and K-State relations.

Sperman said, "I was disappointed that diversity wasn't the main issue, and that most of what was said about it were general statements. I was interested in what she specifically has done in her lifestyle and in the work force."

Hewitt's credentials include a 19-year teaching career, four years as president of National Education Association in Kansas City's Shawnee Mission School District and two years as a consultant. These qualifications were what attracted Blue Key to ask her to be a speaker.

"We went around at the end of last year and got names of possible speakers from the deans. Dean Holen from the College of Education suggested her because she was awarded the College of Education Alumni Fellow award, as a distinguished alumni, last April," DeLoss Jahnke, co-director of Blue Key, said.

Speaker supports U.N. as mediator

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

The solution for resolving ethnic conflicts is to prevent them before they erupt.

The United Nations should change its focus from peace-keeping to preventative diplomacy, Ved Nanda said during his Lou Douglas Lecture. "Ethnic Conflicts and New World Order" was the title of his Monday night lecture at the K-State Union Forum Hall.

"I feel very strongly that the United States, at this date, is not to be and ought not to be the world's policeman," Nanda said.

At this stage, the only option for mediating world conflicts is the United Nations, he said.

However, the United Nations is faced with the problem of balancing national sovereignty with such issues as the preservation of human rights, Nanda said.

National sovereignty is the cornerstone of the modern nation-state system and one of its principles is that no outside entity can interfere with the internal affairs of a sovereign nation. Despite this, the world community, represented by the United Nations, has the right and the moral obligation to interfere under certain circumstances, Nanda said.

"When there are massive human rights violations, no longer can nation-states simply say that 'these events are occurring within our own country and that the world community can not intervene in our own internal affairs,'" Nanda said.

Other justifications for intervention include instances, such as in Haiti, where the nation-state ceases to exist and anarchy reigns. Also when food is used as a weapon, it is the responsibility of the world community to see that food is delivered to the people who need it, Nanda said.

The United Nations is limited though; it can not be everywhere at once, and its ability to mediate conflict must be improved, he said.

"We've got to strengthen the United Nations," Nanda said.

"We got to give the United Nations the capacity to be effective. We've got to build the United Nations."

Laura Martinez, 14 months, waits with her mother, Patricia, senior in general life science, for the computer system to come up Tuesday at the enrollment center in Willard Hall. # Computer crash stops enrollment

KRISTEN WELBORN
Collegian

Students scheduled to enroll in Willard Hall Tuesday were greeted with an unwelcome surprise: The computer system used for pre-enrollment purposes crashed at about 9 a.m.

Computers linked to the University mainframe, including Farrell Library computers, were down most of the day.

A long line of students waited for information from the enrollment office.

"They have the computer hardware apart right now," Gunile DeVault, associate registrar, said.

Students were told it would be at least 3:30 p.m. before the computer system would be repaired to operating order and possibly would not be in operation until the following day. Later, students found out the enrollment center would be closed the rest of the afternoon.

"It's crazy and kind of old-fashioned," Robert Ortiz, senior in accounting, said. "They definitely need to upgrade the system of enrollment."

Dirk Shrimplin, senior in rhetoric and communication, was supposed to enroll at 8:30 a.m. but came to enroll at 9 a.m.

By the time he arrived, the computers were already down, he said.

The computers were in operation 45 minutes before the system shut down, enrollment officials said.

Students who waited in line and those who have a stamped enrollment sheet can enroll at 7:30 a.m. today, provided the computers have been repaired.

The closed-class list will be the same as the one printed in Tuesday's Collegian, Don Foster, University registrar, said. No additional classes were closed because not enough students enrolled before the system crashed, he said.

Computer-maintenance people were working on the main system, located in the basement of Farrell Library, during the day, an enrollment official said.

"It happens every year," Kylee Kerr, senior in animal science, said. "You would think that a better system could be implemented."

Foster said computers usually are back up within a few hours after a system failure.

This is the first time a system failure has interrupted pre-enrollment for an entire day, he said.

The system failure will set enrollment back one day for everyone.

For example, a student scheduled to pre-enroll on Tuesday will pre-enroll on Wednesday.

The enrollment center anticipated that the computers would be working today, DeVault said.

No information is thought to be lost at this time, she said.

"We need to get a better picture of the extent of how long it will take," DeVault said. "Then, we will proceed with enrollment. Nothing has been lost that we're aware of right now."

Gore, Perot trade blows

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — In a contentious, finger-pointing debate, Vice President Al Gore asserted Tuesday that Ross Perot will profit from defeat of the North American Free Trade Agreement. Perot dismissed the charge as propaganda to defend a deal that would punish American workers.

The prime-time showdown was combative from the outset, reflecting the high stakes in an extraordinary fight in which President Clinton is about 25 votes short and the pivotal House vote just a week away.

Hours before the debate, the White House got a much-needed boost — NAFTA endorsements from five House Democrats who had been undecided. A sixth, Rep. Jim Bacchus of Florida, announced his support just as the debate got underway.

Looking to win even more converts, Gore went after Perot and his anti-NAFTA arguments from the outset, surprising even NAFTA supporters who worried the vice president was too stolid to hold his own against the feisty Texan.

The debate on CNN's "Larry King Live" was but a minute old when Perot said that Gore was interrupting him. Tension crackled throughout the 90-minute program as the two traded a barrage of charges, some of them substantive, others more personal. The White House quickly claimed victory, citing Perot's silence when Gore demanded that he say how he would improve the trade deal.

Early on, Gore said Perot supported NAFTA in 1991 but flip-flopped as a presidential candidate last year to bring out the politics of fear. Later he upped the ante, saying a Perot family business in Texas stood to make huge gains as a trade center should NAFTA be defeated.

"If NAFTA is defeated, then this free-trade zone that he has is still in business," Gore said. "If it's good enough for him, why isn't it good enough for the rest of the country."

Perot was quick to fire back, denying his opposition to the agreement was motivated by any personal or family financial stake.

"I am putting my country's interests far ahead of my personal business," Perot said.

He said his gain would be like a trickle of water.

Faculty Senate debates merger of colleges, community colleges

JENNIFER PRATHER
Collegian

Faculty Senate approved and passed Tuesday the curricula requirements for the first four minors programs at K-State.

Beginning in spring 1994, speech, dance, theater and chemistry will be offered as minors, Faculty Senate student representative Steffany Carrel said.

"The minors program is something the students have wanted since 1969," Carrel said. "Passing the policy last spring was like building a bookcase. Now, we have to fill it with books, and we just got our first four."

Carrel said the burden of motivation now lies with the students to encourage their individual colleges to develop more minors curricula.

In other business, Aruna Michie, president of Faculty Senate, reported to the Faculty Senate on the results of the executive committee's leadership meeting.

In the meeting, strategies for faculty salary increases were discussed, as well as concerns about University priorities and parity with the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

It was proposed that a percentage tax be placed on donations to the University and put into a University president's account to be used to provide special funds for projects such as the library.

Michie said she had met with Athletic Director Max Urick.

"We talked about channels for better communication between faculty and the athletic department," Michie said.

She said a proposal was needed to prevent further

Lafene begins fee for missed appointments

BOB MACHA
Collegian

Lafene Health Center has implemented a $5 fee for students who miss appointments.

Lafene Director Lannie Zweimiller said the policy was a joint effort of the center and the Student Health Advisory Committee, a group of 12 students and two faculty members. He said Lafene is placing an emphasis on appointments this year.

The reason for the policy is to make better use of the financial resources that are available, Zweimiller said. He said the budget for fiscal year 1994 is $3.631 million. This funding comes from foundation funds, student health fees and charges for specialty services.

The foundation funds amount to $13,000, which comes from the interest on the money invested, Zweimiller said.

Seventy percent of the funds come from the student health fee.

The other 30 percent comes from the payment of student for special services and items such as X-rays and prescriptions.

The student health fee is $80 a semester for full-time students and $25 for part-time students. The fee makes it more affordable for students who have to use the center.

"It's like taxation for the roads," Zweimiller said.

Zweimiller said the new system of making an appointment is beneficial because it allows students the opportunity to go to class or to their home instead of waiting long hours to be seen by the staff.

Mike Burton, senior in pre-medicine and chair of the Student Health Advisory Committee, said the fee is needed so someone who needs to see a physician will to be able to do so. The fee is meant as a deterrent from skipping appointments. A $5 charge for missed appointments may reduce the number of no-shows, he said.

He said the emphasis on appointments is also needed to better manage the students' and physicans' time.

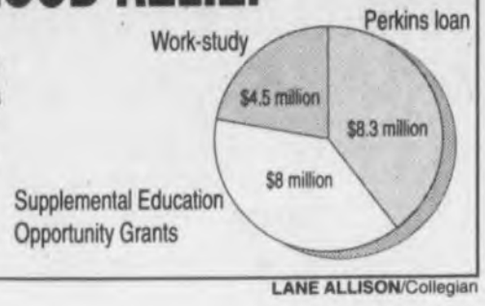
The new system also allows students to be seen during the lunch hour and after 5 p.m. weekdays and 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturdays without extra charges. Last year, there were large fluctuations in the number of patients who were waiting, he said.

"The people here were at the end of their rope. There were times last year that the staff felt pressured because of the large numbers of students waiting to be seen," Zweimiller said. The $5 fee offsets the cost of having a physican waiting for a no show.

"It costs the students money to have a physician sitting there," he said. The fee helps to deter people from wasting other people's money, he said.

"It is not to generate revenue," Zweimiller said. "It's discretionary, not cut and dry."

Students need to call Lafene by 4 p.m. the day before their scheduled appointment to avoid the fee, he said. Students are asked to call as soon as possible if an appointment must be canceled on the day of the appointment. Burton said Lafene is now offering a cold clinic.



"We haven't advertised it much," Burton said. "It is for someone who thinks they just have the flu and minor stuff like that. It would be for somebody who just has the sniffles and needs some cold medicine."

There are also user surveys in circulation to give students a chance to voice their concerns with Lafene.

Rathbun vows to fight gang crimes in Kansas

Randy Rathbun, the U.S. attorney from Kansas, spoke to members of the Blue Key National Honorary Society and other students Tuesday afternoon in the K-State Union Big 8 Room.

Rathbun was appointed by President Clinton this past summer and works under the guidance of Attorney General Janet Reno.

A native of the Ellsworth area, Rathbun is a graduate of K-State and has a law degree from Washburn University.

He said his two main priorities as the only U.S. attorney to represent Kansas is to fight increasing gang crimes in Kansas, specifically within the Wichita area, and to keep handguns out of the possession of convicted criminals.

Gang members come from many ethnic groups, he said.

Rathbun said he did not know how many people are involved in gangs and did not care.

"I don't give a damn," he said. "Something has to be done."

Wichita has developed a task force, he said, to look into the problem and to develop possible solutions.

Rathbun is a vocal supporter of the Brady Bill, which would require a person to wait five days to purchase a handgun.

In the next three years, he said, an advanced computer networking system will be established. This will allow gun shops to do a background check on a customer in a matter of minutes, he said.

Rathbun's term ends in 3-1/2 years. He said he will serve again if he does not decide to return to private practice or if President Clinton is not re-elected.

Abortion protesters lock selves to car

WICHITA (AP) — A fire rescue crew worked for more than three hours this morning to extricate three protesters who had secured themselves to a specially modified car parked in the driveway of an abortion clinic.

One protester outside Women's Health Care Services attached himself under the rear of the car with a metal sleeve and locking mechanism. He was freed first.

Two others, a man and a woman, were inside the car, which had its seats removed.

They were attached to the vehicle with metal sleeves and locks. Firefighters cut the roof off of the car and removed the front and rear windshields to reach them.

Steve Trainer, a deputy police chief, said the three likely will be charged with several offenses. Maj. Tyler Brewer said the charges would include interfering with a lawful business and resisting arrest.

Students affected by flood to receive aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Students from Midwest states devastated by summer flooding will get $20.9 million in additional financial aid, including funds for work-study programs on flood cleanup and recovery, the Education Department announced.

The supplemental aid is in addition to $30 million in emergency Pell Grants made available to needy post-secondary students in August. The department estimated 32,000 students would benefit from the total emergency funding.

The students may attend schools in other states.

Mortar rounds explode near Bosnia school

SARAJEVO (AP) — A school became a war zone filled with the screams and broken bodies of children Tuesday in the deadliest attack in Sarajevo in nearly a month.

Mortar rounds claimed so many victims officials said they couldn't keep count. But state radio quoted the prime minister as saying nine children died. Early accounts said at least seven people, including three to four children and one teacher, were killed when mortar rounds exploded near the school entrance.

"The attack was planned in such a way so it would produce as many casualties among children as possible," Prime Minister Haris Silajdzic said.

The radio earlier quoted civil service officials as saying the shells came from Nedzarici, a suburb held by Bosnian Serbs. But the Serbs denied it.

Defendant pleads guilty in plea bargain

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Reginald Denny beating defendant pleaded guilty today to two misdemeanors and one felony in a plea bargain that ensured him no further jail time if he stays out of trouble.

Antoine Miller, 21, who spent nearly 1-1/2 years in jail until he was recently freed on bail, had been facing a charge of attempting to murder Denny during last year's riot.

Superior Court Judge Cecil Mills said to Miller: "You haven't had much of a chance in your life." But he said he felt Miller had learned a lesson. He warned him that if he got in trouble again, he would go to prison.

Miller pleaded guilty to receiving stolen property, the purse of a riot victim, grand theft from Denny — both misdemeanors — and a felony assault count on victim Marisa Bejar.

A Hollywood movie producer sings to a young writer about the tricks of the celluloid trade during the musical production of "City of Angels" Tuesday night in McCain Auditorium. The musical comedy, written by the creator of M*A*S*H*, Larry Gelbart, spoofs the Sam Spade film noir genre. "City of Angels" won a Tony Award for best musical.

Heavenly 'Angels'

Story, music, scenery create detective thriller

TOM LISTER
Collegian

It's a damn shame Humphrey Bogart took the big dirt nap years ago. Bogart, like anyone else who didn't see Thursday night's production of "City of Angels," missed a rare opportunity.

Those who did go to McCain Auditorium had the chance to see comedy, music and great sets woven together into a detective thriller. It was part Mickey Spillane, part Steve Martin.

"City of Angels" is the story of a detective novelist who has sold his book to Hollywood. Randy Lake, who plays writer Stine, rewrites his novel for the screen.

It's a story within a story. As Stone (Mark Blackburn), the private investigator in Stine's novel, tries to find a missing girl and a murderer, Stine fights to take back his own integrity as a writer. Stine's world operates on a parallel to Stone's until the two gradually converge in the end. Subtle details added up to make the three-hour production well worth its time.

Foremost was the writing. Larry Gelbart's script paints both the Hollywood and the private detective movie world with unique color. The detective Stone lives in a world in which his neighbor makes a living giving eulogies at a pet cemetery and answering Gene Autry's fan mail.

The set was amazing. Scenes moved back and forth between Stone's black-and-white detective world and Stine's colorful, Hollywood studio world. A projected backdrop and lighting worked well to achieve this. In addition, different sets were wheeled in for scenes.

Considering the intricacy of the set, the two mistakes that did occur were understandable. The musicals were another added detail. Each song helped the production along a little more. During one scene, '40s dance hall music singers came on stage while Stone took a beating from two thugs. Talk about pure poetry.

Again, it was the little details that made the production, whether it be Al D. Rodriguez's portrayal of Stone's former police partner Munoz (who sounded suspiciously like the cat in "Ren and Stimpy") or Michael Shiles' facial expressions as Luther Kingsley, who was confined to his iron lung.

And we can't forget Jill Monaco, who played wayward daughter Mallory Kingsley and sang well.

Bead Emergency Bead Famine

The cold war is over. Beads are back with a vengence. Everywhere you look people are wearing beads. What does that mean to you, the bead maker? Well, in the beginning it spells glory but in the end...possibly disaster.

When the cold Canadian winds blow again, expect shortages, rationing, and yes, possibly famine. Imagine a world in which December 22 rolls into town and you don't have your beaded necklaces, bracelets, and gifts made. It could happen.

Am I trying to alarm you? Not at all. But just as surely as Boris Yeltsin is sleeping with a pistol under his pillow these days, we are going to have problems. There won't be enough beads to go around.

I've hired extra staff to handle the rush and we're stocking up. Still, it isn't going to be pretty. Expect the lines to be long.

Plan ahead. Expect your friendly retailer to be less friendly as we fight off the mobs demanding beads now, now, now. Plan ahead.

It's time to get serious.

Cost of American hate reflected in our health care expenditures

Our children have inherited a different America.

The myth of a kinder, gentler America has now given way to relentless violence and lawlessness.

It isn't too late to stop this nation's decline toward chaos, but the awakening must come soon.

In estimates released last month by Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders, violence contributed to $13.5 billion of the nation's medical bill in 1992.

The cost of firearm injuries alone is $3 billion a year.

While 30,000 died from AIDS during that time, violence killed 50,000 people.

If the statistics don't shock us into reality, the ramifications of violence on the children should.

Elders put it best: "It's easier to find a gun than a good friend, a good teacher, a good school."

The main-street image of America has given way to drive-by shootings and serial killers. Your next-door neighbor could be a Jeffrey Dahmer or Ted Bundy.

Television and other media are a contributing factor in our violent America. If you don't believe the statistics, listen to the children.

One 17-year-old girl from Baltimore said, "I saw violence, so I chose violence as a way of life."

For most children, violence is not a way of life, but certainly a fact of life.

Violence is everywhere — on the news, on the streets and on the playground.

It's time for America to reinvest in itself. Its time for us to teach the children how to enjoy a peaceful existence.

We as college students have a special opportunity. Let us take our advantages and our educations and use them to become positive role models for the future generations of America.

As we do nothing, the statistics are climbing. The violence is building.

And the children are waiting.

Severe problems exist with gun bill

After reading the past few articles concerning gun control, it's become apparent to me that much of the debate on this issue is based on simple lack of information. Those who paint themselves pro- or anti-gun see a chasm between two viewpoints that simply would not exist if there were a better understanding of the issue.

Within the past year, I have heard gun-control advocates call for laws preventing the sale of guns to minors, laws preventing the sale of guns to convicted felons and laws prohibiting the sale of fully automatic machine guns, all the while chastising the National Rifle Association and pro-gun forces for opposing these measures. The interesting thing is all of this is already federal law.

It's already illegal to sell a handgun or even handgun ammunition to anyone under 21. Or to sell a long gun to anyone under 18. Or for any citizen to purchase a fully automatic machine gun or any selective fire-assault rifle since 1934.

Concerning these issues, the only differences between anti- and pro-gun sides is that one side calls for the enactment of laws that have been on the books for decades, and the other calls for enforcement of the same laws, something that has been severely lacking.

Even opinions about something as highly publicized as the Brady Bill fall prey to a lack of information. Supporters of the Brady Bill have cited a background check conducted prior to the purchase of a gun as the most attractive part of the bill.

Opponents of the bill have often been asked, "How could you oppose a bill that would prevent guns from being sold to criminals?"

The surprising fact is the Brady Bill requires no background check. The NRA and other pro-gun organizations have opposed the Brady Bill because it has no background check, while the anti-gun crowd has supported the Brady Bill largely because of a background check that is in fact nonexistent.

One issue there does seem to be genuine disagreement on is the effectiveness of keeping guns for self-protection. Many gun owners say keeping a gun for self-defense decreases their chances of being the victims of a crimes. Some have argued this is ineffective, and many of these same people have advocated that victims of crimes such as rape submit to their attacker, thus decreasing chances for injury.

When we look at the National Crime Survey public-use tapes, we see that the victim of an assault, such as rape, who does nothing to resist and submits to his or her attacker has about a 30-percent chance of being injured or killed.

If the victim yells for help, there's a 40-percent chance of injury or death, and if the victim resists with physical force, the chance of injury or death rises to more than 50 percent. But if the victim resists with a firearm, the chance of injury is only 12 percent, with only a 3-percent chance of any injury occurring after the gun is produced. Also to consider is the fact that the victim who resists with a gun will, in the majority of cases, not be raped.

Furthermore, we know more than 1 million crimes are stopped each year by gun-owning civilians, more than the number stopped by police. You cannot easily dismiss the number of homes not robbed, the number of women not raped or the number of murders thwarted each year because of privately owned firearms.

Even the often-publicized 10,000-plus handgun deaths occurring annually is misleading; more than two-thirds of these victims are justifiable shootings of criminals by the police or civilians.

GLENN PENDLAY

Gun owners can cite today's high crime rates, the high probability of any person being the victim of a crime and the effectiveness of guns as self-defense tools as evidence that any laws passed should discriminate between criminals and the law-abiding, doing everything possible to get guns out of the hands of criminals while reserving the right of the law-abiding to protect themselves.

It seems even most gun-control advocates agree in today's society: How could anyone disagree with another person's right to self defense?

Why are we all left arguing over the Brady Bill, which requires no background check, will not prevent the sale of guns to criminals or minors and has been called useless and a waste of time by the Department of Justice? Even Sara Brady herself has admitted this bill will do nothing to combat crime.

With more than 300 million guns in this country and borders that are not successfully controlled, it seems obvious the gun black market will not soon dry up no matter what laws are passed; yet, we know more than 90 percent of violent crimes are committed by only 6 percent of the criminals. Most of this small group has been convicted of numerous felonies and rotate in and out of jail, committing many crimes while on parole. A logical way of getting guns out of the hand of these violent predators seems to be to keep them in jail.

It seems the labels pro- or anti-gun need serious re-thinking.

While one can't deny the existence of radical elements, it seems most aren't truly anti-gun. People are simply anti-crime or anti-criminal misuse of guns, feelings shared by even the most staunch defenders of private-gun ownership.

After having discussed this issue with many anti- and pro-gun people, it seems nobody wants to stop the woman who lives alone from keeping a pistol beside her bed or take away the pheasant hunter's shotgun; yet, everyone wants to make it harder for criminals to purchase guns and keep them in jail longer when they commit any violent crime, whether it involves a gun or not.

I say it is about time both sides stopped bickering and got together. It will undoubtedly take a unified voice to get the politicians to stop arguing over laws such as the Brady Bill and start looking at tough solutions to the crime problem.

Play experience becomes microcosm of life's lesson

The first time I met Laura, she was a recovering alcoholic who had locked her young son out of the house in the dead of winter because she was drunk.

Scott was sitting in a bathtub wearing a sheet, with red, running sores all over his body.

Walt was a woman trapped in a man's body, and Charlene was a nun, performing oral sex on a mental patient.

Ahhh, the people I meet.

No, they are not characters from "Days of Our Lives" during sweeps week, nor are they people I made up during one of my more memorable trips to the other side of sobriety. They are my castmates in "A Gathering of Fools," an original play that opens this week in Nichols Hall.

Now, before you get any weird ideas about the theater department at this university, I was referring to the first characters I had ever seen them perform. (Nichols Hall may be full of more nuts than a Mars™ bar, but they aren't that bad!)

I will admit, when I found out that I was going to be in this play with them, I was a little intimidated. Honestly, I was scared hairless. These were people I had given standing ovations to. Renee was so good in auditions, I didn't want to be on stage with her when it was my turn to read. And Stephen has been in the business since he was no bigger than a wad of spit. Who was I to be working with them? Nobody!

My self-esteem was dragging three feet behind me when I went to the first rehearsal. It surely didn't improve when I met Caisha, Todd and Jim, the other members of the cast. For the next few weeks, I just stood back like the new kid in school, not wanting to mess up and yet wanting to join in on the games and play. I did as I always do when I am unsure of myself: I gave my best impression of a vulture, sitting in a corner, watching quietly.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

My work suffered. I am sure that our director had second thoughts, more than once, about casting me. I didn't exactly inspire confidence. I was wooden, unprofessional and afraid to give anything. I was torn between the fear of not being able to trust my castmates and the desire to.

Every rehearsal became a three-hour battle to overcome my shyness and intimidation and allow myself to experience what was going on. When I did, egads, the things I learned! Not only about myself and my fellow actors, but about the business and about the art. To risk sounding corny, I learned a lot about life in general.

I've learned that it's OK to succeed and it's OK to fail, as long as you make the choice to move in some direction. I've learned that talent doesn't make up for discipline and luck and that luck will run out every time. I have learned that people, who may have nothing in common but a passion, can work together, laugh together, cry together night after night for eight weeks and not kill each other.

Not to say that such lessons can only come from working on a play or even in being in the theater department. I am sure the band, the football team, architecture students in studio and the same 10 people who are in the computer room almost every night at 2 in the morning feel the same thing. They experience the same emotions. Thank God, we all experience the same thing at one point or another. This is, I hope, what it is all supposed to be about.

Not to make it sound like a religious experience or anything. Renee, Laura, Scott, Caisha, Jim, Stephen, Todd, Walt, Charlene, Darin, Michelle, Charlotte and the crews of "A Gathering of Fools" will always be a part of me. And I can never express to them or you how much that has meant to me. Never.

I had nothing of my own to give except my loyalty. You have it all, guys. Break a leg!

Serial problem solved by redirecting money

Editor,

I have a unique idea to solve the serials problems at Farrell Library. Let's put the $17 a semester that we are now paying to the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics and purchase the serials the library needs.

The athletic department apparently has enough money from private donations and ticket sales to build a multi-million dollar indoor athletic facility, a new press box and a coach's salary approaching a quarter of a million dollars. Why does it need to suck money out of the students' pockets? If we would use that $17 a semester on serials, we could keep all the serials threatened by the recent price increase and get back all the serials cut in the past five years.

Now I know all of the arguments for spending millions of dollars on athletics and how a good sports program affects the whole University. I can't count how many times I've heard the tired phrase, "Right or wrong, athletics are valued more than academics, and a good sports program affects the entire University for the better." I say wrong.

Just because every other university jumps off a cliff doesn't mean we have to. I came here when K-State hadn't won a football game in three years, and at that time, it had managed to outdo almost all other universities in the country in the number of Rhodes, Truman and Marshall scholarships awarded to its students. I fail to see how a strong athletic program is going to increase the quality of education available at K-State. People say that a good sports program increases donations to all the University. I would agree that donations increase, but I'll bet most of the donations are earmarked for the athletic department.

I would argue that a losing sports program is actually more beneficial to the University. It is true that a lot of people care more about sports than academics. A winning sports team would just take away recognition from the academic programs at a university and in turn divert donations to the athletic department. If K-State was known for a bad sports program, then the focus would be where it belongs — on academics.

When universities first started to appear in the Middle Ages, they were there for one purpose: to teach students. I don't think that it should be too much to ask K-State to at least attempt to do the same.

Avoid possible danger and leave goal posts up

Editor,

I believe the message we all received from the campus of the University of Wisconsin is very clear. Spectator safety and the protection of property are serious matters when it comes to game management. While we deeply love our team and revel in the victories it achieves, there are appropriate ways for that supportive energy to be directed.

I want to make a special appeal to the great number of students of K-State to join us in our attempt to prevent any unfortunate happening that might endanger the safety of fans or destroy property. We absolutely must stay off the field following all our contests. We certainly don't want to stifle the support for the Wildcats; however, reasonable restraints must serve to remind us of the importance of spectator safety.

Game management personnel deployed at the field level at the end of all games will direct fans to stay off the field. We ask for your cooperation in this effort. In so doing, we can only add to the respect and esteem our football team has brought to us. Anything less tarnishes and distracts from it great accomplishments. I hope you share this concern and will abide by the wishes of our team and the athletic department.

Seniors prepare for last home hurrah

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Seventeen K-State seniors will play their final game at KSU Stadium this Saturday against the Missouri Tigers.

Of those seniors, 14 have started at least one game this season.

And K-State coach Bill Snyder said the seniors have been great to coach for the time he has been here.

"They're a bunch of wonderful guys," Snyder said.

"Most of them have been through (the turnaround in the program) and walked through the door with me when I started here."

The seniors have helped turn around the program 180 degrees since signing their letters of intent to play for K-State.

K-State has gone 23-18-1 in its past 46 games, halting a 30-game losing streak, a 30-game road losing streak, a 27-game Big Eight Conference winless streak and an 18-game non-conference road losing streak.

Senior wide receiver Andre Coleman said he is happy to be part of the resurrection of K-State football, but he also said the year isn't over yet.

"We feel great that we were part of the biggest change in college football history," said Coleman, who ranks first in school history in kickoff returns, eighth in receptions and sixth in receiving yards.

"Our business isn't done yet."

Coleman said his best moment wasn't his game-winning touchdown against Kansas in 1991, but this season's victory against the Sooners.

"My biggest moment was the Oklahoma game," Coleman said.

"We proved to the rest of the nation that we are for real."

Cornerback Thomas Randolph, who has broken up 17 passes and recorded five interceptions in the past 20 games, said he wants to be victorious in his last game at KSU Stadium.

"This will be a very emotional game for me," said Randolph, who has helped the Cats to a 20-2-1 record at home.

"I want to finish as a winner. I'll try to play my best game ever."

Defensive end John Butler said this game will be one to remember.

"This game will be extra special for me," said Butler, who leads the team in sacks with five and was picked in the preseason to the first-team all-Big Eight team by the Football News.

"It would be great to win the last game."

Free safety Jaime Mendez said he is glad he made the choice of coming to K-State.

"It's satisfying to know I have been a part of the turnaround," Mendez said.

Mendez, who is a semifinalist for the Jim Thorpe Award for the nation's top defensive back, has the school's career interception record with 14 and leads this year's squad in tackles with 108.

"My career couldn't have been written any better," Mendez said.

"Finishing my career by going to a bowl game would be icing on the cake."

Others who will step on to Wagner Field as a K-State player for the last time are Kitt Rawlings, Tate Wright, Tom Byers, Warren Claassen, Brad Seib, Eric Wolford, Quentin Neujahr, Bryan Campbell, Eric Clayton, Sean Dabney, Shannon Atkins and Matt Thorne.

Deep thoughts to ponder

A little "random thought" housecleaning is in order this week.

If you watch closely enough, I think you'll see that Notre Dame fans this weekend, after the Irish upset Florida State, will not tear down the goal posts.

Love 'em or hate 'em, Irish fans at least know to stay in the stands. Maybe they think tearing down the posts will earn them a one-way trip down south — and I don't mean Miami.

TROY COVERDALE

Speaking of goalposts, Student Senate will be discussing Resolution 93/94-19 at Thursday night's meeting.

The resolution discourages the destruction of the goalposts and the throwing of objects on to the field because of the negative image it gives to K-State.

I hope you'll let your student senator know your thoughts on the matter.

Nice timing department: Nebraska coach Tom Osborne, after seeing Miami jump over his undefeated Huskers in the Bowl Coalition poll, called Monday for a national championship game for college football.

Do you think the hype involved in the No. 1 vs. No. 2 battle in South Bend might have played a factor in Osborne's comments?

And here's another for the "What have you done for me lately?" file: Andres Galarraga is looking for another team after turning down the Colorado Rockies' $12-million, four-year deal.

In other words, a player who had one great season but still needs to prove he can hit that way on a regular basis will find himself one of the highest-paid players in the game.

Is anybody else reminded of Mark Davis?

Nothing like efficiency: The NCAA infractions committee was to hand down sanctions against UNLV yesterday in the storied Lloyd Daniels recruitment case. UNLV admitted to 28 rules violations, but it still took the NCAA six years to take action.

That gave Daniels enough time to play in the Continental Basketball Association with the now-defunct Topeka Sizzlers, get busted for drugs, play street ball, get busted for drugs, get shot at, go through rehab and make the NBA with San Antonio.

And who says Jerry Tarkanian doesn't work wonders with kids who wouldn't get a chance otherwise? Give me a break.

Quotebook: Scott Ostler of the San Fransisco Chronicle said, "Even though the Bulls suffered through scoring just six points in the second quarter Saturday night, they appear to me to be just one great player away from a title."

And, since I began by predicting Notre Dame to defeat Florida State, I'll add that it won't be by more than four points. And, hey, does anybody know where I can get one of the "Catholics vs. Creminoles" shirts?

Fans seek 15 minutes of fame

ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's the latest in interactive sports: Fans usurp the celebrity of athletes by attacking them, crashing the gate or floating in from the sky.

One man is obsessed, another a publicity seeker. A festive football crowd just wants to touch its heroes, no harm intended.

Yet, people are getting hurt.

Are they random acts in a crazy year — the stabbing of Monica Seles, fans surging on the field at Wisconsin, a paraglider landing in the ring of the Bowe-Holyfield heavyweight title fight — or are they a foreshadowing of dumber things to come?

"This is, in a way, the equivalent of people wanting to call up talk shows and vent their spleen," Todd Gitlin, sociologist at the University of California, said. "Or, for that matter, linking into interactive computer networks.

"A lot of people feel they don't really exist unless they've gone public, unless they've talked to the media. It is bizarre. It's mighty bizarre. But a lot of people feel diminished if they haven't been annointed or discovered by the spotlight."

Nothing new in that except the methods.

The twisted path to fame, 15 minutes worth of it or 15 years, has been taken by people as diverse as the skyjackers of the '60s, innumerable streakers and the soap-opera actor who parachuted close to the mound in the 1986 World Series at Shea Stadium in New York.

Some daredevil acts capture the public's imagination and humor. None more so than Philippe Petit's tightrope walk between New York's World Trade Center buildings in the summer of 1974 and George Willig's human-fly crawl up the side of one of those towers three years later. Authorities frowned on those publicity seekers, too, claiming they endangered people below. But there was nothing mean-spirited about them, and no one got hurt.

"A lot of people feel they don't really exist unless they've gone public."

TODD GITLIN
SOCIOLOGIST

We live in a frenetic, frightening world in the '90s, a world of weapons and danger on the streets, a disjointed world with too many people displaced by economics and technology.

"Displaced is the right word," Gitlin says. "A lot of people feel that the rewards that come from ordinary face-to-face life pale in comparison to the kind of surrogate royalty or glamour that attaches to the world of the media."

It is a fake glamour, yet no one can deny that James Miller's stunt at the title fight in Las Vegas didn't garner him exactly what he sought: TV and front-page coverage around the world.

So, too, did Gunther Parch, Monica Seles' assailant, get what he wanted when he stabbed her in the back at courtside: She was hurt badly enough to let his favorite, Steffi Graf, reclaim the No. 1 ranking.

The Wisconsin fans who charged onto the field to celebrate victory meant no harm. They were trying not to upstage the players but to embrace them.

Yet, none of that excuses the fans at Wisconsin for their recklessness.

It is often assumed that the word "fan" is derived from fanatic, as if that explains why some modern fans do wildly stupid things. In fact, "fan" is more likely rooted in the word fancy, a 19th-century term for gentlemen who frequented prize fights.

The fancy watched with enthusiasm, not fanaticism, just as most fans still do. No one heard of interactive anything back then, but you can bet that the fancy would have pummeled an intruder pretty much the same way Bowe's corner beat up Miller, the self-described "Fan Man," after his stunt.

Perhaps Miller thought he would reap admiration. Instead, he brought a reminder of fear.

Coach impressed by fans but concerned for student safety

On behalf of the players, assistant coaches and staff of the K-State football program, I want to thank you from the very bottom of my heart for the great, great support you have provided us.

We have been impressed with your enthusiasm, confidence and sheer numbers in attendance. As I indicated five short years ago: "If you will be there and fill the stadium, these young men will play so hard it will make you cry."

You are getting close to filling the stadium, and the players are playing very hard for you.

They have rewarded you with a 20-2-1 record at home these past four years.

This week's game against a very dangerous University of Missouri football team is perhaps the most critical game of the season.

Bill Snyder

Once again, we need your loyal support, loud cheering and a full stadium.

As much as I appreciate the excitement of victory, and the desire and enthusiasm of our student section for celebrating it, I have some major concerns about the goal post issue.

First and foremost is the safety to those who come onto the field.

I have seen far too many instances, here and in other stadiums, where only the grace of God circumvented serious injury to many.

We certainly do not want an incident that would parallel the one that took place in Madison, Wis., two weeks ago.

In addition, as this program reaches greater levels of success and the expectations continue to rise, it would be our hope that the removal of the goal posts would not be the appropriate method of celebration.

We are all encouraged to represent this wonderful University with great class and respect for ourselves and each opponent that plays here.

Two other thoughts I want to share with you:

1. What a great turnout for the Friday pep rally at the old stadium on campus prior to the homecoming game, the most enthusiastic and well-attended since we've been here.

I shared the experience with our players. It was wonderful.

2. I want to express my gratitude to the countless number of students, deans, faculty members, administration and staff who openly expressed their support of me and this program this past week during a very difficult and distracting period of time.

After receiving correspondence and calls from thousands of people expressing their concerns and support, it became quite evident to me that K-State and the community of Manhattan are indeed very special, and how important it is that we continually work at coming together.

We are our own "greatest resource."

This community and University have so very much to offer and to be proud of, but only on a united front can we have the success that you and K-State so richly deserve.

Thank you for caring.

CATBACKERS

Clubs raise scholarship money

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The 11 Catbackers organizations in Kansas and Nebraska provide more than just support for K-State athletics.

Mike Sieben, president of the Manhattan Catbackers Club, said 95 percent of the organization's dues support the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund for student athletes.

"We have a golf tournament and auction for the Mike Ahearn scholarship," Sieben said. "We ask coaches to participate."

Sieben said K-State President Jon Wefald even gets involved.

"We have our membership drive in Wefald's backyard," Sieben said. "We're the luckiest, because the coaches are available to speak."

The club also sponsors a hospitality room for the volleyball team at the Wildcat/Continental Inn Best Western Invitational in Ahearn Field House and a radio show called "Cat Chat" with Coach Bill Snyder every Thursday night at the Vanier Football Complex.

Jim Koch, president of the North Central Catbackers Club, said his organization has a golf tournament to fund an academic scholarship for a freshman from the area who is planning on going to K-State.

"This year, we had a golf tournament in Belleville," Koch said. "The club serves Cloud, Washington and Republic counties with Concordia, Belleville and Clyde being the places of our main membership."

Mike Whitehead, president of Nebraskans for K-State, said his club is not as well-informed as other clubs, because members come from all over the Cornhusker state.

"We serve a little bit different purpose since we're the only one out of state," Whitehead said. "We have one third come from Omaha, one third come from Lincoln, and one third comes from everywhere else. It makes it difficult to organize game-watch parties."

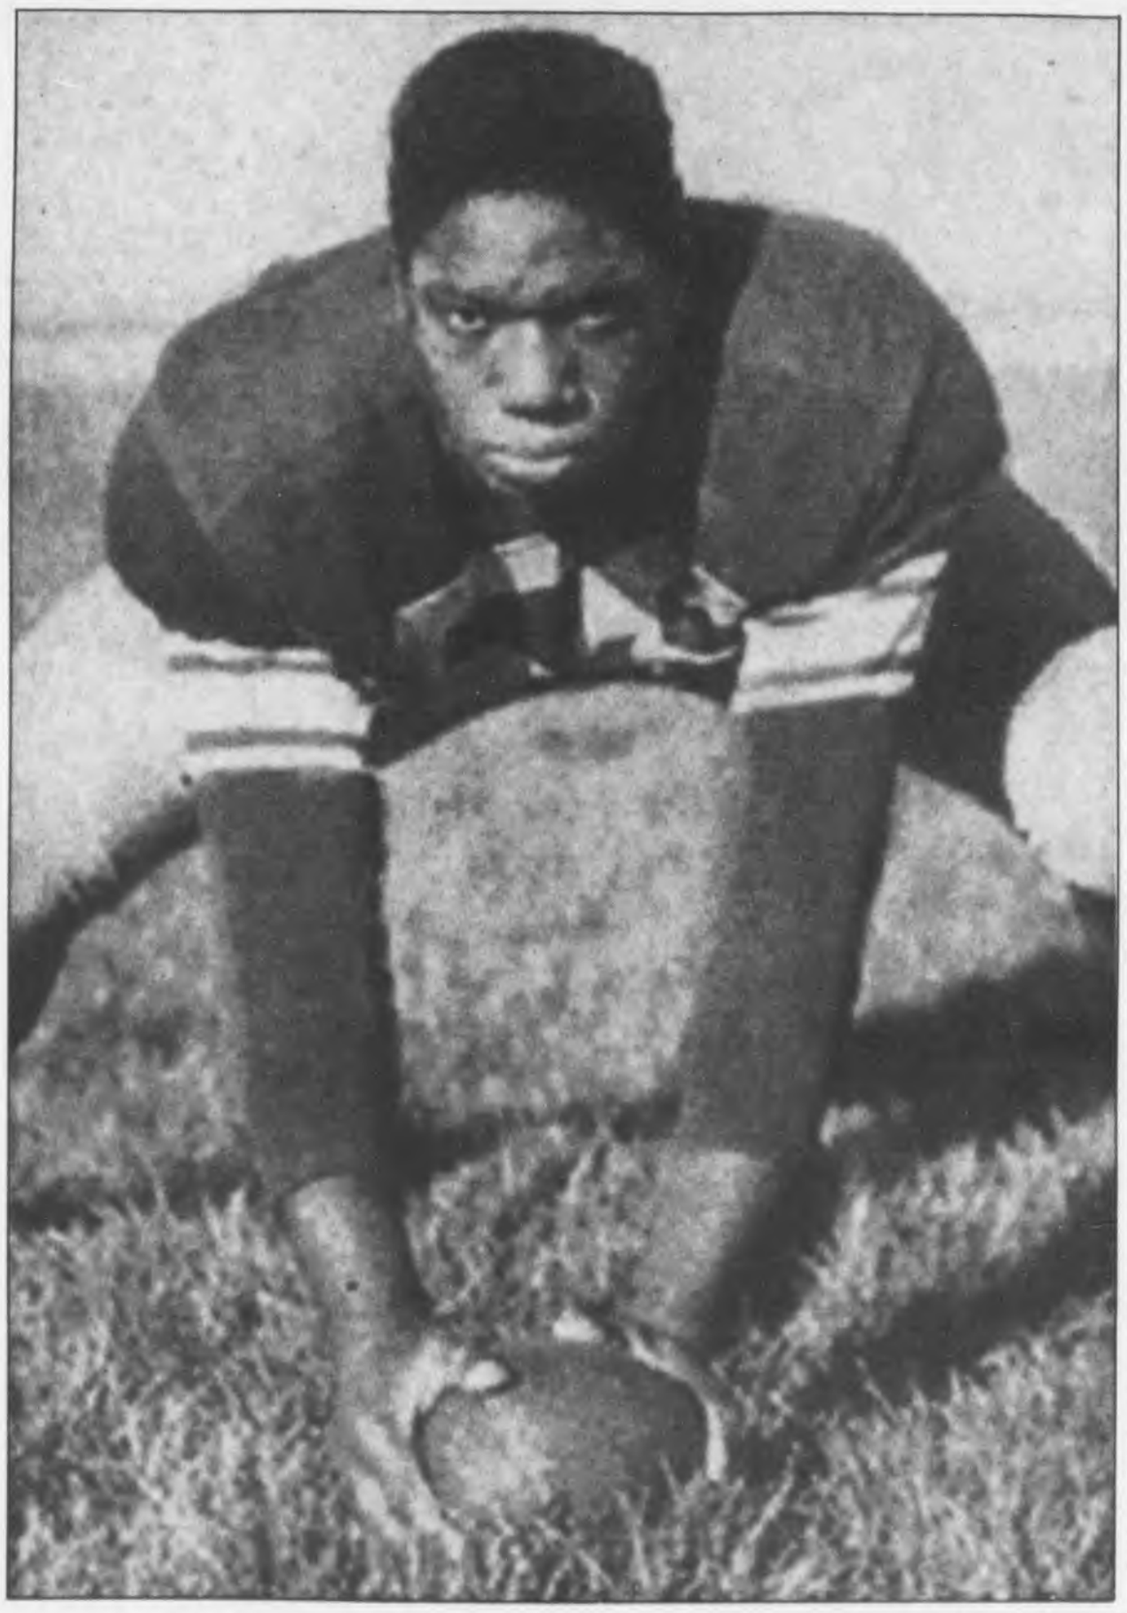
Whitehead said dues for joining any Catbacker club aren't expensive.

"The money left over is divided up between the athletic fund and foundation," Whitehead said. "The dues are $25 a year, and the members get a baseball cap and a newsletter."

Darin Russell, athletic development officer and director of the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund, said the clubs bring support to K-State athletics.

"This group represents the real meaning of the K-State fan — these people are fanatics," Russell said. "They get together on the their own time to go away to games."

Russell said he emphasizes the organization and volunteers work the clubs do for athletics.



"These groups do a lot of work for us," Russell said. "The organization is tremendous — we have at least one event per club during the spring and summer months."

Russell said the other Big Eight schools do not have clubs at the same level as the Catbackers.

"Other Big Eight schools have clubs, but not as organized and they are not across the state," Russell said.

Harold Robinson, played for K-State from 1949-52 and became the first black player to play Big Eight football. Robinson started at center and linebacker for the Wildcats before being drafted into the Korean War.

MELISSA HALL
Collegian

Athletes have accomplished many significant things on fields and courts at K-State, but in 1949, a football player had to change a way of thinking.

In the fall of 1949, K-State coach Ralph Graham brought in Harold Robinson to play football. Robinson, a native of Manhattan at the time, was as good as the other players.

The only difference was he was black.

Robinson became the first black player to play in the Big Eight Conference. He played center and linebacker from 1949 to 1952.

Robinson said he came to K-State to play ball and had to work his way through college.

"I had to work my freshman year since I couldn't be scholarshiped," he said. "The next season, Coach Graham had to have the league's permission to give me a scholarship."

Veryl Switzer, associate director of intercollegiate athletics and academic student support services, said he has high regard for Robinson as a player and a person. Switzer was Robinson's teammate.

"Robinson was a varsity letterman when I joined the team," Switzer said. "He was a pioneer for black athletes, and I hold him in very high regard. Graham had opposition to letting a black man play, but he (Graham) didn't consider it an issue."

Robinson and the other black athletes who followed him in the 1950s endured some trying rules when they traveled, Switzer said.

"When we traveled we often weren't allowed to stay in the hotels or stayed under another name. Sometimes we had to eat in the kitchen," he said.

"We endured with dignity and refused to eat at some of the restaurants. This was often embarrassing to the other players and the first time they experienced prejudices like this."

Robinson said the challenges from prejudice didn't bother him.

"I really never paid much attention to what other people said — being the first black player was never really an issue with me. I just tried to be a good person and play well," he said. "It didn't affect me that much."

Switzer said as a player Robinson was very good at whatever position he played.

"Robinson really had a natural ability whether he played center or linebacker," he said. "He really is one of my idols."

Robinson, who is retired from AT&T and lives in Wharton, N.J., said he misses the game and being physically active.

"I have always enjoyed playing, since I played six-man football when I was little," he said. "Center was a good position for me. I learned to play the position by studying the book by Clyde 'Bulldog' Turner of the Chicago Bears."

Robinson said he had hopes of playing in the National Football League, but was drafted into the Korean War, where he earned a Purple Heart.

"After the war, I didn't really want to play football. The war just kind of took it out of me, but the (Philadelphia) Eagles and the (Los Angeles) Rams were looking at me," he said. "My cousin Bill Baker, a K-State player, played for the New York Giants."

Robinson said his favorite moment was when the Wildcats beat Colorado at home in 1949. K-State won 28-14 in Memorial Stadium.

"We beat Colorado on a screen pass," Robinson said. "Dennis Kane, my best friend, had 105 yards total offense."

After playing all four years in the Memorial Stadium, Robinson said it was great to see K-State has better facilities than when he played.

"Never in my wildest dreams would I have expected K-State to have a stadium that big or the coliseum, " he said. "It really is extraordinary."

Robinson said he returns to Manhattan for reunions and to see his family.

"I was at K-State three times this year. I enjoy coming back to reunions and visiting my family," he said. "Manhattan and K-State have changed a lot."

BIG EIGHT ROUNDUP

KANSAS AT COLORADO

FAST FACTS: 1:10 p.m., Folsom Field, Boulder, Colo.
RECORDS: Kansas (4-6/2-3) and Colorado (5-3-1/3-1-1).

ABOUT THE JAYHAWKS:

Kansas nearly upset the Nebraska Cornhuskers when quarterback Asheiki Preston threw an incomplete pass in the end zone on a two-point conversion with 52 seconds left in the game last Saturday in Lawrence. The Jayhawks lost 21-20.

Running back June Henley has rushed for 946 yards — 666 in the past four games — and is tied for second in rushing touchdowns with K-State's J.J. Smith with nine.

Kansas hopes to end an eight-game losing streak to the Buffaloes. The Jayhawks missed beating Colorado last year in Lawrence when they lost 25-18.

ABOUT THE BUFFALOES:

Colorado defeated Oklahoma State 31-14 last weekend in Stillwater, Okla. Quarterback Kordell Stewart posted 328 yards passing to make him Colorado's career passing leader with 4,113 yards. Stewart threw touchdown passes of 26, 54 and 72 yards.

The secondary of Colorado claims the top defenders in the league. Cornerbacks Chris Hudson and Dennis Collier each have four interceptions to tie for first in the conference.

IOWA STATE AT NEBRASKA

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m., Memorial Stadium, Lincoln, Neb.

RECORDS: Iowa State (3-6/2-3) and Nebraska (9-0/5-0).

ABOUT THE CYCLONES:

Iowa State upended K-State 27-23 last weekend in Ames, Iowa. The Cyclones made up an 11-point deficit in the fourth quarter. Iowa State's defense held the Cats to 248 yards of total offense — 124.3 yards fewer than the K-State average. Iowa State has defeated three ranked teams in the past four seasons.

The Cyclones beat Nebraska 19-10 in Ames last year. It was their first win against the Cornhuskers in 15 years. In that game, quarterback Marv Seiler had a career-best 144 yards rushing and had a 78-yard fourth-quarter run that set up the game-winning two-yard touchdown run by running back Chris Ulrich.

ABOUT THE CORNHUSKERS:

Nebraska escaped Kansas last Saturday with a 21-20 win in Lawrence. I-back Calvin Jones collected 195 yards on the ground as Nebraska extended its NCAA record streak for nine-win seasons to 25. A win for the Cornhuskers would clinch the Big Eight crown for the third-consecutive year.

Jones has ran for 2,863 yards in his career to rank third in on the Nebraska rushing list and 18th in the Big Eight career chart. Jones ranks first in the league and 14th in the nation in rushing yards per game with 107.57 yards a contest.

OSU AT OKLAHOMA

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m., Memorial Stadium, Norman, Okla. Televised on the Prime Network.

RECORDS: Oklahoma State (3-6/0-5) and Oklahoma (7-2/3-2).

ABOUT THE COWBOYS:

Oklahoma State lost to Colorado, 31-14, last Saturday in Stillwater, Okla. The Cowboys started the game with an interception by defensive tackle Lorenzo Green to set up a one-yard touchdown run by running back Joe Jefferson before Colorado scored 31 unanswered points.

In last year's game, the Cowboys ended Oklahoma's 15-game winning streak against them by tying the Sooners' 15-15 in Stillwater, Okla. With the Sooners trailing by three, Oklahoma place kicker Scott Blanton hit a 27-yard field goal on the game's final possession.

ABOUT THE SOONERS:

Oklahoma downed Missouri, 42-23, last weekend in Columbia, Mo. The Sooners used their running game a good part of the day, creating a quick 28-0 lead. Oklahoma collected 229 yards of rushing for the day, compared to just 137 yards in the air. Oklahoma entered the contest averaging 214.4 yards per game in passing offense.

Coach Gary Gibbs has controlled Oklahoma State in his four years with Oklahoma. His record against the Cowboys is 3-0-1, while Oklahoma State coach Pat Jones is 0-8-1 against the Sooners.

Stull losing games, support

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Saturday's match-up between Missouri and K-State at KSU Stadium may be the last for Missouri's fifth-year coach Bob Stull.

Several publications have said Stull might be replaced after this season. Missouri Athletic Director Dan Devine said it is difficult to support a coach who has a losing record.

"I put a very high price on the type of guy that coaches at Missouri," Devine said. "Let me say that how you play is more important than the final score. I realize that only buys a certain amount of potatoes and gravy — and sells a certain amount of tickets. We are in the black, but more expenses are thrown at us all the time.

When asked if wins over K-State and Kansas in the next two weeks would help Stull's image in the eyes of the fans, Devine said he didn't think so.

Stull career record is 15-36-2, and the Tigers are coming off of a 42-23 loss to Oklahoma last Saturday. The Tigers are also 2-22 on the road while under Stull.

Even though the Tigers lost to the Sooners, the Tigers didn't cave in to Oklahoma, Missouri offensive lineman Mike Bedosky said.

"No one gave up," Bedosky said. "No one said 'Here we go, another MU-OU rout.' We fought back, and we had a chance to win at the end."

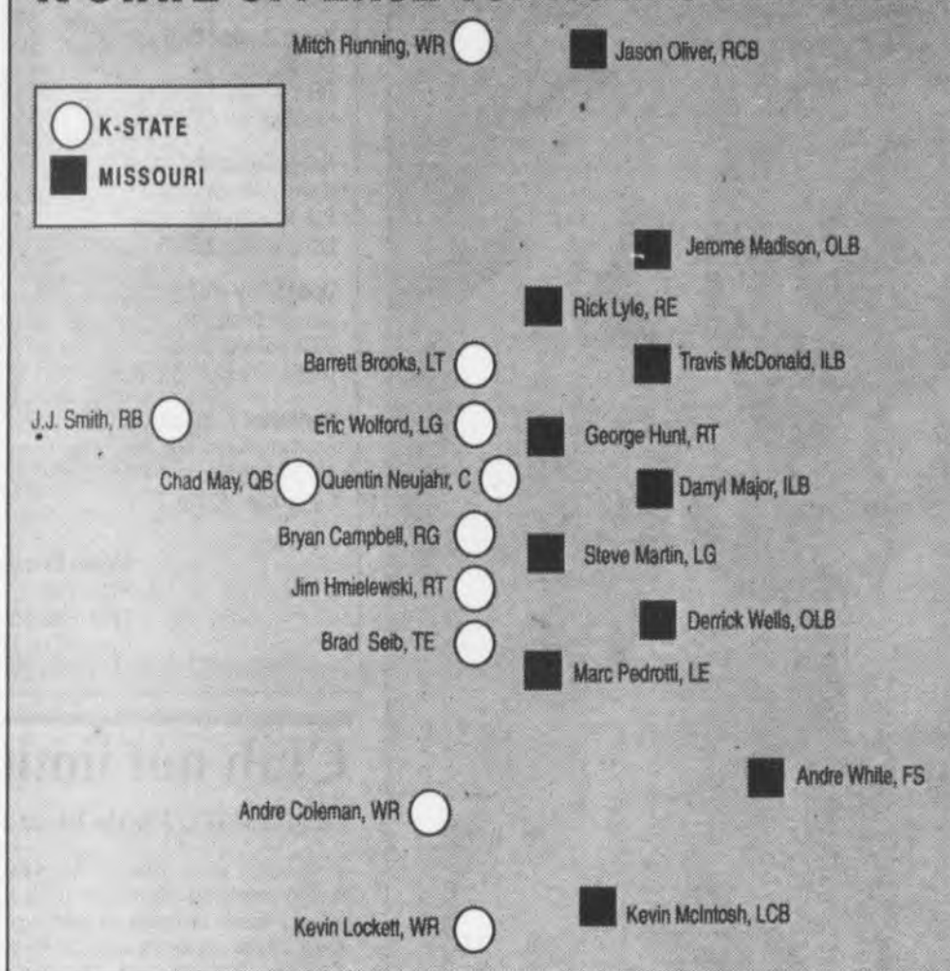
The Tigers cut into the Sooners' 28-0 lead to close the deficit to 28-10 at halftime. Then, Missouri struck again and cut the score to 28-23, but that was as close as the Tigers got.

K-State (6-2-1) also came up short last week against Iowa State in a 27-23 loss. With the loss, the Cats remain one win short of the minimum six NCAA Division-I victories needed to go to a postseason bowl.

At the moment in the Big Eight Conference, another win would give K-State its second bowl bid in school history.

Coach Bill Snyder said there is pressure to win against Missouri.

"I don't know what the talk is around town," Snyder said. "All I know is about how the people in our program feel. There is going to be some pressure to win, but our top priority now is to beat Missouri.



"If we don't win, there is going to be even more pressure next week."

Snyder said his team wasn't concentrating enough emotionally in the fourth quarter against Iowa State.

"I really believe our youngsters were not emotionally up to play. There was too much at stake," Snyder said. "Iowa State's offense has always done things well. They executed well, and they got a lot of big plays.""

Defeat upsets Snyder, players

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Before the K-State football team prepares for this week's game against Missouri, the Wildcats must dismiss the memory of last Saturday's 27-23 loss at Iowa State.

Receiver Kevin Lockett said it was a tough loss to swallow because the Cats had an 11-point lead in the fourth quarter, and the loss left K-State one win shy of qualifying for a postseason bowl.

"It was the quietest it's ever been on the flight back," Lockett said. "I sulked all weekend. Iowa State just played better than us in the fourth quarter."

The loss dropped K-State to fourth place in the Big Eight Conference, and Coach Bill Snyder said the loss was a disappointment.

"It was a big loss," Snyder said. "I don't know how it affects the way people perceive the season. It was a big letdown.

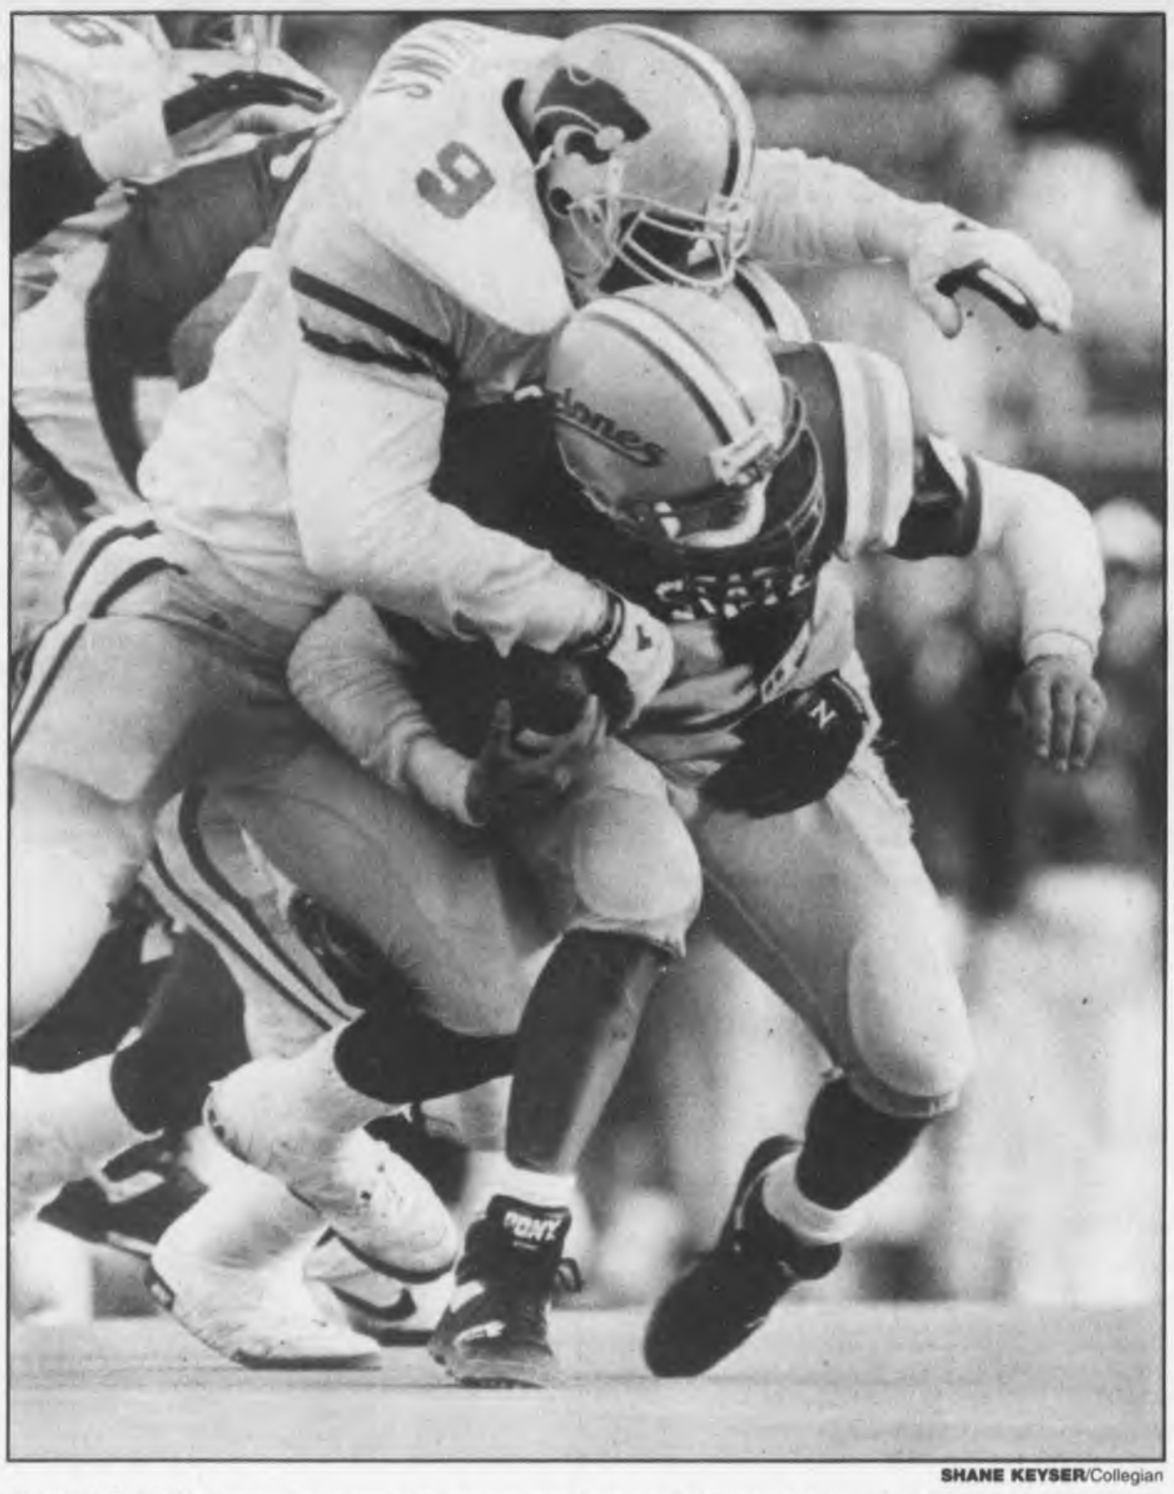
"And 6-2-1 doesn't look as good as 7-1-1."

"I was very concerned to see how the team would react after the loss," Snyder said.

"We've bounced back pretty well. We practiced well last night and yesterday afternoon. Our youngsters are getting over the disappointment and getting on with the anger that followed."

Lockett said the anger will provide the Cats with a lot of emotion against Missouri.

"The disappointment has turned into anger," Lockett said. "We are going to come out with a lot emotion. I just can't wait until Saturday. I hope it hurries up and gets here."



Free safety Jaime Mendez said K-State is ready for Missouri.

"We're hungry," Mendez said. "Saturday's loss hit us in the face and told us that we don't have to stop working. I was angry right away. We didn't want to accept a loss."

Lockett said the Cats would rather get the win needed to qualify for a bowl against Missouri, instead of having to win at Oklahoma State the following week.

"It would be better here," Lockett said.

"I'd hate to have to go down to Stillwater and be forced to win there."

One of the biggest misconceptions about the club is people think in order to join, you must be an alumnus or alumna of K-State, Russell said. He said a man from Florida became a supporter of K-State athletics after seeing one K-State basketball game on television.

"He saw K-State play Oregon State in a basketball game, and he liked it," Russell said. "Through association, he got excited about K-State."

THE MATCH-UP

A position-by-position look at K-State's game Saturday against Missouri. The Collegian sports staff compiled the information to pick the team with the advantage at each position.

DEFENSE

| POSITION | | K-State | Missouri |
|---|---|---|---|
| LINE | Even though K-State allowed Iowa State to score on three fourth-quarter touchdown drives, the Cats still have the fifth-ranked rushing defense in the Big Eight. In the first half alone, the Sooners rushed for 229 yards against the Tiger defense. Missouri is eighth in the Big Eight in rushing defense. | ✔ | |
| LINEBACKERS | Last week, the Cats allowed 359 yards of total offense against the Cyclones, just three yards more than the Cats' average (356.6). Kirby Hocutt had 16 tackles to lead the team, and Percell Gaskins had 10 tackles. Missouri gave up 366 yards against the Sooners, and the Tigers are ranked last in the Big Eight in total defense. | ✔ | |
| SECONDARY | K-State has probably the second-best defensive backfield in the conference — right behind Missouri. The Tigers are led by cornerbacks Kevin McIntosh and Jason Oliver. McIntosh is tied for the league lead in interceptions with four this season. The Tigers also have only allowed 1,571 yards through the air this season. K-State has allowed 1,625 yards in the air this season, but the Cats have only nine interceptions compared to Missouri's 11. | | ✔ |

OFFENSE

| POSITION | | K-State | Missouri |
|---|---|---|---|
| LINE | The Wildcat offensive line has helped K-State to rank fifth in total offense in the Big Eight. The Cats average 358.6 yards per game and are fourth in scoring offense with 26.6 points a game. Missouri is anchored by Outland Trophy candidate Mike Bedosky. The Tigers had to replace four starters from last season's squad, and the Tigers are sixth in total offense with an average of 353.2 yards per game. | ✔ | |
| WIDE RECEIVERS/ TIGHT ENDS | K-State and Missouri could both tie a Big Eight record with three receivers each having more than 40 catches. The Cats still have the top passing attack in the Big Eight. Kevin Lockett is second in the Big Eight in receiving yards and fourth in receptions in the Big Eight. Andre Coleman is third in receiving yards, and Mitch Running is seventh. The Tigers' top receiver is Kenny Holly, who is leading the Big Eight in receptions per game. Tiger tight end A.J. Ofodile is fourth in the Big Eight in receiving yards. | ✔ | |
| RUNNING BACKS | Even though the Cats have two of the top 11 rushers in the Big Eight, they still have the eighth-ranked rushing offense. The Cats only rushed for 51 yards against Iowa State last week. Tiger running back Joe Freeman has hit his stride with two consecutive 100-yard plus rushing games. | | ✔ |
| QUARTERBACKS | Last week, Chad May was just 13 for 30 for only 197 yards — almost 70 yards short of his season average. With that performance, May dropped to sixth in the Big Eight in passing efficiency. May did break a Big Eight record for consecutive touchdown passes in eight straight games. So far this season, Tiger quarterback Jeff Handy has been intercepted 11 times, but he leads the Big Eight in completions. Last week, Handy threw for 249 yards against Oklahoma. | ✔ | |

SPECIAL TEAMS

| POSITION | | K-State | Missouri |
|---|---|---|---|
| PUNTING | Missouri punter Kyle Pooler is ranked second in the Big Eight with a 42.62 average per punt. K-State punter Chad Romano had a difficult time punting in the wind and cold against Iowa State. He averaged 39.9 yards per punt. With that performance, he dropped to sixth in the Big Eight. | | ✔ |
| PLACE KICKING | Tate Wright is fifth in the conference in field goals per game with one and has made nine of 13 field goals so far this season. Pooler is also Missouri's place kicker. Two weeks ago, he kicked the game-winning field goal against Iowa State and has made five of eight field goals. | | ✔ |
| RETURN | Coleman is first in the Big Eight in kickoff returns and all-purpose yards. K-State is also first in the league in kickoff returns and second in punt returns. The Cats average 23.6 yards on kickoff returns and 12.2 yards on punt returns. Missouri ranks last in the Big Eight in both categories. The Tigers average only 5.4 yards on punt returns and 16.9 yards on kickoff returns. | ✔ | |

INTANGIBLES

| AREA | | K-State | Missouri |
|---|---|---|---|
| MOMENTUM | K-State lost a 27-23 heartbreaker last week to the Cyclones. The Cats should use that as a motivating force this week because they are just one win shy of qualifying for a postseason bowl game. With last week's loss to Oklahoma, the Tigers are not able to have a winning record this season again — marking the 10th straight year. | ✔ | |
| COACHING | Bill Snyder is 24-28-1 in his fifth year at K-State and a two-time Big Eight Coach of the Year. Stull is 46-63-2 in his 10th year as head coach at Missouri. In fact, Stull has never had a winning season at Missouri. Stull is 1-4 against the Cats, while Snyder is 3-1 against the Tigers. Rumors from several publications have said the alumni are unhappy with Stull, and his job is in jeopardy after this season. | ✔ | |
| THE EDGE | K-State and Missouri have similar offensive styles. Both teams use the one-back set a majority of the time, and both quarterbacks have rocket arms. The key in this game could be which team will rebound after last week's losing performances. The Cats need the win more than the Tigers do because K-State doesn't want to force a must-win situation next week at Oklahoma State. To be successful against the tough Missouri secondary, K-State will have to muster more on the ground than its 51 yards of rushing against the Cyclones. | ✔ | |

Shakespeare's play gets a sex change

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

Charlotte MacFarland said she was unexplainably compelled to write her play, "Gathering of Fools."

"Gathering of Fools" is based upon the historical context of "Macbeth" and retells Shakespeare's story from the viewpoint of the women in the play.

"The play is the story of Lady Macbeth and her friendship with Lady Macduff," MacFarland, assistant professor of speech, said.

MacFarland said the idea for the play was initially planted when she directed a K-State production of Shakespeare's "Macbeth" as she and the lead struggled with the portrayal of Lady Macbeth.

"All of the women are struggling for some kind of control. She is a daring person," MacFarland said.

"She is very strong and feels a strong love for Lady Macduff and her children.

"Lady Macbeth is almost two separate characters," MacFarland said.

"It's very hard for an actress to put those characters together," she said.

"The experience of directing Macbeth stayed in my mind for years. I don't know why I wrote the play. I just decided to do it."

She said once the process was started, the creative motivation was intense and one that would not allow her to leave her work alone.

"I started with the ending monologue, so I had the end and needed to create everything that lead up to that point.

"It's really funny and strange where plays come from," she said.

"The characters started talking, and I was just dictating the words they were saying."

MacFarland enthusiastically described one of the more prevalent characters — Lady Bledsoe, who appeared in the midst of the dialogue playing in MacFarland's head.

"Lady Bledsoe just came into it. She kept getting bigger and bigger. She is a comical character. She says what she thinks and is noted for farting."

MacFarland said she has always had a passion for Shakespeare and has been intrigued by the women in his "Macbeth." Her play, though, is based very loosely on his version.

"Mine is really an entirely different play. As I revise, it gets further from 'Macbeth.'"

MacFarland said successive revising is part of the playwrighting process.

"I just couldn't let this play alone."she said.

"It's got to get right. I have spent more time fiddling with this play.

"The more I write, the more humble I become because I see the flaws in the play. Sometimes, it takes years to get one right."

MacFarland, who is also directing K-State's production, said the experience is strange. When she directs, she does a line-by-line analysis.

"It's like wearing two hats. I've really become very detached. It doesn't feel like my play anymore."

"Gathering of Fools" premiered at Michigan State last winter. MacFarland said directing this production is easier.

"I couldn't have directed it if it hadn't been done before."

She also said that acting as the director has opened up new revenues with which to view the play.

"I've made some statements I didn't know I had made. For instance, one of my actresses commented that since I have not included the witches of Shakespeare's 'Macbeth,' Lady Bledsoe acts as the witches of my play."

PREVIEW

K-State professor offers new perspective on Macbeth

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

Shakespeare's "Macbeth" will get a feminine twist with KSU Theatre's presentation of "A Gathering of Fools."

"A Gathering of Fools" tells the story of Lady Macbeth and the other women who gather in the castle while the men wage war outside. The story also deals with the deep friendship between Lady Macbeth and Lady Macduff.

Charlotte MacFarland, assistant professor of speech, wrote the play. She will also direct it.Although MacFarland's story was inspired by Shakespeare, it is also independent from the original.

"That's one of the reasons she went through so many rewrites — so you don't have to know 'Macbeth' to understand it," Marci Maullar, managing director of KSU Theatre, said.

However, the connection to "Macbeth" makes the story a familiar one.

"I think it's a great story," Mauller said. "It's very dramatic, but also humorous. Shakespeare's stories are tried and true, so it leaves you with a good plot line."

Before coming to K-State, "A Gathering of Fools" was previously performed at Michigan State University.

TICKETS
- "A Gathering of Fools" will run Nov. 11-13 and Nov. 17-20.
- Tickets are available at McCain Box Office. The cost is $5 for students and $7 for the public.

"We decided that we have a lot of good playwrights in Manhattan, but we like to have them be performed in at least one other place so we have a guideline," Maullar said.

Having the author also direct the play has added a new element to it, said Caisha Williams, sophomore in theater, who plays the elderly Lady Bledsole.

"It's given us a unique perspective on the original meaning to the play because, normally when you interpret a play, you get a one-dimensional perspective," Williams said. "But with the author there, you get a whole new perspective on the meaning."

Besides dealing with the friendships and conflicts between the women confined to the castle, "A Gathering of Fools" also deals with the free-spirited Lady Macbeth's ambition and the power of fate.

"I think it has a lot to do with fate because we mention 'the turning of the wheel' and how you can be on top of the world one minute, and then the wind shifts, and it all will have fallen," Williams said. "We refer to it throughout the story."

Unlike "Macbeth," "A Gathering of Fools" does not take place at any one time. The costumes for the show come from different time periods.

Responsibility...
A K-State Tradition

As K-Staters we have a responsibility to each other. This means we are obligated to respect other person's right to make choices about their own sexual behavior. If you have to "make" someone have sex, you have taken away their right to a free choice. You may also have committed an act of sexual violence.

The damage caused by sexual violence is costly to the victim, to the community, and to society as a whole: Fear replaces trust, doubt replaces confidence, distraction replaces concentration, wasted effort replaces focused productivity, and a void replaces the contributions that might have come from the victims. No one wins. There are no victors.

Although the university cannot assure protection from sexual violence, it can state expectations and, in some instances, can impose sanctions on any university student who fails to meet those expectations. The policy Prohibiting Sexual Violence was created for two purposes: 1) to educate members of the university community, and 2) to take action against policy violence encourages students to resolve complaints of sexual violence by utilize the administrative review process through which the university may administer its own sanctions.

Policy Prohibiting Sexual Violence
The acts in this policy are prohibited only when they are forced on another person. An act is forced if the victim refuses, or when the victim does not verbally or otherwise indicate refusal but:
A) Is overcome by force or fear
B) Is unconscious or physically powerless
C) In incapable of refusing because of mental deficiency or disease
D) Is incapable of refusing because of the effects of alcohol, narcotics, drugs or any other substances

A complete copy of the Policy Prohibiting Sexual Violence is available at the Student Activities and Services Office in the K-State Union.

Confidential assistance is available to any student following a sexual assault. Contact the Women's Resource Center, 206 Holton Hall, (6444). The KSU police will put you in touch with the staff member on-call after hours and on the weekend.

Please direct questions to Pat Bosco (6237), Susan Scott (6432), or Bernard Franklin (6432)

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be subnitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Dear Cassandra,

I am having a respect problem with my roommate.

By the way he acts, I can tell that, since he was very little, he has been a very spoiled brat.

Knowing that, I have been trying to understand him and somehow handle his manners, but it's getting out of hand.

This "butt-head" loves to fart and burp whenever he feels like it, and he says it is a normal/natural thing to do, and I guess I agree with that.

However, what I cannot handle is the fact that he does it even when I'm on the phone.

He just doesn't care, and it is pissing me off.

I'm willing to understand — the day he took a piss on our sink, I didn't say anything! But this, I think, is very sick.

Signed,
Peace Maker

Dear Peace Maker,

Such a pleasant roommate from the sounds of it.

How about sitting down with the guy and telling him what you're thinking?

Explain your feelings and ask for the behavior to stop, at least while you're at home.

It is his own home and all, and theoretically he should be able to do pretty much what he likes.

But in a roommate situation, those rules may have to be modified to keep the peace.

Dear Cassandra,

I really enjoy dating and meeting new guys; however, lately it seems the guys I go out with are either so infatuated with me they won't leave me alone, or they're only out for a little weekend fling to get their jollies and then they gradually lose interest.

Is there a happy medium in the midst of all this madness, or is it a hopeless search?

Signed,
Lonely and Confused

Dear Lonely and Confused,

The happy medium is to find the real men in the midst of all the little boys. And that search isn't hopeless — it's just makes life that much more interesting.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Wash your feet. The stench is coming through your shoes. Better yet, forget the shoes today.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Live every minute like it's your last, because it just might be.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Call U-LearN and ask them the meaning of life. If they don't know, ask them to look it up.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): All those semester-end projects you have put off are due tomorrow.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Drive to the nearest Stuckeys and buy a pecan log roll. You'll need a lot of preservatives tonight.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Tell your professors to take the day off. Take them to Chance for a couple of beers.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Today could be a good day with the proper chemicals.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Look — up in the sky. It's a bird. It's a plane. It's Chuckie.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be extra nice to your roommate today. It will make them wonder what you are doing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): By someone you love a beer tonight, then ask them to return the favor.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Cleaning your finger nails with a chainsaw may be less painful today.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Go to a turkey farm and ask for the left-over parts.

Counting Crows challenging

CHRISTOPHER WEAVER
Collegian

Counting Crows' debut album, "August and Everything After," is as timeless as the name would suggest.

Many bands may try to capture the enduring sound of influences such as The Band, Van Morrison and Bob Dylan, but few are successful in creating something completely original and progressive. Counting Crows does that and much more.

REVIEW

The San Francisco-based band uniquely blends melodic guitars with the tasteful use of the piano while being driven by a powerful Hammond B-3 organ.

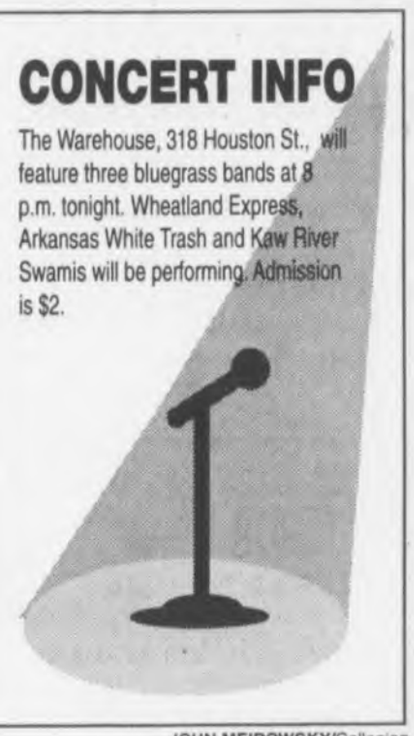
David Immergluck, of Monks of Doom, throws occasional mandolins and mandacellos into the equation. With all that, what you get is an album that finds rock 'n' roll grooves with the detail of a Bob Ross painting.

Lead vocalist Adam Duritz's voice can sound as gritty and emotional as the best of them and yet still retain all of the features of a truly great singer. He compliments the organic sound that producer T-Bone Burnett recorded.

Lyrically, the band is best described as poetic. The repeating theme of chasing dreams and illusions of grandeur, used throughout the album, is best captured by the Van Morrison-esque "Mr. Jones":

"We all want to be big stars/but we don't know why, and we don't know how/But when everybody loves me, I'm going to be just about as happy as can be."

One of the most original and interesting moments on the album is the bridge of "Round Here." The band rides a slow groove over which Duritz is caught storytelling. Out of nowhere, a jerky guitar interrupts the song and brings the attention away from the lyrics, only to fade back into the groove.



Songs like "Omaha" and "Rain King" exemplify what earthy rock 'n' roll should sound like without neglecting the importance of saying something. Take, for example, "A Murder of One," where the group takes its shots at a lethargic love interest:

"All your life is such a shame/All your love is just a dream/Open up your eyes/You can see the flames of your wasted life/You should be ashamed."

Raw emotion, coupled with tact and taste, emanates from "August and Everything After." If you're not afraid to be challenged, Counting Crows may be the greatest thing to come out of San Francisco since sourdough bread, and even then, the bread's only good for one meal.

State questions flood victims

MIKE BUNCH
Collegian

The Kansas Legislative Flood Task Force listened as area flood victims expressed complaints at a public meeting last night at the Riley County Fire Department lecture hall.

The task force, with Kansas Rep. Carl Holmes, R-Liberal, as chairperson, was in Manhattan as part of a three-day, three-city tour to gather information about problems in the handling of the 1993 flood.

"Our mission is to assess the state law, state and federal cooperation and state and local cooperation," Holmes said. "We need to see where the mistakes are and how to fix the problem."

The information gathered at the meetings will be combined with a three-day session in Topeka in December.

"At that time, we will take testimony from mayors and other local officials on this issue," Sen. Don Sallee, R-Troy, said. "We will take the information from both these sessions and look to introduce legislation to try to improve the situation."

After the introductions of the task force members, Holmes opened the discussion to the audience for comments and questions.

One of the common issues brought up by audience members was a lack of communication within the various emergency agencies and area citizens.

"We had a lack of information and a lack of preparedness," said Barry Anderson, Manhattan resident who lives in Hunter's Island. "If we had been given information ahead of time, we could have evacuated property, and when we were finally notified to evacuate, we weren't told what to do except pack a suitcase."

Another audience member added that the citizens of Hunter's Island were not informed about the possibilities of the flood.

"In Hunter's Island, we didn't have time to deal with the problem, so we lost a lot of personal property that could have been saved with more time."

The communication problems also had an effect on sandbagging efforts in some areas.

"We were only allowed 100 sandbags for our area and couldn't get help or cooperation from anyone," Maxine Thowe, Hunter's Island resident, said. "The problem was a breakdown in communication. I think there should be a local emergency preparedness person in rural areas."

Communication was not just a problem for those outside the city of Manhattan. People in the city also had problems getting correct information and updates on the situation.

One audience member from the Dix addition in Manhattan said people in the area were getting mixed information.

"Sitting close to Riley County and Pottawatomie County, we got a mixed message. In Pottawatomie County they were getting info on the upcoming flood and telling businesses to move anything they needed to, while we got no notification of a planned flood until later."

"I think there was a communication problem," Janet Bowen, a resident of the Knoxberry addition, said. "We were told there was no flood problem in our area, then later on we got one hour to evacuate."

Several people said they had problems with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and getting information on flood levels.

Areas like Hunter's Island and the city of Milford relied on up-to-date information to take preventative measures or see if an evacuation was necessary.

Residents of Hunter's Island received no indication of an evacuation until July 18. They were then given three hours to pack up and leave.

"If I had known the possibility of a flood, I would have packed up my personal stuff," Anderson said. "As it was, I lost my home and everything else."

Some audience and task force members suggested that outflow release should have some local control and should not rely on someone in an area not affected by flooding.

"It would be extremely helpful and desirable if local people could have some input in the outflow of the lake," Wilton Thomas, Manhattan city commissioner, said. "It could have helped eliminate some problems if water was released at an earlier time."

Some people have had problems getting money or a response from the Federal Emergency Management Agency while others haven't.

"FEMA representatives sent to the area didn't seem to represent FEMA very well," Duaine Sherwood said.

City commission considers annexation of K-State

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The city commission discussed the annexation of K-State as a means to raise alternative revenue for the city at a work session Tuesday night.

Mayor Roger Maughmer said the city and University are working in more partnerships than they have before. He said a faster movement toward annexation is growing out of those relationships.

Curt Wood, director of finance for the city, said the annexation of K-State would produce more revenue than any other new revenue sources available to the city.

There would be a 4-to-1 benefit ratio for the city if K-State were annexed, Wood said.

City Manager Jim Pearson said the ratio was figured with the assumption that the University would continue to maintain its own streets and police department.

Most of the revenue would come from the 1-percent city sales tax, Wood said. The city would also benefit from user and franchise fees. The inclusion of on-campus residents would raise the city population and make it eligible for more reimbursement from state sales-tax revenues.

Commissioner Helen Cooper said the commission needed to look at the effect of annexation on economic growth.

"We have to keep in mind the cents spent in tax on an ice cream cone on campus won't be spent downtown in Aggieville," she said.

William Muir, assistant vice president for institutional advancement, said he had concerns about how the annexation would affect students and the way they finance their education.

"Students are already being hit right and left with cost," he said. "And they are already looking at another 9-percent increase in their tuition."

Muir said discussion with previous city commissions on the subject indicated the city would raise $270,000 a year from the annexation.

K-State would save $90,000 a year it pays to the city to provide fire protection to the campus.

"Unless the benefit to the University students and residents of the city can be balanced out, the University would not favor annexation," Muir said.

The commission also looked at a franchise fee on trash hauling, higher fees on bounced checks and a real-estate transfer fee as possible alternative revenue sources.

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Dominicans receive crayons from Clovia

TORI NIEHOFF
Collegian

Crayons, old or new, will be sent to two government-run pre-schools in the Dominican Republic.

Clovia 4-H House is buying, bringing and sending crayons to a poverty-stricken area in Santiago, Dominican Republic.

The house had hoped to make this a University-wide project but was unable to get all the plans together and had to work around shipping costs. Clovia hopes to make this a yearly project with growing results.

Julie Sellers, community-service chairperson for Clovia, spent nine weeks this past summer in Santiago working with these children. After the summer project was over, she said, she wanted to do something to help the children.

"I decided when I left that I was going to get crayons to these kids," Sellers said. "When I was little, at the beginning of almost every school year, I would get a new box of crayons and school supplies. These kids never get new things like that and have nothing."

Sellers conducted a presentation to Clovia suggesting Clovia coordinate the project.

"We think this project is a good idea," Cynthia Lake, sophomore in human development and family studies, said. "After we saw pictures of these children, we wanted to help them, giving as much as we could. The project became more realistic after the presentation because the pictures grabbed our hearts. We realized why we should really be doing this."

Clovia members are gathering old crayons from their homes, buying new boxes and getting donations of crayons from friends.

Members are sending out letters to fraternities and sororities, asking for donations for shipping costs to send the crayons to the Dominican Republic. The crayons will be sent in several small packages to make the process of passing through customs easier.

Clovia members did not want to just send money to the Dominican Republic because they wanted to make sure the children received an actual item or supply, Sellers said.

"If we send money, too much could happen to it," Sellers said. "Instead, we are sending the crayons directly to a social worker and supervisor in these schools."

Clovia members said they hope to send paper and other supplies to the children if there is money left over.

LIBRARY

Farrell designers to field questions

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

Students who have questions about the Farrell Library expansion will get a chance to ask them today.

The architects who designed the expansion will be in the Union Courtyard Wednesday from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

Along with the architects, there will be a table with copies of the floor plans and a cross-section model of what the expansion will look like.

Anyone with questions about the expansion is encouraged to stop by the table and speak to the architects. Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean of libraries, will also be present.

LIBRARY INFO

■ The architects who designed the expansion to Farrell Library will be answering questions from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. today in the Union Courtyard.

McCulloh said this is a good way for students to get information.

"It's a lot easier for people to see what the expansion will look like than to explain it to them," she said.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said he wants to keep students informed of what's going on.

"This is going to disrupt parking and traffic around the library," he said. "I think we owe the students the courtesy of discussing it with them."

Construction on the expansion is to begin in the spring of 1994.

Site preparation, which includes tearing down the Art Building, could begin as early as January, Hobrock said.

CAMPUS

Artist to give workshop

SUSAN HATTEBERG
Collegian

An artist traveling from Cortona, Italy, will be visiting from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m Thursday at K-State.

Linda Samson, a book artist, will have a workshop from 10 a.m. to noon and 2 p.m. to 4 p.m., Karen Lauseng, graduate student in art, said.

The workshop will be divided into two sections, Lauseng said.

"In the morning, she is going to teach four basic Japanese book-binding techniques," Lauseng said. "In the afternoon workshop, she will create an accordion book with a cover."

An accordion book has lots of hinges, which make the book very flexible, like a hand-held fan, Elliott Pujol, professor of art, said.

Lauseng said Samson has her own business in Italy making and binding books.

Samson makes prints and draws. She became interested in art after traveling in Europe, Pujol said.

"Through her travels throughout Europe, she became interested in book art, which is becoming a lost art," Pujol said. "She has studied with the masters."

Samson also works with literary people such as poets and writers, Pujol said.

Pujol said Samson also makes paper.

"When she makes limited-edition books, she makes her own paper," Pujol said. "She will not be making paper at the workshop. This late in the semester, it would be awkward."

Samson received her bachelor's degree from the University of Kansas in printmaking and her master's degree from the University of Alabama in book arts, Lauseng said.

Lauseng said Samson was born in the United States and is visiting the country.

The workshop will be in the Art Building, Pujol said.

Anyone can sign up in the office of the Art Building, and there is a materials fee of $10, Lauseng said.

The workshop is made possible through the fine-arts fee, Pujol said.

"Without this fee, we would not be able to bring in artists such as Samson to the campus," Pujol said.

Faculty Senate discusses titles of departments

cutbacks in the short term and to set up endowments for long-term shortages.

Michie also introduced the proposed merger between Fort Hays State University and Barton County Community College.

According to some reports, the merger would cost an estimated $3.5 million dollars.

Faculty senator Brad Fenwick, associate professor of pathology and microbiology, said he was concerned that this kind of merger would be a drain on state funds.

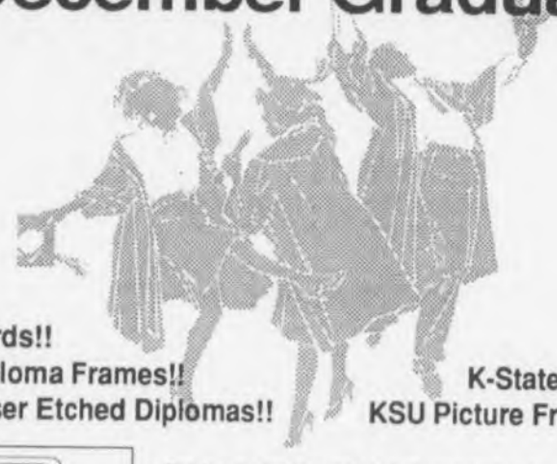
"The state is already overburdened with institutions of higher learning," Fenwick said. "That would be something I would be particularly worried about, lowering property taxes and switching the burden onto the state."

Michie said the issue was not only the cost but the future of state universities.

"Where does this money come from?" Michie said. "What happens to the system of higher education? What happens if each university goes out and starts grabbing community colleges?"

In other old business, there was much debate in the Faculty Senate about whether faculty leaders in departments should be referred to as heads or chairs.

Last year, Faculty Senate voted overwhelmingly to allow each department the option of having a head or chair, Kenneth Klabunde, professor of chemistry, said.



Klabunde serves on a committee of three faculty senators and three deans who are trying to compromise on the issue.

Most of the debate dealt with the specific meanings and responsibilities associated with the title of head or chair.

"Basically, chairmanships tend to be more democratic, and faculty can fire that person," Klabunde said. "The department head serves at the pleasure of the dean.

"For example, a chair would probably not be a permanent position. He or she would be expected to rotate out and have someone else serve in the position.

House not affected by NAFTA debate

Many keep opinion to themselves

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The ballyhooed Gore-Perot debate had little effect on undecided House members who will vote on the free-trade agreement, the lawmakers said Wednesday.

With a week to go, supporters said they were 25 to 30 votes short. Opponents said the gap was much larger.

Backers of the North American Free Trade Agreement crowed that the televised face-off between Vice President Al Gore and Ross Perot had given them momentum.

But several undeclared lawmakers said they were more concerned with NAFTA's expected effect on their districts — or with swinging deals in exchange for their votes — than with Gore and Perot.

"It's nothing new," Rep. Jay Kim, R-Calif., said of the debate as he emerged from a morning White House meeting with the pact's chief champion, President Clinton. "I have read NAFTA. I studied it thoroughly."

Kim said he told Clinton his main concern was negotiating a prisoner-exchange treaty to send criminal illegal aliens back to Mexico. He said he might consider backing NAFTA if Clinton voiced support for such an agreement, which would be popular in his Southern California district.

Another undecided lawmaker, Rep. Nita Lowey, D-N.Y., said she would rely little on the debate. She said she was far more interested in how the pact would affect companies and jobs in her district, which stretches from New York City to its Westchester County suburbs.

"I have a half-dozen meetings today on NAFTA and more tomorrow," she said. "By the end of the week, I think I'll sort this out."

With both sides keeping their vote lists secret, it was impossible to know with certainty how many undecided House members there really were. Estimates ranged from 30 to 70, and they came from all corners of the country, although many from the 23-member Florida delegation were said to be uncommitted.

Lawmakers and aides said that in many cases legislators who had privately made up their minds were publicly remaining undeclared to avoid recriminations from the side they had abandoned. In other cases, vote counters said they believed lawmakers were giving inconsistent answers to both sides.

"I just don't think you can answer the question totally how many are actually undecided and how many are just reporting undecided," said House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-

Mexican stock soars

"Vice President Gore put them forward with complete clarity."

JAIME SERRA PUCHE
TRADE MINISTER

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY— New hopes that the North American Free Trade Agreement will be approved set off frenzied trading on the Mexican stock exchange Wednesday.

Mexicans declared Vice President Al Gore the winner of Tuesday night's free-trade debate with NAFTA opponent Ross Perot. Even their anger at Perot's suggestions that Mexicans all live in poverty soon gave way to satisfaction that the Texas tycoon had been put in his place.

"NAFTA opponents are using arguments without much substance," Trade Minister Jaime Serra Puche said in a radio interview.

"For the first time, the distortions of the (NAFTA) opponents, led by Ross Perot, got concrete, positive responses. Vice President Gore put them forward with complete clarity."

Within the first four hours, the stock exchange had soared more than 72.34 points to 2,026.18, slightly under the record of 2,029.06 set last month.

"This appears to be a sign of confidence in the Free Trade Agreement," said Adalberto Fernandez Flores, representative for the Bolsa Mexicana de Valores, the Mexican stock exchange. "The trading record could be broken tomorrow if this continues."

"It's going up because of hopes that the agreement will be approved," said David Cohen of the Casa de Bolsa Inverlat trading house. "After last night, we no longer consider Ross Perot a threat."

The agreement between Mexico, the United States and Canada would create the world's largest economic market. Over 15 years, it would phase out most barriers to the free flow of goods, services and investment.

▶BRADY BILL PASSES HOUSE BY 49 VOTES

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House passed the Brady bill Wednesday to force a five-day waiting period and a background check on people trying to buy handguns.

Supporters hailed it as a modest but solid step against violent crime. Opponents said it would do little or nothing to keep guns from criminals, while opening the door to gun control.

The vote was 238-189. The Senate plans to take up the Brady bill after it completes work on a large crime bill, which was stalled much of the day as senators tried to resolve controversies amid threats of a Republican filibuster.

BRADY BILL PASSES

■ A "yes" vote is a vote in favor of imposing the waiting period.
YES — 184 Democrats, 54 Republicans
NO — 69 Democrats, 119 Republicans

■ Individual votes
YES — Dan Glickman (D), Jan Meyers (R), Jim Slattery (D)
NO — Pat Roberts (R)

Marc Scantlin, senior in social sciences, sits in silence in a cage decorated with prisoner-of-war dog tags Wednesday afternoon in the K-State Union. Scantlin and other Air Force ROTC members spend shifts in the cage until the 11th minute of the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month of the year to commemorate Veterans Day.

Air Force ROTC stages event for POWs, veterans

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

Silver dog tags on the cage's bamboo rods reflected the fluorescent lights above. Hundreds of names could just be made out on the tags' worn surfaces.

Inside, an Air Force ROTC cadet sat quietly, watching passersby. As he shifted positions, the tags jingled.

The cage, located in the K-State Union courtyard, is a part of the Air Force ROTC and Arnold Air Society activities for POW/MIA week and Veterans Day. The Vietnam Veterans Association No. 344 from Junction City made the cage.

It was set up at about 11 a.m. on Wednesday, and the cage will be occupied for 24 hours by AFROTC cadets. At least two cadets will be present at all times.

One will be in the cage, and the other will be outside to answer any questions or change shifts with the cadet in the cage.

This is the third year the cage has been set up in the Union. Brian Grelk, cadet corps commander of AFROTC and senior in nuclear engineering, helped bring the cage to K-State.

Grelk said the main purpose of the cage was to bring awareness to the POW/MIA issue.

"There are still people who are unaccounted for, and the public needs to be aware of that," Grelk said.

Kristi Brown, support squadron commander in AFROTC and senior in journalism and mass communications, said the cage is symbolic of the time prisoners of war spent in captivity.

"It's symbolic of, not exactly what they went through, but as close as we can get," she said. "This cage is at least twice the size of what many of the prisoners probably stayed in."

The cage is roughly 4 by 2-1/2 feet and stands about 3 feet tall. Cadets spend an hour or more in this somewhat cramped area.

"It's uncomfortable. You think it sucks, but then you realize that there were people that stayed in one for years," Grelk said.

Brown said the time she spent in the cage gave her a lot of time to think about what POWs faced.

"It gives you time to think," she said. "It's a great reflection time and makes me consider the kind of commitment that I'm making. I realize how lucky I am to know that I can get up and walk out of here, unlike the POWs."

At the table near the cage, POW/MIA T-shirts are being sold to help raise money for the William Grimm scholarship fund.

Grimm was a K-State student who was killed in action in the Persian Gulf War, Grelk said. The scholarship will go to an AFROTC cadet to pay for books.

Gwyn Kesler, AFROTC finance officer and graduate student in political science, was another cadet who sat in the cage.

"It's pretty comfortable here (in this cage. They didn't have anything but their government and their country," Kesler said.

Farrell construction necessary inconvenience for students, faculty

TERRY SCRUTON
Collegian

By spring 1996, Farrell Library will be twice its current size. But there will be a lot of work, and a lot of inconvenience, between now and then.

"There will be a little discomfort for everyone," Patrick Schaub, an architect from Brent Bowman and Associates, said.

Schaub was one of several architects on hand Wednesday in the K-State Union courtyard to discuss the renovation.

Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean of libraries, said the transition will be unpleasant for a while.

"We'll all have to work together to get through the construction period," McCulloh said.

Outside the library, the only significant change will be that the Art Building, west of Farrell, will be torn down. Schaub said the art department will be relocated in Willard Hall.

Other than that, Schaub said, the outside inconveniences will be minor.

"The parking lot behind Holton Hall will be retained," Schaub said. "And there will be limited access to Mid-Campus Drive."

Inside the library, study space will suffer the most during the transition period, McCulloh said. There will be other changes within the library as well.

"The first floor will change only slightly," Schaub said. "We're going to move as much of the technical staff as possible to other buildings. We also may have to compress the stacks down to three or four floors."

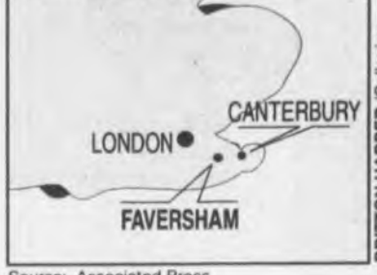
These inconveniences will only be temporary, and the payoff will be well worth it, McCulloh said.

"Once we're done, there will be a lot more study space and conference space," McCulloh said. "The library will be much easier to use. There will be easy access to services."

Schaub said the new addition will increase the space of Farrell to 153,000 square feet — double its present size.

"It's big, really big," said Jeff Terrell, another architect at the Union on Wednesday.

Terrell said one of the goals of the project is to fix one of the biggest problems people have with Farrell, which is inconvenience.



"The fundamental problem with the building today is that people never know where to be or where the books are," Terrell said. "We're trying to make circulation patterns within the building legible."

AMERICAN TOURISTS DIE IN BUS CRASH

A bus carrying American tourists to Cantebury Cathedral careened off a rain-slick highway Wednesday, near Faversham, killing 10 people and injuring more than 30 when it plunged down an embankment.

The coach, carrying 46 people, clipped the back of a van on a M2 highway in Kent county in southeastern England, police said. It spun around, plunged through a crash barrier and landed on its side 20 feet down the embankment.

Dismembered man aquitted of rape

MANASSAS, Va. (AP) — John Bobbitt, whose wife cut off his penis in retaliation for alleged sexual abuse, was acquitted Wednesday of raping her. The jury rejected the argument that she struck out at the very thing that harmed her.

Bobbitt's wife, Lorena, will be tried on Nov. 29 on a malicious-wounding charge. She faces up to 20 years in prison, as her husband had on a charge of marital sexual assault.

The jury of nine women and three men deliberated about four hours before returning the verdict.

Bobbitt, 26, jumped from his chair and hugged his lawyer, Gregory Murphy, then buried his face in Murphy's shoulder as Bobbitt's aunt shouted, "Oh, Lord, thank you!"

Lorena Bobbitt, 24, wasn't in court.

In closing arguments, the prosecution and defense focused on inconsistencies in the couple's stories of what happened the night of June 23.

"Why did she cut his penis off?" prosecutor Paul B. Ebert said. "Something happened, and I submit to you something sexual happened that offended her and drove her over the edge."

She struck out at the very thing that harmed her, and severed it, Ebert said.

Ex-Marine accused of murdering family

HUTCHINSON (AP) — The man accused of killing a Reno County family of four and burning down their house was dishonorably discharged from the U.S. Marine Corps in 1990 after being found guilty on drug charges.

Paul Kiser, 23, was found guilty in military court of distributing LSD, two counts of possessing and one count of using methamphetamines and one count each of using, distributing and possessing cocaine, said Staff Sgt. Charles Luedke from Marine Corps headquarters in Washington.

Kiser joined the Marines in 1988 and was arrested in the spring of 1990 while serving as a helicopter mechanic at the Marine Corps Air Station-Tustin in Santa Ana, Calif.The offenses for which Kiser was court-martialed occurred in March and April of that year, Luedke said to the Wichita Eagle.

The court demoted Kiser from lance corporal to private, gave him a bad-conduct discharge, sentenced him to one year confinement and ordered him to forfeit all pay and allowances.

Autumn rains cause Indian mudslides

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Heavy autumn rains touched off landslides and washed away mud huts, killing at least 20 people and injuring hundreds in southern India, news reports said Wednesday.

Most of the deaths in Tamil Nadu occurred Tuesday and Wednesday when the mud and brick walls of huts collapsed on the people inside, the Press Trust of India news agency said.

At least nine people were killed when a huge mound of earth, loosened by rains, crashed on a hut in Chinnaparai village on Tuesday, United News of India said. Three women and two children were among those killed.

The unusually heavy rains have left more than 5,000 people homeless. Downpours also flooded highways in many places, preventing rescue teams from reaching several villages.

Fitzwater praises Clinton, knocks Perot

WICHITA (AP) — Former White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater had words of praise for President Clinton and criticism for Texas billionaire Ross Perot, who does not have the country's long-term interests in mind, he said.

Despite his Republican ties, Fitzwater praised Clinton's handling of his election campaign, the health-care initiative and debate on the North American Free Trade Agreement debate.

"I think he's doing a good job pursuing his agenda," Fitzwater said during a speech Tuesday night at Wichita State University.

Fitzwater said Perot's attacks on NAFTA and his efforts to influence government policy without holding elective office were not helping the country.

Fitzwater, 50, who grew up on a farm near Abilene and later graduated from K-State, said no matter how much he accomplishes he will always be a Kansan.

Growing up in Kansas is synonymous with a strong work ethic, honesty, integrity, understanding the value of the land, and good friends, he said.

Those values contributed to his success and are often cited as Sen. Bob Dole's strengths, Fitzwater said.

Christopher fires 2 for searching files

WASHINGTON (AP) — An angry and disappointed Secretary of State Warren Christopher fired two low-ranking officials — both Democratic activists — Wednesday for searching the files of 160 Bush administration appointees.

The two are Mark Schulhof, a staff assistant in the State Department public affairs office, and Joseph Tarver, a former director of the White House liaison office at the department who has been working at a diplomatic training facility since September.

Christopher acted on the basis of a report he received Monday night from State Department Inspector General Sherman Funk, who had been investigating the case since last September, when the file searches were first disclosed by the Washington Post.

The Justice Department will now decide whether the Schulhof and Tarver should be subject to criminal prosecution.

Based on Funk's briefing, Christopher immediately lost confidence in the two employees and ordered that they be dismissed, Mike McCurry, Christopher's representative, said.

"I'd describe the secretary in the wake of this briefing as being both angry and disappointed," McCurry said. "He certainly didn't show any hesitancy in his determination to act."

Government needs leaders

House speaker says officials need guts, courage

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

Leadership opportunities abound in Kansas government.

This was the crux of a speech by Kansas Speaker of the House Robert Miller, R-Wellington, who discussed the variety of leadership positions in Kansas as part of Blue Key Leadership Week on Wednesday.

"There is a real opportunity for people to get involved and not disrupt the upward mobility in their jobs," Miller said.

The 90-day state Legislature allows members to pursue other careers while remaining part of the government. Miller is a farmer in Sumner County during the rest of the year.

State government isn't the only place for leaders, he said.

"There is a big need for people to get involved as candidates in all levels of government," he said.

"There is a big need for people to get involved as candidates in all levels of government."

ROBERT MILLER
KANSAS SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE

Miller said there is a lack of people willing to run for office. He said he blames the decline in office seekers on people who think they aren't qualified enough to run for office. However, he pointed out that not all politicians come from large cities or have a background in political science.

"It takes the kind of leadership and people that know what is going on and that can set the record straight," he said.

The public's growing distrust of government, and the adoption of what Miller called a Rush Limbaugh perspective on life and government, has lead to single-issue candidates and voters, Miller said. The issues range from abortion to gun control, but Miller said the single-issue trend and the number of candidates elected on them is growing.

"The only way we can stop that trend that is developing is to set the record straight," he said.

In recent state history, Miller said both former governors John Carlin and Mike Hayden were defeated in the 1990 election by people focusing only on the issue of property tax. However, Miller said Carlin's 1986 constitutional amendment that changed property-tax laws and was adopted during Hayden's term actually saved tax-payers money.

"Sometimes if you have the the guts and courage to be a good leader, people aren't always going to pat you on the back," Miller said. He cited his own example of supporting liquor-by-the-drink laws when he knew his constituents would probably vote against changes.

"Nobody suspected that a 32-year-old farmer from Sumner County, Kansas, would be a leader of modernizing liquor laws," he said.

Miller's political career started while at K-State, as a member of College Republicans.

His first experience with running for office came after college when he saw a lack of leadership in his district and defeated an incumbent for the office.

During his career in politics he has served as Republican leader of the House and as chairman of various committees.

Blue Key member Jelena Jovanovic, senior in psychology, said Miller was chosen to speak during Leadership Week at the suggestion of a student.

"We think he has knowledge on a broad number of issues in Kansas that he can bring to Kansas State, and we wanted a lot of diverse speakers," Jovanovic said.

Shelli Klinkenberg, freshman in elementary education, said she attended the lecture as part of her study-skills class, but it altered her view on leadership.

"I learned that you need to go out and try for things even if you don't think you can do it," she said.

Willy Clark, played by Dwight Nesmith, explains to his nephew why he does not want to work with his former Vaudeville partner, Al Lewis, for a reunion performance during the Manhattan Civic Theatre production of Neil Simon's "The Sunshine Boys." # Play deals with show-biz, aging

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

Two long-time friends will share the Manhattan Civic Theatre stage in "The Sunshine Boys," which opens Thursday night at the Wareham Opera House.

PREVIEW

The play, by Neil Simon, is the story of two old vaudeville partners who split up late in their career. At the urging of an agent nephew, they try to put their differences aside and do their old act for a TV special.

"This is a play about relationships and growing old," David Bucholtz, director, said.

The same themes of aging and friendship can be found backstage at "The Sunshine Boys."

Dwight Nesmith and Shel Edelman, two veterans of Manhattan theater, will play aging vaudevillians Willy Clark and Al Lewis in the production.

Nesmith and Edelman have become icons of the Manhattan arts community.

Nesmith, a retired K-State professor, founded Manhattan Civic Theatre in the spring of 1965 and has been involved with every facet of the organization since then.

MCT offered Edelman his first creative outlet in theater.

"Before MCT my only theater experience was being friends with (K-State theater professor) Dr. Norman Fedder," he said.

THEATER INFO

- "The Sunshine Boys" will be performed at the Wareham Opera House at 410 Poyntz.
- Showtimes are 8 p.m. today through Nov. 13 and 2 p.m. Nov. 14.
- Call 537-8265 for more information.

Edelman said he participated in his first MCT production in 1972.

"I was 40 years old, and Dwight (Nesmith) pulled me out of the house to play a minor part in a play.

"I loved it, and continued, and eventually shifted into leads," he said.

Since then, Edelman has been in MCT and other regional productions of "Fiddler on the Roof" and "Man for all Seasons."

He's even directed Nesmith in an earlier production of "The Sunshine Boys."

"Dwight and I agreed that if MCT ever did 'The Sunshine Boys' again, we would do it together," Edelman said.

"This time I got a good director," Nesmith said jokingly.

Bucholtz said he has participated in MCT productions for eight years, and this play looks to be one of his more technically challenging.

"We will have a unusually large crew in order to facilitate the play's several quick scenery changes," he said.

Kansas groups seek health-care reform

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Concerned that an insurance industry TV advertising campaign may be having a negative effect, eight Kansas associations announced on Wednesday the formation of a state coalition to promote health-care reform at the grassroots level.

The state group, patterned after a national nonpartisan coalition of 24 consumer, labor, business, health-care provider and older-citizens organizations, is expected to grow, a representative said at a news conference.

The associations do not agree with everything in President Clinton's health-care reform plan, but representatives said it represents the best vehicle for developing a national program because it would provide universal coverage for Americans, has a comprehensive package of benefits and is affordable to all.

"President Clinton's health-care reform package, while not perfect, addresses many of the problems of concern to Americans," said Nancy Kindling, public relations chair for the League of Women Voters of Kansas, one of the coalition organizations.

"The league feels that the (Clinton) plan can lead to a more humane, accessible and affordable health-care system," Kindling said.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

IRONICALLY, THE TIME TO START SAVING FOR RETIREMENT IS WHEN IT LOOKS LIKE YOU CAN LEAST AFFORD IT.

Can't afford to save for retirement? The truth is, you can't afford not to. Not when you realize that your retirement can last 20 to 30 years or more. You'll want to live at least as comfortably then as you do now. And that takes planning.

By starting to save now, you can take advantage of tax-deferral and give your money time to compound and grow. Consider this: set aside just $100 each month beginning at age 30 and you can accumulate over $154,031* by the time you reach age 65. But wait ten years and you'll have to budget $211 each month to reach the same goal.

Even if you're not counting the years to retirement, you can count on TIAA-CREF to help you build the future you deserve—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research put TIAA-CREF at the top of their list for retirement planning. Why not join them?

Call today and learn how simple it is to build a secure tomorrow when you have time and TIAA-CREF working on your side.

Tuition increase needs examined by everyone

Students beware: There is a new plan to take money from your pockets and put it directly into your professors'.

A Kansas Board of Regents' proposal could increase tuition for in-state students 27 percent in the next three years to pay for faculty salary increases. That is a 9-percent increase each year — or a total increase of $232 by the third year. It gets worse for out-of-state students, who will bear a yearly increase of 13 percent for a total of a 39-percent increase — or a $1,369 increase by the fall of 1996.

Not too many students could spare that much extra cash, even if it is for such a worthy cause as faculty pay raises. Students have a standard of living to sustain just as their professors do.

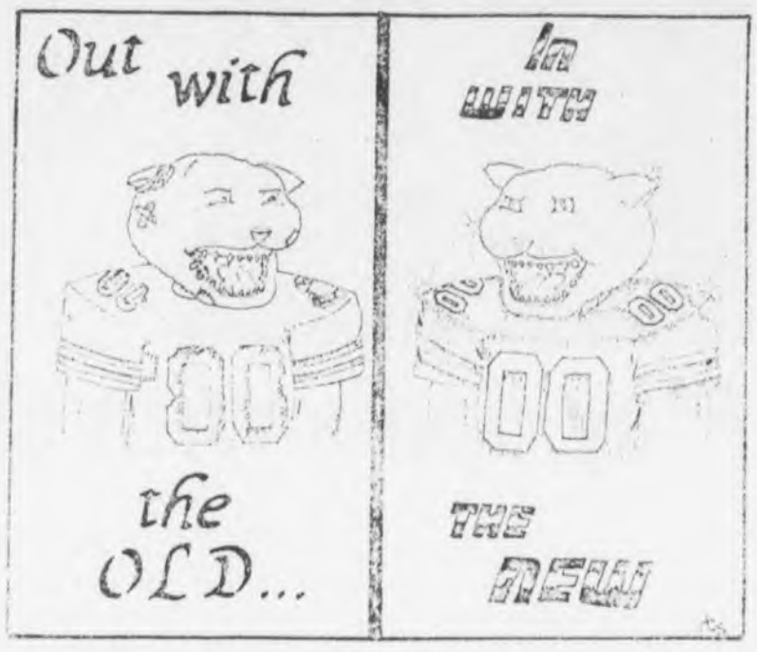
There is a possibility the money might not even make it back to K-State to increase salaries. Faculty salary increases are gravely needed.

We need them to compete with other universities for outstanding professors.

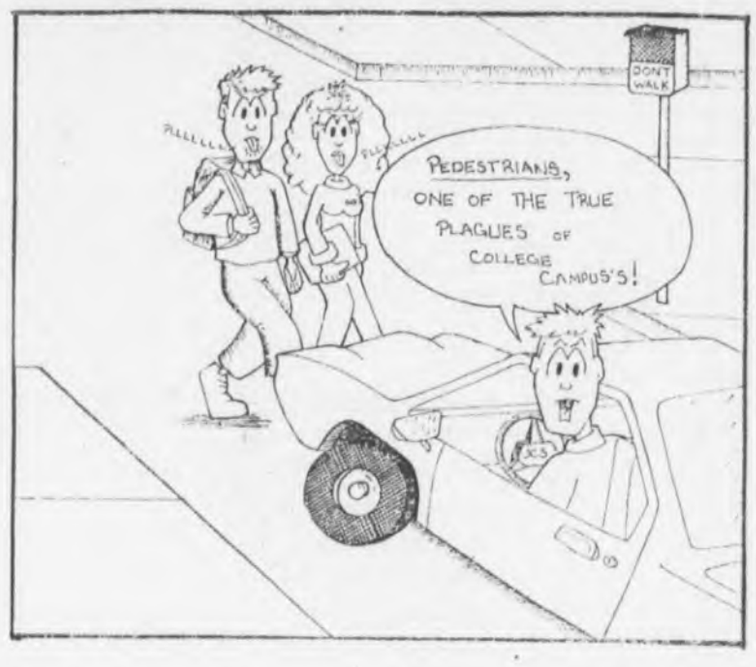
We need them to ensure quality education for students who pay for the privilege of learning at K-State.

The answer, however, is not to drain the livelihood out of students or to shift the burden to the taxpayers of Kansas again — they are as sucked dry as the students.

But the 9-percent increase is unacceptable in a system that in 1966 promised to educate Kansans and, as part of that promise, agreed to keep the outright tuition paid by the students at 25 percent compared to the state's 75 percent.



The 9-percent increase would push the students' ratio close to 40 percent.



The answer is to impose a more moderate tuition increase, which would be given to the general regents fund and not ear-marked for faculty salaries, a practice that has never been tested and is ethically questionable. This could start a dangerous precedent of students being directly responsible for faculty salaries.

The board needs to reprioritize and put faculty salaries at the top of the list. Any failure to make K-State salaries competitive then would not be due to lack of funding but to incorrect prioritizing by the regents.

Students concerned about this massive increase should contact their student senators or attend the Student Senate meeting tonight at 7 in the Union Big 8 Room and express their feelings during open period.

The Packwood Diaries: An American Tale

by Senator Bob Packwood

As "The Saga of the Packwood Diaries" drags on in the U. S. Senate, every hard-working, red-blooded, patriotic, tax-paying American must be asking themselves, "Is this a new TV soap opera?" or, "Are these guys really smoking dope on the floor of the Senate?"

Actually, the amusing thing here is not what juicy Washington tidbits might be revealed in the good senator's diary, but rather watching all the other senators wring their hands and squirm in their highly cushioned chairs over what they think might be revealed in Senator Packwood's diary.

Now that certainly is something to stop and ponder.

Think about it: "What is it that so many senators do not want made public?"

What could be so dumb, so dishonest, and so disgusting that it exceeds every dumb, dishonest, and disgusting thing they have ever done or ever will do? We already believe they have done it anyway ... whatever it is, right?

Well, I managed to get an uncensored copy of Senator Packwood's diary from a well-placed and highly confidential source (his name rhymes with Rob Role), so let's just get it all out in the open and end this ridiculous charade once and for all. The following are just a few of thousands of similar entries in:

My Really Personal and Very Disgusting Diary

August 12, 1935

Dear Diary: I was born today. Immediately began looking for political action committees and other wealthy, underhanded, double-dealing low-life to support my future senatorial campaign which, with a little luck and huge amounts of matching government funds, is projected to run into the hundreds of millions. I would make a few more cute sound bites for the press, but someone keeps shoving a naked female breast in my face. I hear the political night-life in Washington, D.C. is not much different.

BRAD SEABOURN

March 25, 1975

Dear Diary: Wow! After spending almost 40 years in politics learning how to scam the system, I have finally made it to the top of the Bigshot Pile — that's Washington insider talk for "No Rubes or Suckers Allowed." Man, what a place! Money, power — a veritable "land of milk and honey" ... which reminds me, I need to call Milk and Honey tonight and see if our threesome is still on. Important political note: President is at Camp David; my wife and kids have gone to Mother's; Ray's All-Night Sex-O-Rama and Karaoke Bar is on Third and Jefferson.

December 3, 1983

Dear Diary: Played "Grope-and-Fondle Tag" all day long during the open senate hearings on sexual harassment in the work-place — the Honorable Senator from West Virginia would grope a Senate Page, and then I would fondle one. Ha! Where in the world do they come up with these fun games? Now, if we could just find one or two female pages to play the game with ...

February 27, 1990

Dear Diary: Very productive afternoon in the Senate today. Managed to finish putting final touches on the following in a closed session of the Senate Ethics Committee:

A Packwood Poem

If a Packwood could pack wood,
If a Packwood could pack wood,
How much wood would a Packwood pack,
If a Packwood could pack wood.

Final vote was 3 "ayes," 2 "nays," and a partridge in a pear tree.

Nov. 5, 1993

Dear Diary: Not sure how much longer I can hold out against the intense pressure to go public with my diary.

Doing so, of course, would make quite clear the extent to which myself and fellow members of Congress have become addicted to sex, money, and power ... just like Hollywood movie-stars and televangelists.

Some male senators whose names are mentioned here are now — even as I write — considering a sex-change operation in order to eliminate the possibility of a "smoking gun" scenario to future charges of sexual harassment.

For obvious reasons I can not bring myself to condone "drastic cuts" of this sort in the Congressional "membership."

Will hold out as long as I can or until hush money quits coming in.

Well, there you have it. Like I said, most of it is nothing new — same old stuff you have always heard going on in our nation's capital.

So, write or call your senator today and urge them to knock off all this diary discussion and move on to some of the more important items on the Congressional agenda — like, "How much wood could a Packwood pack," assuming of course that "a Packwood could pack wood."

Obviously this diary debate brings all of that and more into serious doubt.

Heart of the problems with the volleyball team is Hagemeyer

Editor,

For the most part, K-State has had successful sports seasons for the '93 year.

These successes can be attributed to the students, dedicated players and last, but not least, the coaches.

Every person that has been part of a team knows that without the appropriate guidance, leadership and knowledge, goals can't be achieved.

Bill Snyder appears to have been the answer to K-State's plea for a winning football team.

Dana Altman has brought national recognition to the men's basketball team.

Terry Drake, the cross country coach, has also been successful by developing the team into a strong Big Eight contender.

The success in any sport is a combination of talented players and good coaching.

Perhaps, because of the successes in football, men's and women's basketball, track and field and cross country, the not-so-successful women's volleyball team at K-State has been overlooked.

As a volleyball player and fan, I'm very concerned and tired of reading in the Collegian week after week, " ... the K-State volleyball team has lost 25 straight Big Eight conference matches," "the Wildcats' last Big Eight win was in 1991," "the Cats have lost 10 straight this season, and their record is 8-21."

The coaching situation is the reason why the K-State volleyball team has had several poor seasons.

The team has the talent; it just needs guidance.

Obviously, Patti Hagemeyer isn't the right choice.

K-State has good players and recruits, but another sign of a successful program is interest shown by other potential players. Where are all the walk-on players?

I've seen many talented volleyball players at K-State through intramurals and the Manhattan Parks and Recreation city league.

I've refereed, as well as played, with students who have the ability to make big contributions to the K-State team.

When I ask these talented individuals why they don't attempt to play for K-State, the same reason is always given — Patti Hagemeyer.

This is the same reason so many talented K-State players previously left the volleyball team — Patti Hagemeyer.

It's obvious the many players that have either quit or transferred to other schools have not been pleased.

Why haven't things changed? Are people too afraid to speak up?

Being the faculty adviser for the K-State men's volleyball club, I fear my opinion will further affect the already almost non-existent relationship between the men's club team and the K-State program.

Or maybe speaking will jeopardize our club team's relationship with the athletic department.

Nevertheless, if people don't speak up, open their eyes and realize the problems with K-State volleyball, things are never going to improve.

After another unsuccessful, embarrassing season with Patti Hagemeyer coaching, maybe the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics will consider finding a coach with more to offer to K-State.

After all, things can't get any worse.

Reports should focus on attacker, not on random circumstance

Editor,

Collegian coverage of last Saturday's attack on Anderson Hall lawn was thorough: a front-page story, jumped to page 8 with elaboration into four stories and four snappy graphics.

In this in-depth analysis, your reporters emphasized how to avoid being attacked and offered numbers for escort services and self-defense classes for women.

These are excellent services, but the Collegian missed the most important element in stopping similar attacks — the attacker.

True, alertness on the part of women deters many attackers.

But the attackers, mostly men, are the population that needs adjustment. Saturday's assailant may be a faithful Collegian reader.

If so, what would his analysis be of the Collegian coverage?

Perhaps it's the responsibility of those he attacks to protect themselves, rather than what ought to be, which is that it is his responsibility not to attack people.

News coverage of attacks on women invariably focus on the women and offer helpful advice, such as "don't walk alone," "don't do this" and "certainly, don't do that."

Often-attacked populations shouldn't have to limit their activities; attackers should.

Newspapers, as media, do affect the cultural climate. Reporting of attacks should focus on the attacker, not on the relative ability of the attacked to avoid being attacked.

Failure to finance Farrell no new news

A couple years back, students were asked to vote on whether to give some millions to the library. Five million to be exact.

These millions were to come from a $9.25 fee that had existed at the time and was about to expire. Students were asked whether this special fee should be continued to support the library.

The student vote was an overwhelming 97 percent yes.

With a donation here and there, some dough kicked in by the foot-dragging State Legislature and the help of the Essential Edge campaign, we now have a plan for a brand-spanking new library.

A plan overdue, but a plan that could go awry.

When the original library was designed, it was conceived to be a gothic H-shaped building. As time went by, the funds went dry. Students in 1927 were left with an "H" with one leg.

In 1955, the library was full, and some folks decided to add space to Farrell. The master designers plopped down a square, block-shaped building next to the one-legged "H."

In 1970, the master thinkers plopped down some post-industrial, pre-post-modern-looking thing next to the one-legged "H" and the square block. This is the white, big-windowed section on the library's southeast side.

Today, there is an orange "footprint" spray-painted on the sidewalk and yard around the current crazy-quilt library. This design is supposed to make the library a cohesive whole.

This library will be finished around 1996. That's the good news.

The bad news is, however, projections state the library will be filled to capacity around 2020.

When Farrell Library was getting all the press and attention from administrators and students in 1990-91, the library administrators were busy moving books to other locations on and off campus.

When the new library is finished, those books will not be moved into the new library.

In 1987, library administrators made a first round of cuts in periodicals totaling $283,000. The faculty made a little ruckus, but not much.

Last year, the library began talking about making second and third rounds of cuts in periodicals. This time, there's a big ruckus. Partly because we are starting to cut into the meat.

Part of the reason for these cuts is inflation and, strangely enough, the fall of the Berlin Wall.

When the wall came down in Germany, the value of the American dollar went down, and the price of German and European periodicals went up. About 45 percent of our periodicals come from there; 55 percent from here.

There are more reasons for this situation:

■ Enrollment Adjustment. This is the Mother Root of all problems at K-State. In 1990-91, our Wonderful and Glorious State Legislature forgot or declined to give K-State its projected Enrollment Adjustment funds. These monies would have given the library one million smackers. That money was never received.

■ The Publishing Industry. One very gnarly reason for Farrell's periodical cancellations is the scholarly research and publishing system. Faculty are performing state-sponsored research at universities across the world. The only way a professor can get recognition for his works is to be published. Publishing leads to reputation, which leads to resumé building, which leads to tenure, which leads to security.

To get published, professors have to send their work somewhere for publication. Many times, universities have to pay a per-page rate to a journal to get a professor's work published.

Then the library has to buy a subscription to that same journal in which there is published material. A sock to the consumer, you might say.

So the state finances millions of dollars of research to go into journals for which K-State 1) has to pay to have research published and 2) has to pay to read that research.

■ The Technological Revolution. This could be our saving grace in the long run, but right now it is a major pain in the rump. The new technological revolution occurring is forcing libraries to pay for two forms of media.

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

The first is the old traditional bound-volume, paper periodical.

The second is the new tradition of computers, CD-ROM and electronic networks.

Libraries are finding themselves in the impossible predicament of having to buy the old stuff, while at the same time having to find money to prepare for the new stuff.

Add to all this mess the fact that the library only gets about 3 percent of K-State's total budget and has been treated like a the euphemistic stepchild since its conception, and you get Farrell Library.

Some of the problems with our library may be partially solved by the same technology revolution that is causing problems.

If Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock is the forward-thinking person I perceive him to be, there will be technology in the bigger library that will eliminate the need to ever again physically expand the library.

But at the same time, we are beginning to scoop the meat out of our periodical stew.

Our acquisitions and holdings are starting to feel a bigger hurt.

And though we are soon to have a comely, new library twice the size of the current one, what will be in it?

Before the proposed expansion, we were ranked last in the Big Eight. Got news for you, folks: It will still be ranked last in the Big Eight unless we get our act together.

It is important for the administration, the Board of Regents, the state legislature and good old students to roll up the sleeves and work on a way to ensure that our library will not only be a cohesive, pretty library, but a library that is fully financed and houses good books and adequate amounts of research materials.

It is sad that the library is dilapidated. It is sad that the library must cut periodicals.

It is also sad that it is nothing new.

No one at K-State prior to the Wefald administration and, more importantly, the students of the past four years, ever gave Farrell Library the attention it desperately deserved.

But I hope and pray we have expanded Farrell Library with an eye to the future instead of a failure to learn from the past.

"WE ARE BEGINNING TO SCOOP THE MEAT OUT OF OUR PERIODICAL STEW."

THE HISTORY OF FARRELL LIBRARY

- 1927 — Construction is deemed complete for the new Farrell Library, though it is missing a wing because of loss of funds.
- 1955 — A block-shaped addition is plopped down next to the original incomplete library.
- 1970 — Another addition is completed that is yet another departure from the original design.
- 1987 — A study of library space states there are 750 seats for students in Farrell Library. Despite years of neglect by everyone from students to the Kansas Board of Regents, the regents state there should be "several thousand" seats for students in the library. About 200,000 books are moved to Nichols Hall for storage.
- 1989 — More than 1,600 periodical titles are cut, totaling $283,000.
- 1990 — Students organize protests to grab headlines for the library. The Board of Regents authorizes a consulting study. The study recommends the construction of 153,00 square feet and 2,000 more seats.
- 1991 — Students vote on whether to support Farrell Library with $5 million in student fees. The vote is an overwhelming 97 percent 'yes.' But, students say, if the state and the school don't kick in some cash, the money will go elsewhere.
- 1992 — About 200,000 more volumes are moved out of the library, and library administrators decide it's time to cut another $350,000 worth of periodicals. Gov. Joan Finney recommends that $18 million from state windfall money should go to the expansion of Farrell Library. Some legislators raise a ruckus and say the money should go to a comprehensive school finance plan. the governor's recommendation passes, and Finney signs it July 1.
- 1993 — the ceremonial groundbreaking formally announces the beginning of the new construction.
- 1996 — Construction should be finished on the new, improved Farrell Library. Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, says the library will be full again in the year 2020.

AL MVP ANNOUNCED

Frank Thomas, the Chicago White Sox first baseman, became the eighth unanimous pick since the American League MVP award was first given in 1931.

"I was really shocked I got all 28 votes," he said. "I was like, 'Wow!' There was no better way to win it."

Thomas hit .317, was second in the majors with 128 RBIs and set a club record with 41 homers.

Intramurals for fun and competition

Now in their third week of play, the teams in the coed intramural volleyball league are stepping up in intensity and level of play for a variety of reasons.

While some of the players are playing for the exercise, others pursue loftier achievements.

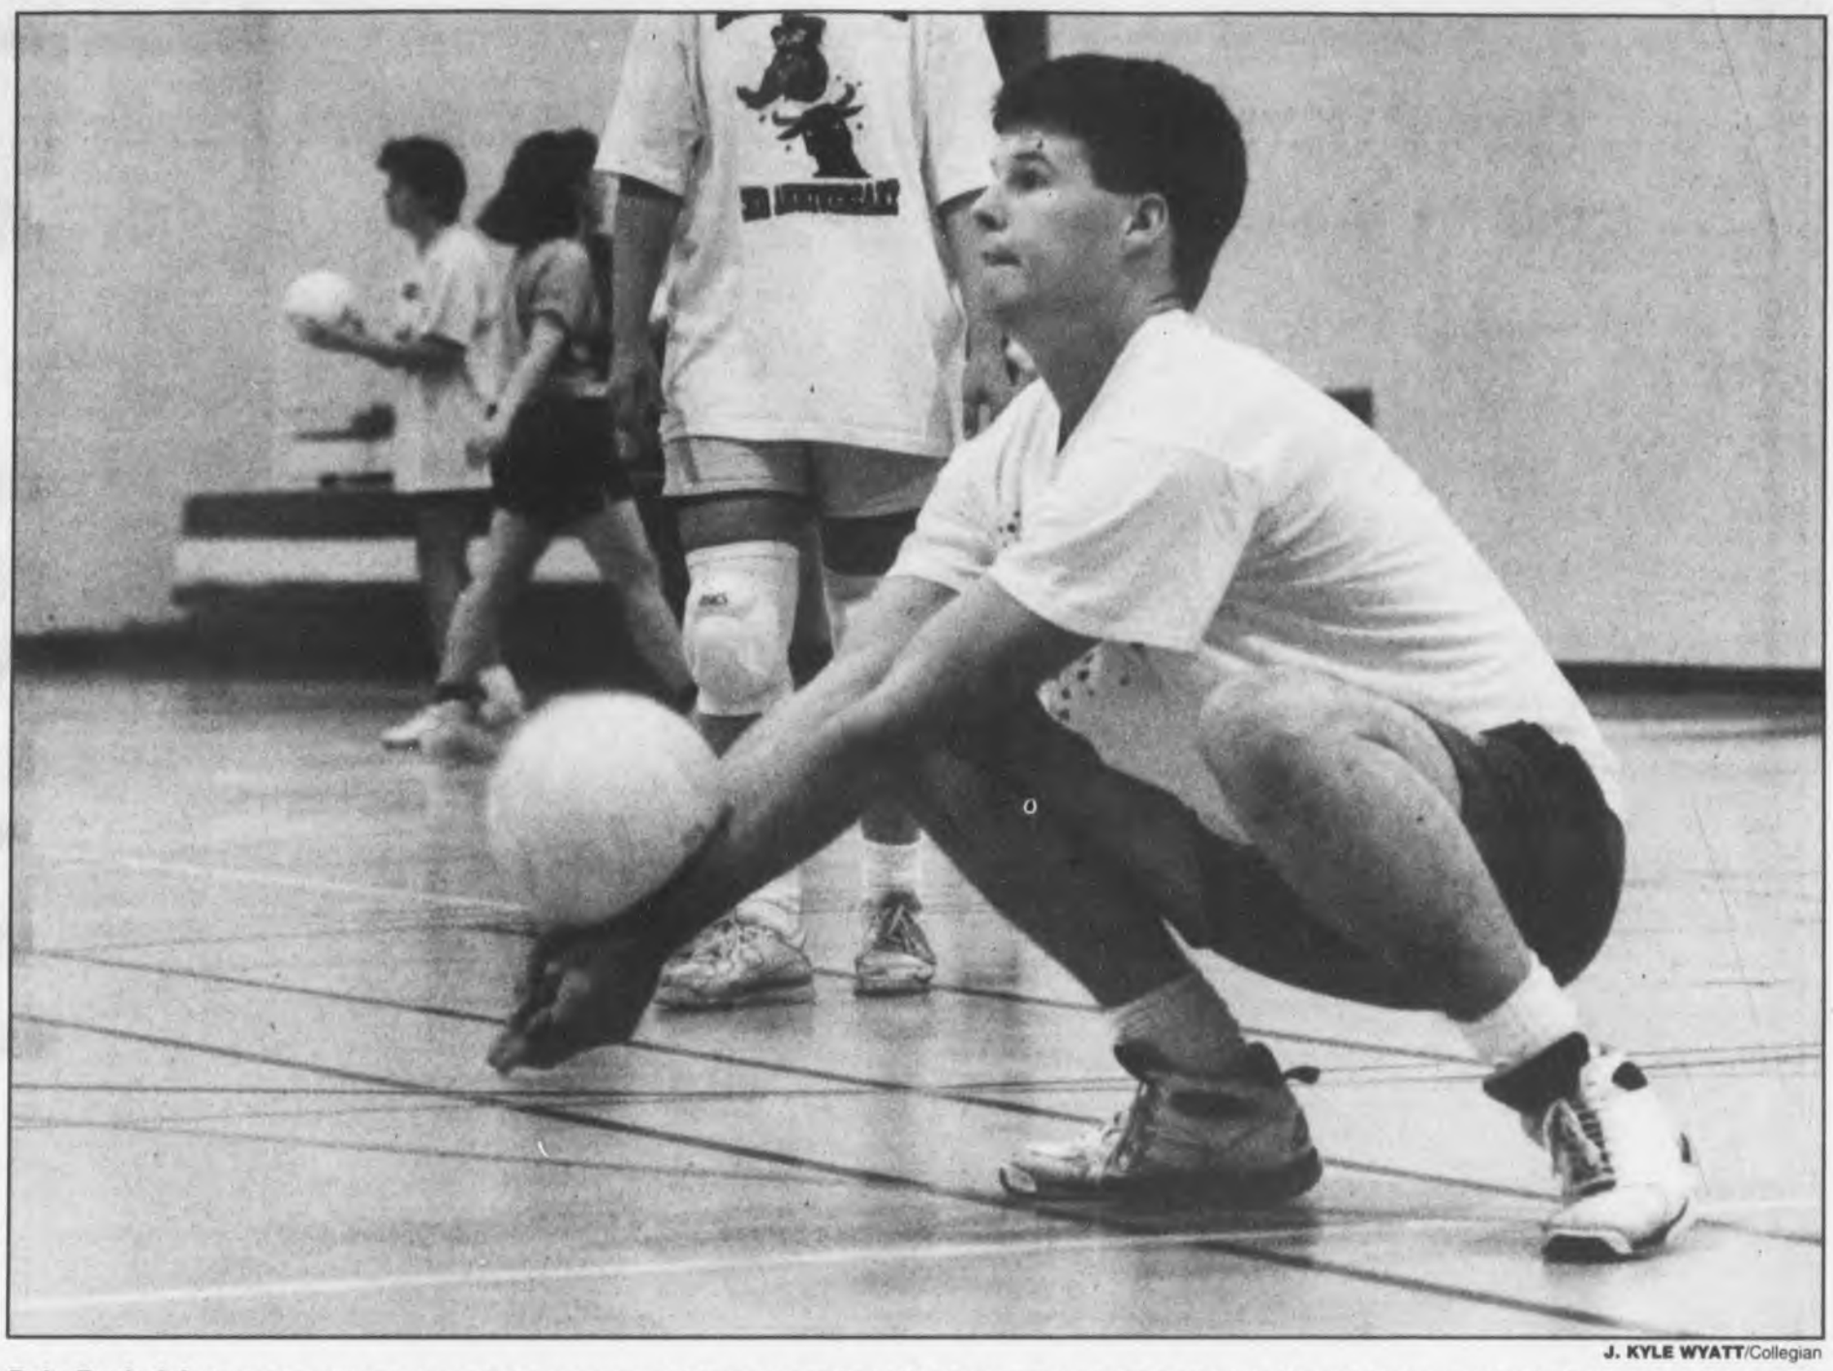
Mike Armour, freshman in business, said the major reason he is playing for his dorm floor's team, Moore 6, is for fun.

"Mainly, we just play for fun," Armour said. "It makes the week go faster.

"At the beginning, the teams hadn't played in a while, but now, they're all getting back into it. It's getting harder as it goes along."

A player for the Twenty Something team, Jacki Ibbetson, junior in kinesiology, said one of the reasons for the team's lackluster play at the beginning of the season was unfamiliarity.

"It's hard at first when you put a team together because you've never played together before," Ibbetson said. "A lot of people have put together really good teams, though."



Gail Reno, freshman in elementary education, and member of the Moore 6 team, said she has seen tougher competition before.

"This isn't anything compared to how it was in high school," Reno said. "Compared to high school, people here don't take it very serious at all."

Reno and teammate Erica Duncan, freshman in biology, said they want to practice up on their skills in the intramural league with the hopes of getting good enough to play for K-State.

"Gail and I are going to walk on for the school team," Duncan said. "We just practice here at the rec before or after our games, but the games are for fun."

Fun indeed. The Moore 6 team has gone undefeated. Wednesday night, they came from behind to beat the Twenty Something team 2-1.

Dallas inks Kosar for insurance

ASSOCIATED PRESS

IRVING, Texas — Jimmy Johnson got one of his "Miami boys" as insurance for another Dallas Cowboys' Super Bowl run, signing Bernie Kosar to a one-year deal Wednesday as a backup to injured Troy Aikman.

Kosar, who was cut unexpectedly on Monday by the Cleveland Browns, made it clear he's not after Aikman's job and just wants a chance at a Super Bowl ring. He led the Browns to the AFC title game three times, only to lose three times.

Miami, Kansas City and Philadelphia tried to woo Kosar, but his loyalty to his old college coach, Johnson, was too strong.

"Loyalty means a lot to me," Kosar said. "They showed a lot of confidence and trust in me. I don't intend to let anybody down."

The Cowboys signed Kosar to a one-year deal in the $500,000 range.

"We jumped at a chance to get someone the quality of Bernie," Cowboy owner Jerry Jones said. "To have him on this team is a tremendous luxury."

Fans needed to improve bowl chances

K-State football players will tell any fan how badly they want to go to a bowl game.

However, judging from the attendance at the last home game against Oklahoma, I question how bad the fans want it.

The attendance of 33,000 was 11,000 short of capacity at possibly the biggest game in the history of K-State football.

Cold weather must have been the reason for not watching the best K-State football team in decades.

Aside from the student section, the message sent to the players was K-State fans only want to watch their team if the weather is good. The same message was also sent to bowl representatives who all watched the game on film and in the press box.

"K-State fans travel well," Athletic Director Max Urick said. "We couldn't get 33,000 tickets to a bowl game if we wanted to."

Bowl representatives from the Copper Bowl, the Aloha Bowl, the Cotton Bowl, the Fiesta Bowl and the John Hancock Bowl all said one of the most important factors in selecting a team is fan support.

WESS HUDELSON

"One thing I look for in a team is their ability to bring fans and boosters to our area," Marcia Cherner, executive director of Aloha Bowl Charities, said.

K-State fans don't travel well to their own stadium. What would inspire them to travel half-way across the country to a bowl game?

The entire bowl system is based on revenue. If the fans don't come and spend their money, then the games cannot exist.

This is not breaking news to fans in Nebraska who haven't left an empty seat in Memorial Stadium since 1962. It gets cold in Nebraska, too.

The Aloha Bowl and the Copper Bowl are locked into contracts with the Big Eight, but should there be a tie, the decision would then totally be left to the bowl representatives.

By leaving empty seats at home games, K-State fans are making that decision easy.

The expectations of the fans in the stands, especially the student section, needs vast improvement.

Four years ago Bill Snyder came to K-State and broke a 30-game winless streak with a 20-17 victory over North Texas, and the goal posts came down. The Wildcats were 1-10 that season.

Last season the Cats beat Iowa State, a 4-7 team, and the goal posts came down again.

This season the Wildcat fans have destroyed two sets of goal posts after the Kansas and Oklahoma games.

Snyder has said on several occasions he wants K-State to be good enough to where the fans no longer feel the need to tear down the goal posts after a victory.

The Wildcats are in the midst of a 12-game unbeaten streak at home, the longest in the history of the school, and the fans still act as if it is rare occurrence to win a game.

K-State has established itself as a solid football program, but the fans still insist on insulting the team by tearing down goal posts after a victory.

The time has come for the K-State fans to show some respect to the football team and Bill Snyder, and show the rest of the nation that K-State deserves recognition for its accomplishments.

COUNTDOWN TO THE BOWL GAMES

The Orange, Sugar, Cotton and Fiesta bowls (Tier I) have joined with the Atlantic Coast Conference, the Big East Conference and Notre Dame in a partnership to provide a national champion.

The commitments of the conference champions of the Big Eight to the Orange Bowl, Southeastern to the Sugar Bowl and Southwest to the Cotton Bowl leave two berths open in the four Tier I bowls. Those spots would be determined by the Bowl Poll — a combination of the Associated Press and USA Today polls.

After the Big Eight champion heads to the Orange Bowl, the second-place team qualifies for either the Sugar, Cotton, Fiesta, Gator or the John Hancock bowl. The third-place team travels to the Aloha Bowl, and the fourth-place team goes to the Copper Bowl. All states shaded in gray are also hosts to college football bowl games.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶K-STATE 2ND ON ACADEMIC TEAM

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Nebraska placed 15 players on the Big Eight Conference all-academic team, ahead of K-State's 10 selections and Missouri's nine.

The four-time selections were offensive lineman Quentin Neujahr of K-State, Michael Jadlot of Missouri, Trev Alberts and Troy Branch of Nebraska.

Picked for a third time were offensive lineman Rob Zatechka of Nebraska, defensive back Tom Byers of K-State, defensive end Marc Pedrotti of Missouri and linebacker Bryan Gorka of Oklahoma.

Zatechka and K-State placekicker Warren Claassen both received special recognition for being nominated with perfect 4.0 grade-point averages.

To qualify, an athlete must be a regular competitor with at least a 3.0 GPA, either cumulative or in the previous academic year.

▶BET MISTAKE LANDS $1.6 MILLION

ARCADIA, Calif. (AP) — A Ventura County bettor who punched out the wrong number on a national Pick 7 ticket earned a $1.6 million payoff on Breeders' Cup Day at Santa Anita.

The 51-year-old engineer, who said he did not want to be identified, invested $16 for the winning ticket.

"I liked the one and 11 horses in the sixth race (the Turf), and I liked the No. 1 in the seventh," the man said Wednesday.

"But when I punched out my ticket for the seventh, I hit one and 11 — the same numbers I had in the sixth — by mistake."

The "11" turned out to be Arcangues, the unknown French horse who won the Classic at odds of 133-1.

The $269.20 win payoff was the largest in Breeders' Cup history.

PEOPLE & PROJECTS

■ Architect from KU to join K-State

Pietro Valle, an Italian architect, will be joining the Department of Architecture on a part-time basis for the spring 1994 semester.

Valle is coming to K-State from the University of Kansas, where he is teaching design studio and theory of architecture. He is coming to K-State for several reasons, Valle said.

"I am coming to K-State because K-State has a good faculty, " Valle said. "They have a very lively policy."

He also said the architecture department emphasizes building relationships with other colleges and student participation and competition.

Valle, who is in his second year of teaching, said K-State looks at young professors more than other colleges.

"There is more promotion of young people over there."

Valle graduated from the School of Architecture in Venice, Italy, in July 1987.

In August 1987, he was awarded a Fullbright Fellowship, which allowed for graduate studies in the United States.

He received his master's in architecture at Harvard University in January 1989.

Valle has worked with Aldo Andreani, a well-known architect, in Venezia, Italy.

He had his own professional practice, where he did an independent study on urban and housing design schemes at Trieste, Italy. He also has designed offices and housing developments.

"Valle brings a remarkable range of academic and professional experience which will support his extraordinary talents as a teacher," Eugene Kreamer, head of the Department of Architecture, said.

■ Safety belt office wins award

Buckle up.

The Kansas Safety Belt Education Office has won the 1993 Organization Traffic Safety Award.

"It was a general award for our outstanding effort that we've made over the last 10 years for Kansas, in making it a safer state to live and work in," Theresa Whiteside, project manager, said.

The safety belt office's job is to educate the people of Kansas on the effectiveness of using belts and child restraints, as well as the Kansas occupant protection laws.

She said the office works with different types of agencies, including public health and extension networks across the state.

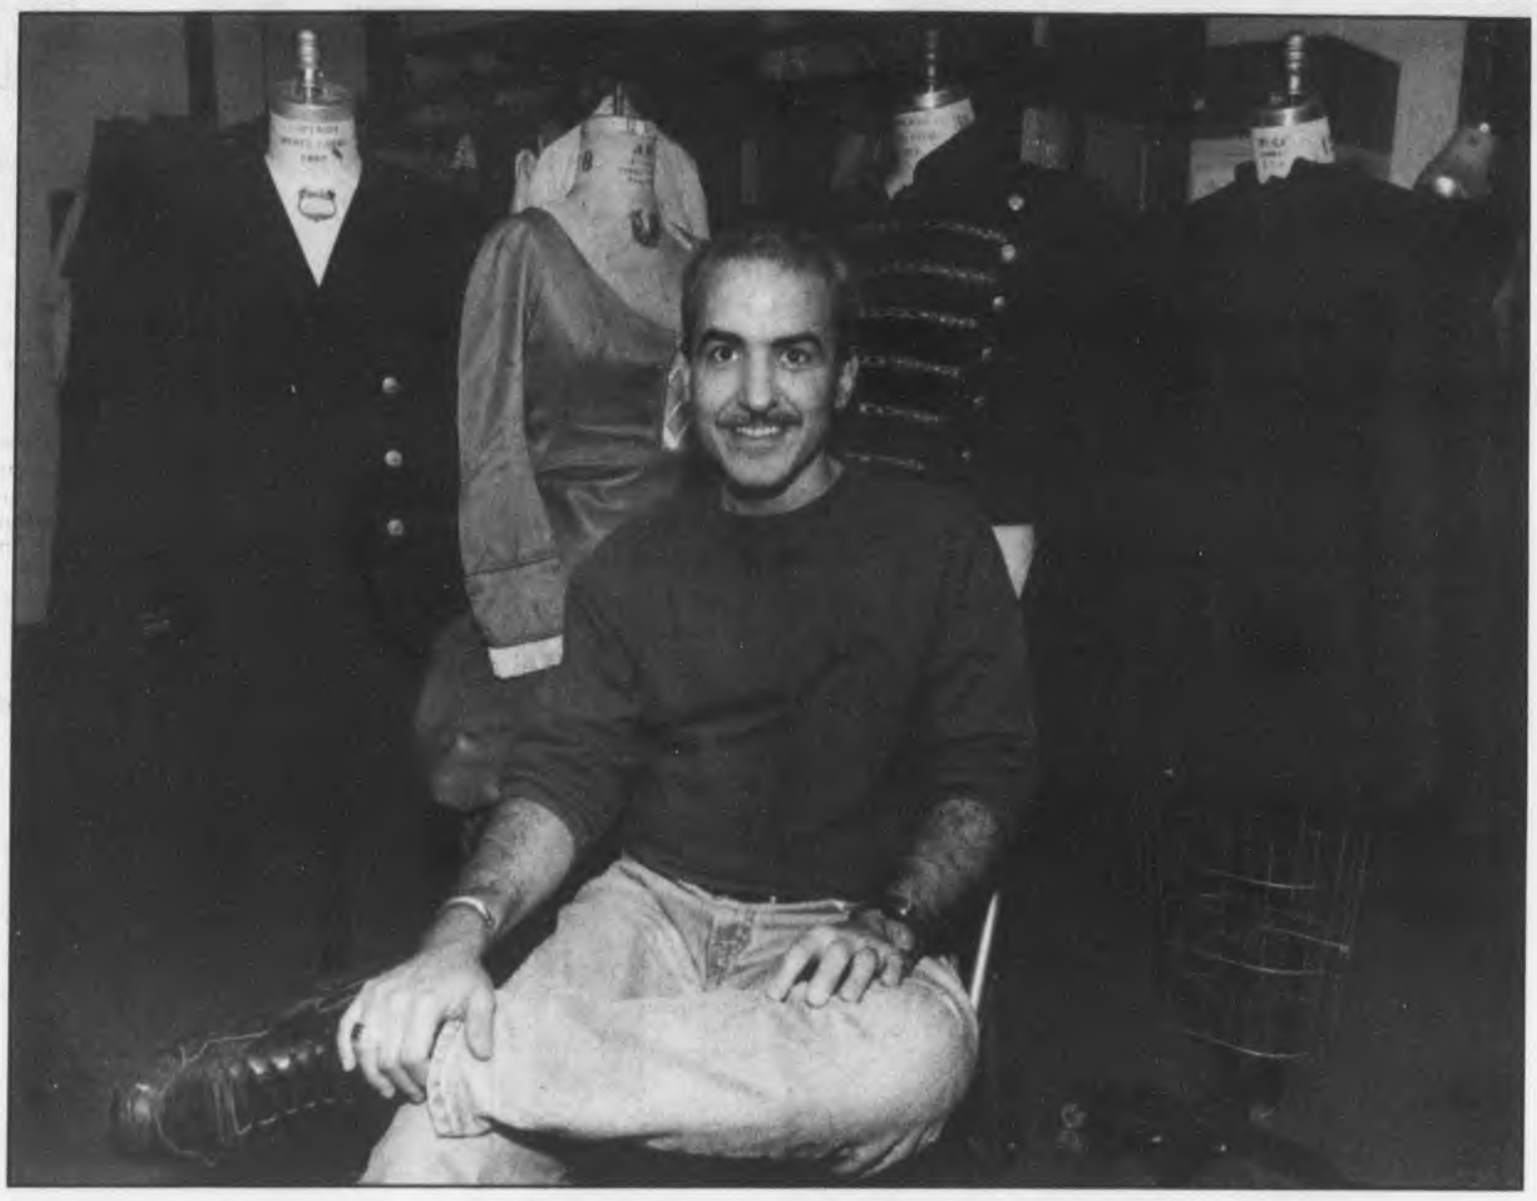
They also deal with schools and other groups that want presentations or have interest in safety belt education.

Mark Innes, office assistant, said if the office can increase the number of Kansans who use safety belts, it can bring more federal highway dollars to the state.

He said he believes the office does a good job of exposing Kansans to safety belt use.

"These people are passionate about the use of safety belts," Innes said. "They work late at night and through lunch hours."

The office doesn't only want people to know about the need to use safety belts, but also what happens if they don't use them, he said.



The office uses methods to expose seat-belt safety by distributing key chains, magnets, pencils and stickers to the public.

Whiteside said, although the office feels good about the past 10 years, the fatalities and injuries that still occur leave them feeling unsuccessful.

She said students should think about driving down Anderson Avenue without being buckled up the same as they would think of jumping out of a five-story building.

The number of national fatalities is 107 a month.

Timothy Blacker, professor of costume design and native of Manhattan, has returned to K-State after spending time working in New York City. Blacker said he enjoys teaching and having the chance to design on his own.

Manhattan native returns from New York, teaches costume design

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

It has been the subject of many a movie and novel: A small town boy returns home after making it big in the city.

For Timothy Blacker, professor in costume design, his life has been similar to that plot from the silver screen.

Blacker, a native of Manhattan, has spent the last five years in New York City as a costume designer.

During that time, he's had a chance to see, and sometimes help design, costumes for celebrities like Madonna, Marilyn Horne and Mikhail Baryishnikov.

"You'll see them on elevators," Blacker said. "Or you'll pass someone and you wonder, was that Roseanne Barr? Then you look again, and it was Roseanne."

Blacker said after a while you take it all in stride.

"It was run of the mill. It was my job. When they come in, they don't want people oohing and ahhing over them and asking for autographs," he said.

They have got to be made to feel comfortable, he said. They are already feeling vulnerable because they have to take off their clothes in front of strangers. They only ask to be treated as ordinary people.

"As far as stars go, Glenn Close was one of the best," Blacker said. "She came in with no makeup. In sweatpants. She was so natural and very cool about it all, very neat. She was terrific," he said.

After five years of living in New York, Blacker has returned to Manhattan.

In the midst of working on the tour for the play "Crazy For You," Blacker said a friend got in touch with him and told him about an open position at K-State for a costume design professor. Blacker said he decided it was a good time to try his hand at teaching.

"It was a great opportunity to check out teaching. I'd been an associate designer for a while and hadn't had the opportunity to do my own design work, and I was looking forward to designing again," Blacker said.

"Teaching and designing are what really drew me back. I've been so pleased. I love teaching. It's really the students. I have some really great students, and they make it all worthwhile."

Blacker is no stranger to K-State. He graduated from K-State in 1985 with a bachelor of science degree in theater. He went on to attend the University of Illinois where he received his master's degree in costume design.

His big break into the costume design world came when he was working with the Santa Fe Opera during graduate school.

"I was in the Santa Fe Opera in the summer at graduate school," Blacker said. "I worked with a draper from the Barbara Matera costume shop on one of the productions who was impressed with my work and helped me get a position at Materas. I was hired as a cutter. I worked making and cutting patterns."

Blacker said he was thrilled to work at the Barbara Matera Ltd. costume shop because it is one of the best known and most respected in New York.

"Matera's is very reputable. Designers know they've made it if they get there," he said.

Blacker said he was a little awestruck about working at Matera's.

"I'd gotten into this famous costume shop and was working with all these top designers. I was wondering, how do I compare to everyone else?" he said.

For about a year and a half, Blacker was a cutter at Matera's. Costume design is not all glamour and glitz, he said.

"It's important to have a very realistic overview of what to expect when you get out of here. It's labor-intensive work," Blacker said.

"In theater, it seems like there is no time to do the work. You're working late nights and not eating. You lose sight of what you're doing and need to remind yourself that it's not brain surgery. It forces you to be creative under deadline, and you can't always be creative under the clock."

Blacker said many don't fully understand what goes into costume design.

"I hope that they think about all the things that go into what that person wears at a particular moment on stage. It's not just putting pretty clothes on pretty people," he said.

Making it in the design field takes drive and determination, Blacker said.

"You've got have to have nerve, and you've got to have a good attitude. Attitude means everything," he said.

Blacker also said building up any skills that one has is important in getting a job.

"You don't walk into these great jobs being a costume designer. I studied cutting, dyeing. I became good in the workroom. You need to decide what skill it is you enjoy doing and then hone in on that," he said.

Blacker was promoted from the workroom to become purchasing manager for the costume shop. He coordinated all purchasing and outside services for making the costumes and collaborated with other designers on fabric selection for Materas.

Blacker said his time spent working with Matera's was a good experience.

"To be able to work under Barbara was great. I really learned what the ultimate level in costume design was when I worked with her," he said.

However, Blacker said he reached a point when he was ready to move on. He left Barbara Matera Ltd. and started freelancing.

Before coming back to K-State, Blacker became assistant designer for William Ivey Long, a well-known costume designer. As an assistant designer for Long, Blacker was involved in the costume design for "Guys and Dolls," "Crazy for You" and "Face Value."

Blacker intends to remain at K-State through next semester. He said he misses New York but is glad for the break from the hectic pace of the city.

"I miss the city. You can get whatever you want whenever you want. There are no services that you cannot have there. It's hard to give that up. With New York, it's usually a love/hate thing," he said.

"I think they have a bad rep, the New Yorkers. Living in New York is a matter of survival. Some things you do just to survive. When I first got there, I road the train every day. At first, I watched the people cram and push to get in the train, and I thought, how rude," he said.

He said he plans to return to New York, but not necessarily for good.

"I see older people on subways and trains schlepping bags of groceries," he said. "It's not the place for them. I'd like a garden, a car, a pet, and those are luxuries in New York."

Military members work, take classes through K-State

LORI ARMER
Collegian

The K-State Division of Continuing Education offers some military members the option to finish their education with classes that fit their busy schedules.

K-State offers traditional classes on campus and classes at Ft. Riley. The classes are open to civilians, military members and dependents.

The Ft. Riley classes are offered at the main post and at Custer Hill. They are mostly late-afternoon and night courses, Joan Colahan, Ft. Riley enrollment coordinator, said.

"Military members have difficulty in the ability to take classes when they are offered, but evening classes help that," John Allard, academic outreach coordinator for K-State at Ft. Riley, said.

First Lt. Joel Miller, is a student who enrolled in 13 hours of the K-State master's degree program last spring. At the same time, Miller was in the National Guard.

"When you're in the National Guard, you devote one weekend a month and two weeks during the summer to the military," Miller said.

"When your have drills starting on Friday night until 6 or 7 on Sunday evening, you don't want to return home to study. All you want to do is go to bed."

Planning their schedules is the key for the military students, Miller said.

"You have to plan on one weekend a month being shot, so you have to look ahead on the calendar and prepare yourself for your studies," Miller said."You have to make maximum use of your time to get things done."

Although schedules may be tight for military members, the other problems they face may well be the same as any other student at K-State would, Colahan said.

"They have problems getting into classes they want just like any other students," Colahan said.

"The age of the students varies, and some civilians take classes at Ft. Riley too. The only difference is that, although they pay the same in tuition, they don't have to pay for the other expenses."

Staff Sgt. Gary Edwards is an active military member and enrolled at K-State through the Ft. Riley campus. He is taking two classes to earn a degree in education. For Edwards, the problem is not in time commitment, but location.

"The difficulty I have is going to school late at night and commuting to Ft. Riley, because I don't live there," said Edwards.

Enrolling in classes can have advantages for military members, Capt. Allen West, assistant professor of military science, said.

"Military members can re-enlist for college and receive a bonus in their specialty," he said. "However, they still have to maintain their physical fitness and three hours a day normal duty station."

There are about 67 military members taking classes at K-State and 405 military dependents enrolled on campus, according to the Office of the Registrar.

This number is smaller than the hundreds enrolled for classes available at Ft. Riley.

"We have an enrollment of between 700 and 900, on an average term, but most of these are people taking more than one class," Allard said.

"It's not the number of actual students."

Professor takes part in editing plant data

MIKE HIND
Collegian

For botany students and professors alike, the days of intensive, time-consuming research and identification of plant specimens may soon be over.

Years of documentation have resulted in the publishing of the series "Flora of North America" and a computer database system of the same name.

Ted Barkley, professor of biology and an editor for the series, said upon completion of the series all species of flora in North America will be identified, and information could be accessed through a desk-top computer.

The days of the book being the prime method of research may soon end, Barkley said.

"Unlike bound manuscripts a computer data base system can be very easily updated and revised as new discoveries are made."

Barkley said once students or professors called up the database center located at the Missouri Botanical Gardens, they would have access to information on such things as the distribution, phenology, status, morphism and habitat of plants native to North America.

There are more than 200 people across North America who were active in the compilation of data for the series, and Barkley was one of five people who proofread all the data before it was finalized, he said.

"There is an editorial board, and within that board there is a group called the final five," Barkley said. "It is procedure for the final five to read all manuscripts submitted for regional and botanical correctness."

The technology for the computer system just came out in the last few years, but the great number of species has made it difficult to get all plants documented and recorded all at once, Barkley said.

"About every year one volume will come out," he said."There will be 14 volumes in all. The first and second volumes are being shipped from the bindery as we speak," Barkley said.

Jerry Weis, interim director and associate professor of the division of biology, said Barkley was chosen to edit the series because he is a proven professional in the area of plant biology.

"They obviously don't just pick anyone to edit a book of this magnitude," Weis said.

Lucille Keen, former supervisor of KSU Office Supplies, spends a little of her first day of retirement at home, in St. Marys, with her cat, Smokey. Keen retired after 21 years with the University.

Supervisor retires after 2 decades

TORI NIEHOFF
Collegian

The supervisor of KSU Office Supplies retired Tuesday, after 21 years of service.

Lucille Keen started working for the Union Bookstore in 1972. She said she has watched the University and Union go through many changes over her years at K-State.

"I stayed with Office Supplies because I liked what I was doing. Each year demands grew, and I found it a challenge to meet them and change with the addition of new supplies," Keen said.

She said the biggest change has taken place during the last year, when KSU Office Supplies took over computer supplies. Computer and Network Services created this demand and required the additional supplies.

"I don't even have a computer in my office, so it was different to learn about all the supplies needed," she said.

The supplies office is located on the lower level of the Union Bookstore in the back.

Any office that has a state contract can purchase supplies from this office. This includes SGA-funded and University-funded departments.

Keen mainly dealt with students who worked for the departments, department secretaries, and occasionally department heads.

"Usually secretaries make a supply list, and they have a student aide pick the supplies up," she said.

Keen not only works with students from other departments, but also has students working for her.

Many years ago, there was not enough business, so Keen and only one student helper made all the deliveries and did all the work.

The office has expanded since then by hiring three students. Two students make deliveries, and one student assists customers and does some paperwork.

"I've had good luck with students working here over the years. A lot of the students have worked all four years that they attended college.

"I have gotten attached to several students and hate to see them leave," Keen said.

Keen said she has rarely met someone that was not easy to get along with or not nice.

"Most of the people I meet, whether it be students or faculty, have been a pleasure to work with," she said.

People around Keen wouldn't be so nice if she weren't so sweet to everyone, Sue Damkroger, a part-time clerk, said.

After retirement, Keen plans to spend her first couple of months watching her two granddaughters during their upcoming basketball seasons.

She said she doesn't have any other definite plans for the future.

Agricultural involvement has international history

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

K-State is working to eliminate world poverty through agriculture.

The University's involvement in international agriculture dates back almost 40 years, said Jim Jorns, director of K-State's international agriculture program.

"In 1956 the U.S. State Department called on U.S. universities to help develop land-grant type institutions in foreign countries," Jorns said.

At that time the world economy was in poor shape and poverty in rural areas was particularly bad, Jorns said. Concern about the plight of the poor and the desire to combat the appeal of the communist ideology caused the U.S. government to initiate international agricultural development activities, he said.

"The government wanted to get at the root cause of poverty," Jorns said.

The first country K-State worked with was India. From 1956 to 1970 K-State professors from various disciplines traveled to India to help improve academic institutions there, Jorns said.

Several Indian students came to K-State, received advanced degrees and returned to their country to work at the universities K-State professors helped develop, Jorns said.

K-State was involved in similar programs, from 1964 to 1990, in Nigeria, Botswana and the Philippines, Jorns said.

"All these programs were long-term, multi-million dollar commitments by the U.S. government and K-State," Jorns said.

The project in Nigeria was successful and worthwhile, Leniel Harbers, professor of animal sciences and industry, said.

"All together we probably did some good," Harbers said. "In developing people to people relationships I can say we definitely did some good."

The university Harbers worked at became a better institution, he said. The Nigerians who were trained at K-State came back and took over.

"They are doing fairly well now," Harbers said.

Recently K-State started working in Nicaragua, a country in the midst of converting from a communist economy to a capitalist system.

Arlo Biere, professor of agricultural economics, visited Nicaragua in the spring of 1993. The trip was

Lessons offer boot scootin' — minus intoxication

FRANK SERENO
Collegian

It's time to learn the boot scootin' boogie.

For the past two years, the Union Program Council has been offering country dance lessons. This semester, dance lessons have been offered twice with the current group meeting from 8-10 p.m. Monday in the Union Station.

Anyone with an interest to learn a basic swing, the two or 10-step, Cotton-eyed Joe or even the waltz can do so with the $12-a-couple, month-long sessions.

Dance instructor Doug Wood, Manhattan, said most of the 20-couple class is filled with students from K-State. Wood said a few Manhattan High School students sign up, but the K-State students get priority in enrollment.

"Last semester, we had a big waiting list of about 100 couples," Wood said.

Wood and instructor/dance partner Stephanie Turpin, Manhattan, have been teaching the course for the past year and a half.

The pair said the lessons teach standard, traditional dances as opposed to specific line dancing found elsewhere. Because of other existing programs, Wood said he prefers to teach various traditional dances commonly found in western Kansas.

Turpin added some couples have little interest in the more popular styles found in Kansas City and Wichita.

"A lot of people don't like the line dance," Turpin said.

Greta Ann Herin, senior in biochemistry, said she's glad the lessons are offered by the UPC.

"A friend of mine asked me to do it," she said. "It's a lot easier than with drunk guys in a bar."

Paul Davids, senior in horticulture, said he chose the lessons because he isn't into the bar scene. Even though the group is learning basic steps, Davids said the experience is exciting.

"It's more than what I expected," he said.

During the two-hour sessions, Turpin and Wood demonstrate a specific dance while the class watches. The couples then get an opportunity to try the moves to different types of country music.

Country dance disk jockey Brian White, senior in marketing, said the idea of the country dance lessons is really catching on.

"It's becoming more popular than people think," White said.

Riot victims aid in flood recovery

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WATHENA — It was payback time in northeast Kansas this week as West Coast residents helped rebuild homes damaged by summer flooding.

"We came here because a group of Kansans came to Los Angeles after the riots a year ago," said Bob Hunter of Montrose, Calif., who was in charge of rebuilding the flood-buckled home of Milton "Mick" Hoffman. "They helped us rebuild. We wanted to help in some way."

Twenty-one Californians and two Hawaiians have been in the area since Saturday working on Hoffman's house and another one in nearby Elwood. The group includes some members of the Telephone Pioneer Club, men who had once worked with Hoffman.

"This is wonderful," Hoffman said Monday as he watched the workers. "I haven't set any date to move back in. If I get back in by spring, it will be wonderful just to get back."

The green farm home that Hoffman sold fruit and vegetables from endured floodwaters nearly to its ceilings this summer. The water broke windows on all four walls and tossed the building on its foundation like matchsticks.

"This is a Methodist Church project," Hunter said. "We all paid our own way, and we're here. We want to get the Hoffmans back in business as soon as we can."

The workers include two

Speaker links floods with climatic changes

DANI JOHNSTON
Collegian

The sun is affecting our climate and could be the reason for the flood of 1993.

Charles Perry, with the Water Resources Division of the U.S. Geological Survey in Lawrence, spoke to about 50 people Tuesday night in Thompson Hall as part of the geology seminar series.

"Every semester, we try to get one speaker a week," Charles Oviatt, associate professor of geology, said. "This semester, it's every Tuesday at 4 p.m.

"Charles Perry is the father of one of our graduate students," he said. "A lot of his work is focused on solar energy and climate control on earth. It has to do with the relationship between the sun and the earth's climate."

Perry spoke about the connection between solar changes and changes in the climate. He showed slides of Tuttle Creek Dam and Milford Dam during the summer floods and of the erosion afterward.

"It was awesome to see that much water in Tuttle Creek Dam, and the fossils at Milford Dam were just unbelievable," Perry said. "It was a sense of history being made."

Perry said the weather jet stream created intense weather storms in the convergence zone in the Midwest.

"It created a drought in the East and flooding in the convergence zone.We had a wave where the air was descending, and day after day, we had intense thunderstorms," Perry said. "The heaviest rainfall was northeast of Manhattan."

Patterns of the 1993 and 1951 floods were different, Perry said.

"In the '93 flood, the storm just stayed there for almost two months," Perry said.

"The total volume of water from rainfall was more in '93 than in '51. There was 107,000 (cubic feet per second) on July 5, 1993, in the Blue River and only 90,000 cfs in '51.

"There were isolated areas of 18-21 inches of water in some areas," Perry said. "And 1993 became an all-time high as far as runoff.

"The idea is that flooding might be linked into solar cycles. We're having strong floods due to a warmer climate," he said.

Sun spots, dark spots on the sun linked to the sun's activity, follow an 11-year cycle, and the sun-spot cycle relates to temperature in the climate.

"Every 11 years, sun spots in the northern and southern hemisphere of the sun switch," Perry said. "During times of a lot of sun spots, the sun is putting out more energy. This may be creating our droughts and floods," Perry said.

"It seems like here in Kansas we have either one or the other. There is only one-tenth-percent total increase in energy from the sun, but it may be enough to affect the climate," Perry said. "The sun has gotten hotter in the past 30 years.

"If the sun is changing in intensity, it will affect the ocean the most. Heat from the sun penetrates the ocean floor, warming the water at the surface, and warm water creates more evaporation."

The increase in evaporation will increase rainfall.

The sun-weather connection is the theory behind Perry's research. Perry graduated from K-State in 1970 and earned his master's with an emphasis on water resources at the University of Kansas in 1977.

In 1989, he earned his doctorate. He has been working for the U.S. Geological Survey in Lawrence for 18 years.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Dear Cassandra,

You know, you really shouldn't get down about the recent loss to Iowa State. Here are 10 reasons to be happy about it.

10. Stops the senseless mutilation of innocent oranges at K-State home games.

9. The dry Arizona air is bad for Willy's mangy head.

8. "The Big Four" just doesn't sound as good.

7. Loss to ISU shifts spotlight back to the pursuit of yet another national debate title.

6. Saves reputation as "the other Kansas team."

5. A top bowl bid would result in further stadium overcrowding.

4. Bowl ... Shhhmowl!

3. Dismantled debate podiums easier to carry to Aggieville.

2. New Year's Day is always so much more enjoyable with your parents.

1. Don Ho — nuff said.

Oh, by the way, Cassandra, we like to have sex with each other's mothers. Is that wrong?

Your loyal Cat Whackers

Dear Loyal Cat Whackers,

You're right. I should've realized all of the truly wonderful aspects to losing to Iowa State. And now that I've seen the light, I can tell you quite honestly that having sex with each other's mothers is indeed wrong.

I would advise that this sort of behavior cease at once.

Dear Cassandra,

I was wondering if you could tell me what to do about my problem.

My problem is my girlfriend. She doesn't blow her nose. Instead, she makes this horrible snorting noise, which yanks all of that mucus back and down her throat.

It is so gross. Why can't she blow her nose like normal people? I'm beginning to think I'm going to have to leave her unless she can implement proper nose-blowing etiquette.

Cringing Every Time She Snorts

Dear Cringing,

Gross!

Maybe if you just handed her a tissue the next time she snorts, she'll get the hint. If not, and if you still want to salvage this relationship, I suggest you sit her down and discuss this nose etiquette you referred to. Better yet, send me a copy of the rules.

Don't buy Pig Vomit

HAROLD RING
Collegian

Pig vomit belongs in the stomachs of pigs, not released on a compact disc for the world to choke on. Pig Vomit and its self-titled release are a favorite of the infamous Howard Stern. In fact, the band is featured on Stern's radio show.

With that kind of endorsement, how could they go wrong?

Pig Vomit sings about things a sixth-grader might find funny. A mature sixth-grader would see this as the slop it is.

A list of the song titles reads like this: "Mammary Lane," "Penis Envy" and "Why Can't He Get It Up?" Just the type of stuff to make any third-grader turn red and look around for Mom.

Lyrically, the album is designed to offend even the most tasteless person. On the song "Did You Ever Wonder?" the vocalist sings, "Did you ever wonder how a dog jumps on another dog/and gets his penis right in?"

The song "Poor Old Fartin' Fool" documents the perils of first-date flatulence. Come on, anybody with money to buy this doesn't think it's funny anymore.

Musically, Pig Vomit has ripped off disco, funk, easy listening and rock artists too numerous to mention here. The band even parodies Frank Sinatra in "Mammary Lane."

This stuff would probably fly on an X-rated "Dr. Demento Show," but there aren't many markets that will support swill like this, except for Stern, of course. But then, Stern has never really done anything.

Pure and simple, this CD isn't worth the plastic it's printed on. It is hard to believe that the members of this band are going to make money from this release. No new ground has been broken with this release. Recycled trash isn't better the second time around.

Anyone can sit around and come up with offensive lyrics and then set them to someone else's music. Some people like this kind of stuff, and more power to them. You'd be better off burning your money instead of buying this CD.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Stop talking about your plans if all you're doing is stroking your ambition. Just do it and be quiet about it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Remember, your cuticles are your friends. Clean them daily and quit picking your nose.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Keep a stiff upper lip today. Your denture cream is unreliable.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Leather and lace are not interchangeable. Take the studded calfskin doilies off your grandmother's couch.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Remember, no one ever lies on their deathbeds wishing they had spent more time at the car wash.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Just for giggles and grins, don a pheasant outfit this weekend and go wiggle your backside at the Fort Riley public hunting area.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The holes in your apartment walls are due to your bad temper. Save on spackle and chill out.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If you're depressed because you wish you'd been born at some other time, just make sure you die at the right time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Don't stay in bed today. Get up, wash the sheets and attempt to walk straight. You need a break.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): It is a wise person who saves a penny a day. It is an even wiser person who swipes that penny.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Take a day to clean the matted hair out of your brushes and the shower drain. Repulsion builds character.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): That person you've been chasing is about as interested in you as a long, slow root canal.

Play not lost at KSU

BRENT DUNGAN
Collegian

It's not every day that a play comes to campus that has won a Pulitzer Prize, four Tony Awards, the Drama Desk Award, the Outer Critics Circle Award and the Drama League Award.

Simon, whose credits include "Barefoot in the Park," "Max Dugan Returns," "Brighton Beach Memoirs," "Biloxi Blues" and many more, has enjoyed tremendous success with "Lost in Yonkers."

LOST IN YONKERS
■ This Neil Simon play will be performed at 3 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said it's a big deal for this show to be coming to K-State.

"To get a touring Broadway show is not the easiest thing in the world," Martin said.

The play takes place in 1942. Two young brothers are left with their grandmother, who has a reputation for being as tough as steel. The story revolves around the boys and how they discover what a tremendous effect their grandmother has on the entire family.

There are seven main characters in the play. Jay and Arty, played by Alex P. Baack and Danny Cistone, are the two brothers left by their widowed father, Eddie, played by Stephen Singer.

The boys are brought to live with Grandma Kurnitz, played by Elaine Grollman. Uncle Louie, played by Daniel Oreskes, and Aunt Bella and Gert, played by Dee Dee Friedman and Diane Ciesla, make up the rest of the family.

Some critics of the play assumed the play was autobiographical because Simon's trilogy," Brighton Beach Memoirs," "Biloxi Blues" and "Broadway Bound," were said to be roughly based on the life of the playwright.

However, that's not what Simon said in an interview with Harry Haun for "Playbill Magazine."

▶ Bill Arck, director of alcohol and other drug education services, sits in K-State's Vietnam Memorial. The memorial was dedicated in 1989.

K-State's Vietnam Veterans Memorial means a lot of things to a lot of people.

The memorial was dedicated the day before Veterans Day, Nov. 10, 1989, Bill Arck, director of the alcohol and other drug education service, said.

"It was not only a process of physically building the memorial, but it was also a three-year period of educating the students about the Vietnam War," Arck said.

Arck has the personal experience to know the meaning the memorial has for veterans.

Arck is a veteran of the Vietnam War. He was drafted in spring 1971 and spent a year in Southeast Asia during the war.

When he was drafted, Arck was a 19-year-old sophomore at Wichita State University.

In 1969 or 1970, draft deferments were not given much anymore, he said.

"The thought of going to Canada certainly never crossed my mind," Arck said.

A lot of things were going on at the time the memorial was being built concerning both fundraising and the memorial itself.

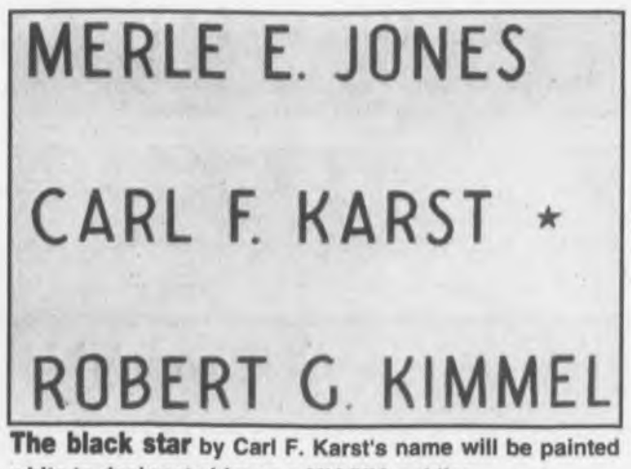
"There was some concern about building a memorial that would glorify the war, but I think we dealt with that very well," Arck said.

Recently, the remains of another Vietnam veteran from K-State were put to rest.

The name of Col. Carl Karst, U.S. Air Force, is one of 42 names listed on the K-State memorial.

The remains of Karst, who is listed on the memorial as missing, were buried with full military honors Oct. 1 at Arlington National Cemetery in Arlington, Va.

The symbol beside Karst's name, which lists him as missing in action, will be changed because his status has changed with the recovery of his remains, Arck said. The black star by his name will be painted white. At the bottom of the names a legend will be painted labeling white stars and MIA/KIA.



"I think in a sense the memorial is a very appropriate recognition of their honorable service to their country and appreciation for their lives given," Ruth Nelson, Karst's widow, said.

"It helps to know that K-State realizes and appreciates their lives and that they were of value and given in honor of their country, even though the life ended prematurely," Nelson said.

Karst disappeared Nov. 16, 1968, over South Vietnam. In 1974, he was declared presumed killed in action.

Karst's remains were turned over to American authorities in 1989. Initially his remains were misidentified. Karst was correctly identified in the summer of 1993.

A short chapel service was performed in Fort Myers Memorial Chapel at Arlington National Cemetery before his burial Oct. 1.

The black star by Carl F. Karst's name will be painted white to designate him as a MIA/KIA soldier.

Karst graduated from K-State in 1954. All three of Karst's children went to K-State, Nelson said. They were partly influenced to do this because they had heard their father speak of it, she said.

"I think one of the more important aspects is that it shows that we at K-State have not forgotten those that served in Southeast Asia," Arck said.

"The memorial was built not just for those who died, but for those that served, were injured or remain missing in action in Southeast Asia," he said.

"Unquestionably, the memorial has served as a healing process for area veterans," Arck said. "The war was probably the most demanding time in their life.

"When they are remembering the war and sorting out their feelings about the war, they often go to the memorial to sit and think about where they have been and what they have been through," he said.

John Daly, associate professor of history, teaches a class about the Vietnam War. As part of the class, Daly has Vietnam veterans come in and tell the class about their experiences. Daly has also done a lot of work on the POW/MIA issue.

"The veterans are very, very positive about it. In terms of the classes, they are pleased their efforts are being recognized," Daly said.

"The large issues of American involvement in the war are no longer obscuring the efforts of our soldiers," he said.

"I'm pleased that finally the efforts our soldiers made are being viewed without the passions of the '60s," Daly said.

David Hodgson, associate professor of clinical sciences, was in Vietnam from 1969 to 1970 as a captain in the U.S. Air Force Veterinary Corps. The corps took care of U.S. Air Force sentry dogs in Southeast Asia, livestock projects and food inspections on food for the soldiers.

"I think memorials or things of this nature serve a purpose, and for me,. that purpose is to remind me of the contributions and sacrifices of those serving their country in the military," Hodgson said.

Hodgson said he visits the memorial a couple of times a year.

"I think it is a well-designed and, to me, a meaningful memorial," he said.

Hodgson said he knew Steven Mueller, one of the veterans remembered on the memorial. They were at K-State together and saw each other when Mueller first arrived in Vietnam.

Hodgson graduated in 1968 from veterinary school and has been a faculty member at K-State for four years.

"I also think it should serve as a reminder of those non-military or civilian personnel that supported their country in various ways," Hodgson said.

CATEGORIES
To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD
Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Debate thrills NAFTA supporters

Wash.

Supporters of the agreement were buoyed by Gore's debate performance defending the pact that would eliminate tariffs and other trade barriers among the United States, Mexico and Canada over the next 15 years.

They said lawmakers' votes could be influenced by early, positive public opinion polls of reaction to the debate. A survey of 357 adults taken overnight by USA Today and CNN showed 57 percent of respondents favoring NAFTA after the debate, compared with 34 percent beforehand.

"If you're going to listen to your constituents, then you'll respond to public opinion polls," said Rep. David Dreier, R-Calif., a pact supporter.

In hopes of portraying a momentum surge following the debate, pro-NAFTA forces had Rep. Jim Bacchus, D-Fla., declare his support for the pact on television right after the broadcast. In fact, Bacchus had decided to support the agreement earlier Tuesday.

NAFTA opponents, who have said they tentatively have the 217 House votes they will need to kill the pact, said they have detected no defections caused by the debate.

"Most people, even the ones saying they are undecided, have either made up their minds already or will vote their constituents," said Rep. Dale Kildee, D-Mich., a leading NAFTA foe.

designed to help enhance the agricultural economics and agribusiness component of the national agricultural university, Biere said.

Another goal was to provide assistance to the Nicaraguan government in developing an agricultural extension program similar to the one in the United States, he said.

"This is a very poor country," Biere said. "They are really struggling right now, and their economy is stuck in neutral."

The unemployment rate is nearly 60 percent, housing conditions are poor, and population growth rate is high, Biere said.

Perot's portrayal of Mexico angers analysts

NAFTA still faces a tough fight in the U.S. Congress, where it is opposed by lawmakers who say it will increase pollution along the border and cost Americans jobs.

Businessmen and analysts who watched the debate on CNN were initially angered by Perot's portrayal of a destitute, politically oppressive Mexico.

"You know perfectly well this is not Mexico. ... He told many lies," said Jaime Sanchez Susarray, a Guadalajara-based political scientist and journalist.

"I think that Perot is taking advantage of the prejudices that already exist against Mexican people," said Gabriel Cohen, finance director for PEMSA, a Mexican pasta and pizza maker. "Most people in the states think Mexico is like Tijuana, like this is a wilderness, and a poor one at that."

However, few Mexicans could watch because most lacked access to the cable-type system that held exclusive broadcast rights, and many people questioned on the capital's streets Wednesday said they knew nothing about the debate.

In the northern industrial capital of Monterrey, Mexico's free trade haven, business leaders and newspapers lauded Gore's performance.

"The arguments and the facts presented by Gore, as opposed to Perot's populism, will reflect in more support for the accord," said Lorenzo Zambrano, president of Mexico's and Latin America's largest cement company, Cemex.

In an editorial, the Monterrey daily El Norte also said Gore won, although not by a full-on knockout.

"There's no doubt that the Texan millionaire Ross Perot could barely dodge the intellectual punches of the North American vice president," it said.

Canada was an afterthought during the debate and Canadians doubted it would change minds.

Campus focuses on recent attacks

Sexist attitudes discussed; men take responsibility

LEIGH NEVANS
Collegian

After a third woman was assaulted on K-State's campus this semester, some have suggested that men are the ones who should be changing.

The whole University needs to change its attitude, and there should be development programs for men in residence halls, fraternities and in classes, Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said.

Franklin said he would like to see K-State teach students how to change sexist behavior.

It would be great if instructors could spend a few minutes in class talking about men's behavior, fraternities could develop programs on how men should treat women and the Union Program Council could get speakers on how to change men's sexist attitude, he said.

"I want to raise people's attention," Franklin said. "We need to help the community stop this. There is a subtle systematic sexist attitude, and it has to stop."

Women should not have to take self-defense classes or change their behavior. It should be men who change their behavior and deal with the problem, Franklin said.

One way to start changing men's attitudes is to be aware of the problem of sexism.

If men hear friends joking about a behavior that is inappropriate, they need to confront them, Franklin said.

"Right now, pressure is on women," he said. "We need to turn it on to the men. We need to refocus the issue."

Student Body President Ed Skoog said he agrees.

"We need to focus on the attacker, not the attacked," he said.

When news reports concentrate on the female, it is basically blaming her because she was not careful enough, he said.

"It's a lack of respect for fellow humankind," Skoog said. "Our response is to educate women on safety instead of educating men on how to perceive women."

Some facets of the men's movement focus on ways men can stop violence and sexism against women.

Margaret Mara, instructor in women's studies, said she is familiar with the anti-sexist men's movement.

One group in this movement is Men Stopping Rape.

Men Stopping Rape believes there is a spectrum of violence against women. It starts with sexist jokes and not speaking against this behavior. By doing this, men are saying this behavior is acceptable, Mara said.

Reasons men do not speak out against this sexist behavior is the fear of losing friends and being labeled homosexual, she said.

That type of homophobia keeps sexism in place, Mara said.

Mara said she would also like to see the campus get involved in combating sexism.

"What I'd like to see happen is the formation of some sort of anti-sexist group," she said.

Mara said that it is important to know there is a historical perspective on anti-sexism.

RAPE: HOW A MAN CAN PREVENT IT

Men as well as women have the power to stop rape from occuring. Here are some ways that male behavior can contribute to rape prevention:

- Confront men who use sexist language or make "jokes" degrading women.
- Be aware of your own behavior that might be threatening to women.
- Be alert to signs of women who may be suffering physical or verbal assault. If you notice acts of violence, be willing to confront potential rape scenes in any way you can.
- Never confuse friendliness with sexual invitation. If you are in an unsure sexual situation and you feel you are getting mixed signals, it is your obligation to ask pointed questions before moving further.
- As men, demand better police action on rape. Demand that the police, public and court systems support rape victims.

Lecture seating debated

MIKE ZAMRZLA
Collegian

Student Senate recommended Thursday night that K-State students, faculty and staff receive priority seating over kindergarten through 12th-grade students at Landon Lectures.

One hundred seats are reserved for high school students at every Landon Lecture.

Matt Perrier, agriculture senator, said high school students take seats away from K-State students at many Landon Lectures, including the Pat Robertson lecture this fall.

"Last year, I was asked to go from the orchestra pit to the balcony because they were waiting for a bus full of kids 45 minutes away," Perrier said. "If we can't get the best seats, I see that as a problem for any Landon Lecture."

Phil Anderson, faculty representative to Senate, said the suggestion unfairly excludes the younger students from seeing the lectures.

"I think this amendment is rather mean-spirited," Anderson said. "The chair of the Landon Lecture Series wants 100 spots reserved for high school students. That's only 5 percent of McCain and 1 percent of Bramlage.

"It's fair and right to extend an invitation to local school systems. I think it's important and the polite thing to do."

Bryndon Meinhardt, agriculture senator, said the suggestion does not preclude any one student from attending.

"I don't want to exclude students," Meinhardt said. "If the president wants 100 high school students there, we haven't taken away that opportunity."

Matthew Seligman, arts and sciences senator, said by not giving high school students priority seating, K-State is being inhospitable.

"If you invite someone into your home, you give them a good seat," Seligman said. "Let's let these high school students come and sit where they want."

The recommendation will be delivered to Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture Series.

In other business, Senate postponed until Dec. 2 a recommendation to oppose the Partnership of Excellence Funding Program.

The proposed program would increase student tuition and legislative funding to raise faculty salaries at K-State and other regent institutions.

Trent LeDoux, Student Senate intern coordinator, said the delay is necessary to see if Gov. Joan Finney will include the program in her budget.

"By doing this now, we would be putting the cart a mile before the horse," LeDoux said. "If nothing else, we should give the governor's office

President expects NAFTA victory next week

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Both sides are predicting victory in next Wednesday's House showdown over the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Supporters concede they'll need to find about 30 more votes to succeed.

A day after Ross Perot and Vice President Al Gore held a televised debate over the pact, a buoyant President Clinton used a news conference Wednesday to talk up the deal with Mexico and Canada.

"We have a lot of job losses every year in America we can't prevent," he said during the White House session. "So when we have an opportunity to create more jobs, we are almost morally bound to do it."

But outside the Capitol, Perot wasn't buying. The billionaire businessman and one-time presidential candidate, perhaps the best-known NAFTA foe, told reporters that he had won over some undecided House members Wednesday, though he refused to reveal their names.

"I don't think it's smart to show the other side your cards," he said.

Both sides were following that strategy, making it hard to evaluate where the votes stood.

One leading critic, Rep. Gerald Solomon, R-N.Y., said there were 221 solid votes against the agreement, four more than are needed to kill it.

But Rep. Bill Richardson, D-N.M., a chief supporter, said there were 190 members ready to vote for the pact, 60 undecided and 185 against.

Estimates of undecided lawmakers ranged from 30 to 70.

Still, Clinton predicted, "I believe the House will do the right thing."

The pact would eliminate tariffs among the three North American countries over the next 15 years.

Supporters say it would boost U.S. exports and create jobs; critics say it would cost American jobs as companies move to Mexico to take advantage of cheaper wages and lower environmental standards.

With the outcome uncertain, both sides were planning heavy lobbying in hopes of finding votes right up to the last minute.

The Citizens Trade Campaign, a coalition of anti-NAFTA groups, said it was targeting 60 to 70 congressional districts for an all-out effort to sway votes during the four-day congressional recess that began today.

"I don't think it's smart to show the other side your cards."

ROSS PEROT

"We have phone banks going. We are planning district visits with lawmakers and anti-NAFTA demonstrations," said Jim Jontz, a former congressman from Indiana who heads the coalition. "What happened on the tube last night will not be nearly as important as what happens at home over the next four days."

But that wasn't stopping the White House from trying to use the debate to its advantage.

Fresh from his televised confrontation with Perot, Gore flew to Denver to build support for the agreement.

He asked people to contact their lawmakers and "urge him or her to do what's right for the United States of America, do what's right for our future."

Early indications were that Gore had scored well in the debate. In an overnight poll of 357 adults by USA Today and CNN, respondents favored the pact by 57 percent to 36 percent. On Monday, before the debate, the same people opposed the deal 38 percent to 34 percent.

Clinton and his allies were hoping that would translate into votes on the House floor. But undecided representatives said in interviews that the debate would factor little into their eventual decision.

"I didn't even listen to the debate," said undeclared Rep. Harry Johnston, D-Fla.

Johnston said his main concern was how the agreement would affect farmers in his south Florida district.

NAFTA debate scheduled in Little Theatre

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

Those who missed seeing Al Gore and Ross Perot debate the North American Free Trade Agreement will have a second chance to see both sides of this issue Monday.

Gustavo del Castillo, chairman of the department of North American Studies at El Colegio de la Frontera, based in Mexico City, will discuss the benefits of NAFTA at 4 p.m. Monday in the K-State Union Little Theatre.

Ivan Wyatt, president of the Kansas Farmers Union, will explain why this trade agreement is not in the best interests of either country.

This is the first installment of the Third Annual Latin American Lecture Series, co-sponsored by the Latin American Student Organization, the International Coordinating Council and several campus departments.

Marcial Riquelme, associate professor of sociology and director of Latin American studies, said the lecture series focuses on Latin American issues and relations between the United States and Latin American countries.

Del Castillo received his doctoral degree in political science and anthropology from the University of Texas at Austin.

He is the head of the largest think tank that deals with problems along the U.S.-Mexican border, including the environment, the maquiladoras zone and immigration.

He has written about NAFTA in several journals.

"Any one of these issues concerns the whole Western Hemisphere," Riquelme said. "Every one can have a tremendous repercussion, especially this NAFTA."

Riquelme said Wyatt was recommended to him as a person strongly against NAFTA.

Wyatt has spoken before in Manhattan against the trade agreement.

Wyatt is a Chase County farmer and serves on the executive board of the National Farmers Union.

WHY COMPANIES LEAVE THE U.S.

The main reason U.S. manufacturere move their plants — and jobs — out of the country is to achieve greater market diversification, not in search of cheap labor, according to a K-State survey.

Results of the survey do not support the theory proposed by opponents of the North American Free Trade Agreement that manufacturers will relocate operations in Mexico to take advantage of cheaper labor if Congress approves NAFTA.

K-State's Department of Marketing surveyed 188 U.S. companies with more than 250 employees who have international operations.

The top 10 reasons for moving are:

1. Greater market diversification.
2. Inquiries from foreign buyers.
3. Newly-acquired access to previously restricted foreign markets.
4. Larger profit potential from foreign markets.
5. Long-term profits versus short-term profits.
6. Greater demand for American products in foreign markets than in domestic markets.
7. Lower labor costs in foreign countries.
8. Specialized advertising in international markets.
9. Foreign government subsidies or incentives.
10. Lower material costs in foreign countries.

The survey was supervised by Wayne Norvell, head of the KSU Marketing Department; Neelima Gogumalla, associate director of the International Trade Institute; and David Andrus, marketing professor.

Tanker truck explodes on French highway

LA ROCHELLE, France (AP) — A tanker truck carrying ethanol caught fire on a rain-shrouded highway, setting off a chain-reaction pileup of cars and trucks that killed at least 17 people and injured 49, police said today.

Five of the injured were in serious condition.

The accident happened about 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in western France near Mirambeau, 320 miles southwest of Paris. Traffic was heavy because many French were taking a four-day weekend for the Armistice Day holiday today.

Police initially said a gasoline tanker jumped the median on the main A10 highway linking Paris and Bordeaux and then plowed into incoming traffic.

But today, authorities said the accident occurred after part of the tanker's cargo of highly flammable ethanol caught fire as the truck headed south.

The driver was able to stop in the emergency lane, but thick black smoke spread over the road. Three big tractor-trailer trucks smashed into the tanker in quick succession, blocking the highway and spilling more ethanol.

Smoke and rain obscured vision and caused about 40 cars to slam into one another, many also catching fire.

Rescue teams and equipment came from as far away as Bordeaux, nearly 40 miles to the south.

Fighting slows down after violent shelling

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — After two days of deadly shelling, tensions in Sarajevo eased Thursday.

Serbs freed two kidnapped Croats and the Muslim-dominated government let elderly Serbs leave the country.

Two children whose legs were shattered by a mortar attack on a Sarajevo school Tuesday were flown to Italy. A U.N. refugee official said the children might need amputations and could not be treated properly at the capital's war-battered hospitals.

The abducted Croats were security officers escorting a delegation of Croats headed north to ease Croat-Muslim friction. Serb soldiers stopped the convoy and pried open a U.N. armored personnel carrier with crowbars to seize the men Monday.

In retaliation, Bosnian authorities interrupted a long-planned evacuation of sick and elderly Serbs to Yugoslavia. About 350 people left Monday in the biggest evacuation from Sarajevo since May, but 139 others were not allowed to go until a French armored vehicle brought two Croats from Serb territory.

U.N. and Bosnian officials said the two men were unharmed.

A surge of shelling in Sarajevo during the stalemate Tuesday and Wednesday killed at least 17 people, most of them children, and wounded about 100.

Seven people killed in Canadian air crash

SANDY LAKE, Ontario (AP) — An Air Manitoba plane slammed into a forest in remote far-northwestern Ontario shortly after takeoff, killing all seven aboard.

Searchers, some riding snowmobiles, found the victims early this morning.

The turboprop was carrying three crew members and four passengers when it went down more than a mile from the Sandy Lake airport. The plane left the airport Wednesday evening en route to Garden Hill, Manitoba, north of Winnipeg.

The flight originated in Winnipeg. It dropped off 23 passengers in Sandy Lake, but did not pick up any more, Pauline Meekis, an Air Manitoba agent, said.

Scores of local residents riding snowmobiles and other vehicles searched for the crash site, which is in a heavily forested area.

Names of the victims were withheld until their families had been notified.

Pope breaks shoulder after falling in Vatican

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II tripped and fell down four steps during a Vatican audience Thursday, fracturing and dislocating his right shoulder.

The pope finished the audience in spite of his injury, then was treated at a Rome hospital and was to spend the night there. He was expected to return to the Vatican early Friday.

Emilio Tresalti, a spokesman at Gemelli Polyclinic, said the pontiff had partially fractured and dislocated his right shoulder. Doctors told the pope to wear a bandage around his shoulder for four weeks.

The pope went under general anesthesia for 15 minutes during the treatment, but it took about four minutes to set the bones in place, Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro said.

Clinton honors vets, promises vigilance

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton, a college-age foe of the Vietnam War, saluted American veterans Thursday and said the United States must never shrink from what's necessary to keep our nation secure and our people prosperous.

Beginning with a breakfast for leaders of veterans' groups in the East Room and ending with a visit to a veterans' hospital in West Virginia, Clinton devoted the day to paying homage to those who served in the military.

"A grateful nation remembers," the president said at Arlington National Cemetery after placing a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknowns.

He called attention to the presence of 17 Army Rangers who took part in the fire fight in Somalia in which 18 Americans were killed Oct. 3. Praising their great ability, success and unbelievable valor, Clinton said, "We are proud of them." The audience stood and applauded.

Clinton later visited the Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Martinsburg, W. Va., and said America can pay part of its debt to veterans by assuring them comprehensive health care under his national plan.

"We know we have a moral obligation to protect their security," Clinton said. "I wanted to come here to this hospital today to drive that point home."

Clinton's relations with the military, strained by his avoidance of the draft as a young man, were aggravated by his efforts to lift the ban on homosexuals. With the end of the Cold War, he also has had to oversee a shrinking of military forces and cutbacks in military spending.

He used the occasion of Veterans Day to sign a bill increasing the cost-of-living allowance for the nation's 2.5 million disabled veterans. He also said he had fulfilled his pledge to declassify virtually all documents related to Americans missing in action or held as prisoner in Vietnam.

At the White House and later at Arlington, Clinton warned that the United States must not turn inward now that the Cold War is over.

"Our generation is being asked now to decide whether we will preserve freedom's gains and learn freedom's lessons," the president said.

"We are being asked to decide whether we will maintain the high state of readiness that stood behind our victory, or fritter away the seed corn of our security," he said.

He also said the nation is being asked whether we will swell the global tide of freedom by promoting democracy and open world markets, a timely reference as the House nears a hard-fought vote on the North American Free Trade Agreement.

"To honor those who served in Europe and Korea and Vietnam and the Persian Gulf, in scores of posts at home and abroad, let us today resolve we will not shrink from the responsibilities necessary to keep our nation secure and our people prosperous," the president said.

Veterans Day marked the 75th anniversary of the end of World War I. Clinton gave medals to four vets at the hospital in West Virginia.

Konza Prairie to get new housing, labs

DANI JOHNSTON
Collegian

Plans for new laboratories and housing for visiting scientists are in the making.

The biology department and the architecture department are collaborating with the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area on designing ecologically unobtrusive laboratories and housing.

"It was clear that we needed to develop new facilities for Konza Prairie," Jim Reichman, director of Konza Prairie, said.

Reichman contacted Tim Keane, associate professor of landscape architecture, and Gary Coates, professor of architecture, about the project.

"I contacted Jim Keane and Gary Coates, and we met with the dean of architecture. They are very optimistic about it," Reichman said.

Keane is involved in the site analysis.

"I have two classes working on the site analysis of four different sites and another class working on the architectural design," Keane said. "We are looking at the functional factors of each of the four sites, and based on all of the studies, we will determine which one will be appropriate."

The site will include research facilities, laboratories and housing for visiting researchers, Reichman said.

There are two reasons for designing an ecologically sound laboratory and housing facility.

"First it is an ecological site, and we want to use environmentally sound materials, and second, it will help us to raise funds for the site," he said.

Reichman said they will use active and passive means for electricity, such as solar panels, to conserve heat in the winter and cool air in the summer.

"We are designing waste water treatment of gray water to clean the water naturally," he said." Visually, there are ways to make materials blend in with the environment."

The housing facility will house the many visiting researchers that come here for research.

"We have hundreds of visiting researchers every year. The busiest seasons are from April to October," Reichman said. "We are losing research possibilities because we do not have appropriate facilities, so we will get more researchers due to better facilities."

Now, the researchers stay in town in hotels or in an old house the Konza Prairie plans to renovate.

"We will do restoration of an existing house and barn for other purposes. We will restore it to a historically accurate condition," Reichman said.

They will be renovating the inside.

"It will be used for educational purposes and small meetings of groups who are interested in Konza Prairie."

ECOLOGICAL SITE

■ The research site will use solar panels and natural water cleaning processes.

Another goal is to improve educational aspects.

"The Konza Prairie belongs to the Nature Conservancy, and they need to make it a stronger research site as well as increase the environmental educational aspects," Keane said. "The question is how do we keep visitors from public disturbances, but not interfere with the research and environmental education."

Reichman said he hopes to have a master plan of the construction of the buildings by October of next year.

"The master plan will become a document for fund raising for financial support for the construction," Reichman said. "Right now, we have a planning grant from the National Science Foundation."

Politically correct witch hunt must end before Willie gets axed

Greenpeace better get on the ball, because a new genus is getting ready to enter the endangered species list — the school mascot.

Politically correct humans, in their desire to bring America to a new level of happiness, are hunting down mascots right and left. They will shoot to kill at the slightest provocation of offensiveness.

One of the latest casualties was the University of Alabama-Birmingham mascot Blaze, a character similar to a Viking.

Blaze's life was snuffed out because he was too white, male and mean.

These factors helped some students come to the conclusion he was not a good representation of the students' diversity.

Students at K-State should be upset because our mascot is too hairy, too much an animal and too mean-looking. Also, his teeth are too big. Students at K-State don't have large canines like Willie.

What should be done? Not one part of Willie represents a K-State student as a whole.

The only answer is to get rid of the mascot and replace it with something that can be enjoyed and agreed upon by everyone.

Has anyone ever had a problem with getting 20,000 people together to agree on one thing?

We don't need the student body to decide. All that needs to be done is let the politically-correct people decide because they have an answer for everything.

The politically correct utopia these people are gunning for is not going to work because what they want is a utopia.

Everybody remembers the last utopia.

The politically correct movement needs to stop its absurd witch hunt for objectionable words, people, places and things.

It should let people live their lives and accept the fact that no matter what happens, someone is bound to get offended.

▶ RESPECT

Student delinquents scared straight

Editor,

The K-State football program has shown it knows how to win and win with pride. So, why can't the student body do the same?

After the K-State victory over Oklahoma University, we were two of the feeble-minded, unintelligent fans who ran out on the field to show our exuberance by destroying and vandalizing everything on the field. Unfortunately, for us, we were arrested and charged with misdemeanor theft. So, as an example to the rest of the student body, show a little respect and stay off of the field after a K-State victory.

Positive response to Veterans Day story

Editor,

After taking enough journalism classes in the last few years to choke a horse, I can easily say that as a major part of several classes, we have used the Collegian as a learning tool.

With examples of what to do and not to do, your staff has provided a resource that has been quite valuable for learning.

While many students on campus choose to complain about the Collegian and poke fun, I must commend you and your staff on a wonderful paper for Veterans Day.

The photo on the front was geared to students, and the longer story inside was a good reminder of a day that has come to mean less and less to younger people.

Thanks for keeping me and other students current on important issues deserving of our attention.

P.S. Don't let the turkeys get you down!

▶ CUP CRUSADE

Proposal to recycle Union's foam cups

Editor,

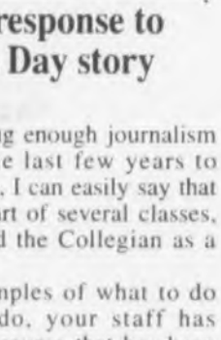
I have recently noticed a travesty that occurs on a daily basis at the K-State Union. Every day, the Union food center uses about 4,200 polystyrene foam cups. These cups are thrown away without any regard for their ability to be recycled easily and efficiently.

The Dart company, which provides these cups to the Union, also provides a program to recycle the cups in a food-service environment such as the K-State Union dining service. The Dart company claims this recycling program, titled "Cups Are Recyclable" (CARE), is a cost-effective way to reprocess foam products in a food-service environment.



The most shocking concept about this whole issue is the apathy found on the part of the food-service officials at the Union. I personally asked several people in high positions why they do not recycle these foam cups. The overwhelming response was that it would take too much time on their part. However, the actuality of the issue from the information I found in the Union, produced by the Dart Corp., is that they can easily and effectively recycle these foam cups in a food-service environment.

Something must be done to stop this travesty that occurs on our campus on a daily basis. It is for this reason that on Dec. 2, I will be proposing my plan for recycling these foam cups in front of the Student Governing Association.

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

Ahh, memories. As I sit here contemplating graduation in May, while I figure out what classes to take, it occurs to me my column is due for the week.

So, with that in mind, I thought I would do something about Sexual Violence Awareness Week. It's kinda timely and kinda needed.

I'm from a small town in Western Kansas that shall remain nameless because these things happen in every town, in every state in the country.

When I was about 7, I was sexually assaulted by a man who later became mayor. I wasn't the only one, either.

When I was a little older, I was put into a cage by the boys in our neighborhood and ordered to take my clothes off.

When I was in eighth grade, I was molested again, except this time it was a student in the class right under ours.

These things happen.

I graduated from a high school in Western Kansas with about 30 other people. The name of the school isn't important because what happens there probably happens in every school across the nation.

In my school, I learned about math, science, English and social studies.

I also learned that Cain killed Abel, (No, I didn't go to Catholic School. It was an extra credit question on a science test in Junior High.), that a woman can get spontaneously pregnant (I spent half of my freshman year worrying about that one.), and how to watch the bus driver's eyes in the rearview mirror to see if he was going to stop the guy who was molesting me (He wasn't.).

So, I hid in the bathroom to get away from the guy that made lewd comments, fought the guy off who was molesting me and tried to force my way past the guy who had me trapped against the side of the bus and the seat.

These things happen.

Why didn't I tell someone, you ask?

Well, I did. I told my friends. I told a teacher. Here's the advice I got:

From my friends, I heard I was wrong to complain because he was "cute."

The teacher thought the whole thing was funny and made me feel I was wrong to be upset by a little flirting.

So, finally I turned to a guy I had been friends with for most of my life.

The only problem was he was friends with the guy who was bugging me. He asked me not to make him choose between us.

These things happen.

So, I lived with it until I graduated.

Then I got up here and had the first of about three breakdowns.

This summer, I went home and had a talk with the superintendent of schools in my district.

He is a very sweet man and, unfortunately, not the superintendent any longer. He was horrified.

He said these things did not just happen in his schools and could not be allowed to happen.

He said if the teachers wouldn't take care of it, then I should have come to him and he would have taken care of the situation himself.

Too bad I didn't know that then.

This is going on in high schools all over the United States. In fact, it's spread to grade schools, as many could testify.

It's not flirting, not kids being kids, not a joke. The same kids who shove their hands between someone's legs eventually grow up never having learned their actions are wrong.

And the behavior continues.

I don't know about anyone else to whom this has happened, but I learned long ago not to rely on anyone, not to trust, not to expect or accept help.

I'm not asking anyone to feel sorry for me.

I don't need that. What I'm asking is that you stop this behavior.

Don't let this just happen anymore. Don't make anyone ever go through anything like this again.

We can stop this. It's not the victim's fault. It's not flirting. It's not cute.

It's not a game.

And these things do not just happen.

Students learn Japanese art of book binding

"It becomes as clear as mud in the end. It really clears itself up."

LINDA SAMSON
BOOK ARTIST

ANGELA YOUNG
Collegian

Although most books today are bound by machine, book artist Linda Samson is keeping the ancient art of handmade books alive.

Samson taught two workshops on the Japanese art form on Thursday in the Art Building. Samson lives in Cortona, Italy, but returned to the United States to visit her family. Elliot Pujol, professor of art, arranged Samson's visit to K-State.

The binding process takes about two hours to complete and in the early stages resembles children's sewing cards.

"It becomes as clear as mud in the end. It really clears itself up," Samson said.

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

Linda Samson, book artist, looks up from her work to answer a question asked by a student Thursday afternoon during a workshop on Fukuro-Toji, a Japanese form of book binding. Samson now lives and works in Cortona, Italy.

The bindings are decorative as well as functional with names such as, "Kiko Toji,"which means and resembles tortoise shells. The art form dates back more than 2,000 years and was one of the first ways of binding papers developed after scrolls.

However, the handmade books also have practical uses, said Karen Lauseng, graduate student in art. The strength of the book depends on the binding used, with linen book binding being the strongest.

"People use them for graphic design and putting their photographs in," Lauseng said. She said there was a good turnout for both sessions, which were limited to 20 students and cost each student $10 for supplies.

Tony Revak, senior in graphic design, said he attended the workshop in preparation for other art classes.

"We're making a booklet later for Illustrating II. I've never made a booklet before, and I thought this would be a good opportunity," Revak said.

Samson's own interest in the art began with her love of books as a child and the presence of a printing press in her home.

"When you have the press there and you get the type, the next step is wanting to make your own book," she said.

She attended the University of Kansas, but her studies in book art began five years after graduating from KU. She had attended a book art workshop in Alabama and then decide to enter the master of fine arts program at the University of Alabama's Institute for Book Arts.

After applying for a Fulbright Scholarship, she moved to Italy and studied with Alessandro Zanella, one of the premiere artists in fine letter printing.

Samson owns her own business in Italy, where he illustrates, prints and binds the books of American and Italian artists. Besides having better access to the work of Italian poets, Samson said living in Italy changed her perspective on her art,

"I think it's taught me patience and a better sense of craftsmanship. Because there are so many old monuments from the Roman era, it makes you feel like whatever you are doing is going to last. Instead of having your work just consumed, you feel like it's going to be treasured," Samson said.

Although machines can do the same work, Samson said handmade books still have a place in the modern world.

"A handmade book has a completely different look and feel. They have a sculptured quality that you don't get from machines," she said."Those of us who do it don't see any reason to stop. Then if you make your own paper, it's even greater. The more handmade it is, the better."

Bead Emergency
Bead Famine

The cold war is over. Beads are back with a vengence. Everywhere you look people are wearing beads. What does that mean to you, the bead maker? Well, in the beginning it spells glory but in the end...possibly disaster.

When the cold Canadian winds blow again, expect shortages, rationing, and yes, possibly famine. Imagine a world in which December 22 rolls into town and you don't have your beaded necklaces, bracelets, and gifts made. It could happen.

Am I trying to alarm you? Not at all. But just as surely as Boris Yeltsin is sleeping with a pistol under his pillow these days, we are going to have problems. There won't be enough beads to go around.

I've hired extra staff to handle the rush and we're stocking up. Still, it isn't going to be pretty. Expect the lines to be long.

Plan ahead. Expect your friendly retailer to be less friendly as we fight off the mobs demanding beads now, now, now. Plan ahead.

It's time to get serious.

Thank You,

ASKIA JONES HOSPITALIZED

Senior guard Askia Jones was hospitalized Wednesday night and is being held out of practice for an undetermined amount of time.

"Askia had an inflammatory reaction in his left knee," Bill Jones, team physician, said. "He's undergone some diagnostic studies, including arthroscopic surgery.

"At this point we don't have all the answers, so it's hard to say when he can return to practice. We hope to know more by early next week."

Only Mizzou stands in Cats' way to bowl

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

It's crunch time for the K-State football team.

As the Wildcats come down to their last two games of the season, all they have to do to qualify for a postseason bowl is win in one of those games against the No. 5 and No. 8 teams in the Big Eight Conference.

Sounds easy, but a K-State loss last week against Iowa State, the seventh-place team in the Big Eight, kept the Cats from qualifying already.

The Cats will get their second shot tomorrow against Missouri in the final home game this season.

"It's fair to say that this game is probably as significant of a game we've played in a while," Snyder said. "I guess you could say that there is some urgency, especially after the loss to Iowa State."

The game is also important because the Cats don't want to face a must-win situation next week against Oklahoma State in Stillwater, Okla.

"It's a big game," receiver Kevin Lockett said. "Everyone's already talking about a bowl game, and we haven't even qualified yet.

"I think it would be better for us to win at home. I'd sure hate to go in to Stillwater needing the win, because here at home we have the crowd support, and down there they would be pretty hyped up."

Missouri is a team that could cause K-State some problems, Snyder said.

"They are a dangerous team," Snyder said. "They can put points on the board quickly with their offense. Their defense is good. I don't know how Texas A&M scored 70 points on their defense."

The Tigers lost last week to Oklahoma 42-23 in Columbia, Mo.

"Turnovers gave them the field position," Missouri coach Bob Stull said, "and they exploited that. They also did a good job with our adjustments at halftime."

Spear-heading the Tiger offensive attack is a trio of wide receivers led by the schools all-time leading receiver Kenny Holly. Holly is leading the Big Eight in receptions, averaging 5.33 per game, and he is fifth on the Big Eight all-time receptions list.

Missouri tight end A.J. Ofadile is second in the league averaging 5.22 catches a game.

"They are just as good as anybody in the Big Eight," free-safety Jaime Mendez said. "The might even be one of the best in the country."

Snyder said Ofadile is a key part of the Missouri attack.

"Last year I think he had 15 receptions for 105 yards against us," Snyder said. "He is really coming into his own. He's physical, big, and he's someone we have to always be aware of."

While Snyder was complimenting Missouri's receivers, Stull said the Cats' receivers are some of the best in the Big Eight also.

"They've got guys who can run well," Stull said. "Lockett is a fun guy to watch. He made a great catch against Colorado, but they have three excellent receivers who make a big difference in their offense."

Lockett is second in the Big Eight in receiving yards; Andre Coleman is third, and Mitch Running is seventh. Lockett is also fourth in receptions per game with 4.33 a game. Running is fifth, and Coleman is sixth.

Another comparison can be made in the defensive backfields. Missouri is ranked second in the conference in passing efficiency with 11 interceptions, and K-State is fourth in the league with nine interceptions.

The Tigers defensive backfield is led by cornerback Kevin McIntosh, who leads the Big Eight in interceptions with four pick-offs. At the other cornerback position is Jason Oliver, who has three interceptions.

"We've watched them on film this past week," K-State quarterback Chad May said, "and I respect the five defensive backs they have."

Stull said K-State's defensive backs are the best athletes in the league.

"Thomas Randolph is one of the three or four best cornerbacks in the country," Stull said. "They are probably the best defensive backfield in the conference."

After not having a 100-yard rusher in more than three seasons, the Tigers have found Joe Freeman, who has rushed for more than 100-yards in two-consecutive games.

"He's really helped us with the rushing attack," Stull said. "Freeman has stepped up and lived up to his potential. It's helped with the consistency on offense because we now can run the ball."

Last week against Iowa State, May was only 13 for 30 in passing, and he said he thought he was in a slump.

"I didn't play too well last week," May said. "The ball was sailing on me. I guess you could say that I've been in a slump these past two weeks."

No. 1 vs. No. 2 showdown will display greats

BOB LEHMAN

If you are one of those people who want to see a national championship game in college football, your chance is this weekend. And if you don't watch another game all year, the title game will be the last game of the season as far as you know.

Yes, tomorrow is the long awaited clash of the No. 1 and No. 2 teams in the country. The Seminoles of Florida State travel to South Bend, Ind., to take on the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame.

Be sure to set your videocassette recorders on your local NBC affiliate and tape the game, because you will of course be at KSU Stadium cheering on the Cats in their last home game of the year.

Despite all the typical hype of a big college football game, this one really does promise to go down in history as one of the epic battles of all time.

Not only is it a matchup of the two best teams in the country, it is also two of the top three coaches in the country going head to head.

Irish coach Lou Holtz and the Chief Seminole Bobby Bowden really are the driving forces behind their teams.

The teams' contrasting styles of play parallel the ways in which the coaches' styles of leadership and motivation differ.

Florida State plays with speed, strength, finesse and flash. Notre Dame will counter with power, drive, control and intelligence. A classic confrontation.

Holtz, like his team, wants control. He is a master teacher and motivator. Much like past Ohio State coach Woody Hayes.

He doesn't get you to perform your best, he makes you perform your best.

It is inspiration through fear. You do it right because you have to. You are effective to avoid punishment. If you beat a dog every time he chews your paper up, eventually, he'll bring it to you whole.

Bowden motivates another way. He inspires his team by inspiring belief in himself. He gets his team to believe he is the one who is going to take them to the promised land of football.

It is inspiration through belief. Every Florida State player believes coach knows everything. Whatever coach wants you to do, you do because it is going to bring you that much closer to winning that national championship.

Both coaches have found styles that fit. Obviously, both styles work and have the potential to be successful.

Which is better? I'm not sure if there is an absolute answer to that question. One style could be construed as mean, the other as arrogant.

The only answer I can give is no matter how controlled your power is, if you can't catch your opponent, you can't use that power.

NCAA RULES ON K-STATE TRACK VIOLATIONS

The NCAA will decide on possible violations with the track program when it

- Athletes involved will be stripped of all results from meets competed in after the day they were found involved.
- K-State may not compete in NCAA Championship events as a team. Athletes can represent K-State as individuals.
- No off-campus recruiting by the coaching staff. This means coaches may only contact recruits by phone and may not attend any events.
- The loss of one scholarship per program (men and women).

CROSS COUNTRY

Despite injuries, sickness, runners remain positive

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The season could be over for some members of the cross country team this Saturday when they travel to Carbondale, Ill., for the District V Championships.

Only the top two teams and the next three best runners will qualify for the NCAA Cross Country Championships on Nov. 22 in Bethlehem, Pa.

Both the men's and the women's teams do not have enough healthy runners to make up the required five-member team.

"The team is still banged up to the point where we are trying to qualify individuals instead of a team," Coach Terry Drake said.

The off week turned out to be a week of sickness rather than a week of rest for the women's team, Drake said.

As a result of the injuries, Paulette Staats, Jeanene Rugan, Cari Warden and Megan McGrath will be the only competitors for K-State.

Rugan, Staats and Warden, who finished 10th, 11th and 12th last season, led the team to a second-place finish. It was the team's ninth NCAA appearance in 12 years.

"It will be different this year because we are running for ourselves instead of for the team," Rugan said.

Despite the injuries, Rugan and Staats said the attitude among the remaining team members is still positive.

"I feel like I am in good condition," Staats said. "Coach has let up on the training this week in order for us to be rested before the race."

The 16-team field is basically a rematch of the Big Eight meet.

Like the women, the men's squad has been reduced because of injuries.

National qualifying hopes lie with senior Francis O'Neill and sophomore Ryan Clive-Smith.

O'Neill is seeking cross-country all-America status for the second-consecutive season. He finished 38th at last year's NCAA Championship.

"I've heard from other coaches that the course was flat," Drake said. "That could benefit Francis and his style of running."

Clive-Smith said he is in the best shape of the season.

"It's been a really tough season, but this is the time of year when it all comes together for us," Clive-Smith said. "I hope I can respond."

SPORTS DIGEST

▶K-STATE SIGNS TOP HOOP PLAYER

K-State basketball coach Dana Altman announced Thursday that Mark Young, a 6-foot-6 forward from Baton Rouge, La., has signed a letter of intent to play for the Wildcats.

Young is rated as one of the nation's top high school prospects and the top player in Louisiana.

As a junior at Baton Rouge's McKinley High School, Young averaged 18 points, 11 rebounds and seven assists per game while leading McKinley to the Class 4A state championship. He also led the team in blocked shots and registered 72 dunks on the season.

"We're very excited about Mark joining our program," Altman said. "He's someone who can really make a difference for us. He's very explosive and is someone who can fill a lot of different roles. And he has the athletic ability to be an outstanding defensive player."

Young chose K-State after being heavily recruited by LSU, Michigan, Seton Hall, Florida State, Georgetown, Temple, Arkansas, Alabama, Tennessee and Tulane.

"The first thing that stands out about Mark is that he's a great leaper," Young's high school coach Roosevelt Brown said. "He's very versatile."

Although it's hard to judge the accuracy of the numerous national recruiting services, most of the experts label Young as being among the top prep players in the country. Hoop Scoop out of Louisville, Ky., lists Young as a fourth-team, preseason all-American and one of the top 20 high school recruits in the country.

Dick Vitale's 1993-94 Basketball Yearbook ranks Young among the top 50 high school prospects, and Bob Gibbons also has Young rated among the top 50 in the prep ranks.

"He's a major, major addition to the Wildcats," Gibbons said.

"He's a slasher and very explosive player who can play either big guard or small forward. He reminds me a lot of Rolando Blackman."

▶COACH SNYDER AWARD FINALIST

HOUSTON, Texas — K-State coach Bill Snyder is one of four finalists for the College Football Coach of the Year Award.

The Football Writers Association of America, in conjunction with the Touchdown Club of Houston, will name the top coach at a Dec. 9 banquet.

Th finalists are Terry Bowden, Auburn; Bobby Bowden, Florida State; John Cooper, Ohio State; and Snyder.

The top coach will be named at the seventh annual Paul "Bear" Bryant Banquet on Dec. 9. Terry Bradshaw, former quarterback for the Pittsburgh Steelers, will be the guest speaker.

For tickets call the American Heart Association at (713) 797-1812.

If they only would have turned the other cheek

From the "Hey, Mom — guess what I did at school today" department comes this wacky story from Silverton, Ore.

It seems six high-school students suffered severe burns on their buttocks — that's right, their buttocks — from sitting on blocks of dry ice during a pep-assembly stunt.

The students, all girls, were apparently competing to see which one could sit on the solidified carbon dioxide the longest. Dry ice, as you know, can be as cold as 112 degrees below zero. Afterward, four of the girls were treated at Silverton Hospital.

It gets better.

Dr. Frank Lord, the doctor who treated the girls, said some of them may need to get skin grafts. Skin grafts? Down there?

"The truth is, I've never seen any frostbite on this part of the anatomy," the doctor quipped.

And what does Dick Kromminga, the Silverton principal, have to say about it?

"We pulled a brain-deader," he said. "We'll make sure we don't do it again."

Great. In the meantime, Mr. Kromminga, can you say "lawsuit"?

RCPD: doing us proud!

If you happen to be walking the streets of Ogden in the near future, do so cautiously.

It seems that Riley County police officers are cracking down on those who cunningly avoid sidewalks. About a half a dozen tickets — costing the guilty party about $45 — have been issued in recent weeks to pedestrians who are caught walking in the street where a sidewalk is readily available.

Now, we here at Weekend aren't exactly sure what's so wrong with walking in the street. But we do think it feels awfully good knowing that, dammit, they aren't getting away with it!

Ahh, the beauty of the U.S.'s law enforcement

Boy, I bet the police officers in Monticello, Utah, feel stupid.

Last week, a youth called police to report a man with a gun standing inside the window of a nearby building. A fireman checked it out with binoculars, reporting that he, too, saw a gun-wielding hood. He also noted that the man was wearing a red, plaid shirt.

So more than a dozen police officers from Monticello, San Juan County, the Utah Highway Patrol and the state Fish and Game Department rushed to the scene.

Shotgun-toting police officers stormed the building, only to find themselves face-to-face with a life-sized poster of Sylvester Stallone. The cardboard cutout, in which Stallone was indeed holding a gun, was a promotion for the movie "Stop Or My Mom Will Shoot."

Does anyone else wonder why nobody was suspicious that this dangerous criminal was completely motionless the whole time?

Jeepers. There's no telling what would have happened had the poster been a plug for the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles.

Toothless and talented

We here at K-State don't generally like to glorify KU athletes. But upon perusing the Jayhawks' 1993-94 basketball media guide, we couldn't help but notice the "Notes" that accompanied a profile of Greg Ostertag. Ostertag is the 7-foot-2, 275-pound junior who looks a little bit like Lurch from "The Addams Family."

A quick sample:

- "Three of Ostertag's front teeth are missing as a result of a water slide accident in 1989. Often plays with teeth secured in a jar under the team bench."
- "Would one day like to be a farmer. Gained interest in farming as a teen-ager when he raised a pig."
- "Gained instant popularity with fans at KU's Late Night scrimmage in 1991 when he lip-synced the words to Garth Brooks' 'Friends in Low Places.'"

Date: Thursday, Nov. 11.
Place: K-State Union.
Number of rings: 10.
Answerer: Matt Grieb.
Year and major: junior in chemical engineering.

Q. What prompted you to answer the phone?
A. "I don't know. I just heard it ringing and thought it might be some good-looking chick trying to ask me out." (Oh, good — reality!)
Q. So, is that how you get most of your dates, hanging our near a pay phone until it starts ringing, then asking out whoever is on the other line? (Because if that's your game, I don't want to play.)
A. "No. That's a rarity."
Q. But it has happened?
A. "Not lately."
Q. So what were you doing at the Union?
A. "Actually, I was reading the newspaper."
Q. The Collegian?
A. "Yeah."
Q. Anything in there worth reading?
A. "Uhh ..."
Q. Come on, Matt. Be honest.
A. "I like the crossword. That's about it. Anyway, is it OK if I go now? I've got other stuff that I have to get to." (Let me guess — another pay phone is ringing, right? Good luck, Romeo!)

IT'S LIKE STAYING WITH YOUR MOTHER

Design & Illustration by: Britton Harper

Story by: William McKeen III

Motels and hotels need to be careful as the bed and breakfast becomes a popular overnight stop or travelers.

"Four years ago, when we started the Kansas Bed and Breakfast Association, there weren't many members," said Tim Sanders, owner of the Windmill Inn, a bed and breakfast in Chapman. "Now there are more than 70."

Sanders said the bed-and-breakfast idea dates back to Europe, but no one is really sure of the exact origin.

"There has been a bed and breakfast since the first house was built," Sanders said. "My theory is people decided to collect a fee for people staying at the house."

Phyllis Nuttall, owner of the Rock House Bed and Breakfast in Wakefield, said she believes the bed and breakfast originated in England as people decided to open their home to travelers.

During the war, Americans decided to adopt an idea similar to the European bed and breakfasts, Nuttall said.

"In the 1930s and 1940s, America had tourist homes," said Betty Anderson, owner of the Kimble-Cliff, a bed and breakfast in Manhattan. "These were homes where people, sometimes soldiers, could stop on a trip and stay, usually in an extra room."

Although bed and breakfast places were stagnant for a while because of the rise of hotels and motels, people have come to appreciate them again, Anderson said.

"People like it because they can sit, linger and visit," Anderson said. "It is a more relaxed atmosphere. It is down-to-earth and rustic."

This relaxed atmosphere lets the bed and breakfast offer more to guests than a regular motel.

"Visitors have a chance to learn more about the local town and surroundings," Sanders said. "We can tell them what to see and do.

Because of their histories, the bed-and-breakfast houses are points of interest.

"Many guests like to learn about the house, which has an interesting history dating back to 1894 before it became a bed and breakfast," Anderson said.

The breakfast also varies between each house.

One might find scrambled eggs, bacon and fried potatoes at one place, while another may serve pumpkin waffles.

"The menu varies daily," Sanders said. "We have a country breakfast where you don't go away hungry."

People are drawn to the bed-and-breakfast places for a multitude of reasons.

"People come for anything from a relaxing weekend to relieving stress to honeymoons," Sanders said.

The popularity of the bed and breakfast has affected its traditional rustic atmosphere as American commercialization begins to infiltrate the business.

"Some bed and breakfasts have gotten so big there is a loss of the one-on-one relationship between the guest and the host, which is the factor making bed and breakfasts such a unique place to stay," Nuttall said

Still, the popularity goes beyond the American tourist.

"People have stayed here from pretty much all over the world except China," Anderson said.

This popularity can make the opportunity to stay at a bed and breakfast somewhat tricky.

"For some weekends, we are already booked a year ahead," Anderson said.

Children's author to accept award Saturday

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

Kansas children's favorite author is coming to K-State.

Jerry Spinelli will receive the William Allen White Children's Book Award at noon Saturday in the K-State Union Ballroom.

Kansas children chose Spinelli's book "Maniac Magee" as their favorite story from a list of other popular children's stories in this year's awards, said Steve Fuller, chairperson of Friends of William Allen White.

"Maniac Magee" is an unusual story, which combines a tall tale and realistic fiction about the exploits of an 11-year-old runaway orphan, Jeffery Lionel Magee, said Mary Bogan, executive secretary of the William Allen White Book Award.

The list is chosen by White Award Book Selection Committee, which represents educational institutions in Kansas, Fuller said.

More than 57,000 children in grades four through eight voted for this year's award, he said.

According to the biographical article "Something About the Author," Jerry Spinelli's childhood memories inspired him to write stories about children.

"I began to see that in my own memories and in the kids around me, I had all the materials I needed for a schoolbag full of books," Spinelli said.

The Young Adult Services Division also chose Maniac Magee as the best book for young adults in 1991, Bogan said.

JERRY SPINELLI
- Book sales — 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. Saturday on the second floor of the K-State Union
- Autographs — 9 to 11:15 a.m. in Union 212

Jerry Spinelli has written other children's books including "Bathwater Gang," "There's a Girl in My Hammerlock," "Who Put That Hair in My Toothbrush" and "Fourth Grade Rats,"

His book "The Bathwater Gang Gets Down to Business" was selected as an International reading, Bogan said.

"I saw that each kid is a population unto him or herself, and that a child's bedroom is as much a window to the universe as an orbiting telescope or a philosopher's study," Spinelli said.

The Friends of William Allen White Book Award will be selling Spinelli's books from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. Saturday on the second floor of the K-State Union. His books will also be on sale immediately following the luncheon.

Spinelli will be autographing his books from 9 a.m. to 11:15 a.m. and immediately following the luncheon in Union 212. Autographs will be limited to two books for each person.

His visit is in conjunction with Children's Book Week, Nov. 15-19, in the K-State Union Bookstore.

Bluegrass music fills Warehouse

Foot tappin', hollering and a laidback atmosphere combined for a good, fun show.

Beginning at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday, the Warehouse blossomed as Arkansas White Trash Express, Wheatland Express and Kaw River Swamis performed for about an hour each. The three bluegrass bands played in front of 25 people.

The three bands represented American bluegrass music without compromising the basic truths of rapid tempos, jazz improvisation and the every present banjo.

Arkansas White Trash Express began their 17-song set with jazz influenced numbers. The five-piece, Lawrence band played a song list ranging from originals "Hobo Love" and "Leftover Me" to covers of "Fire on the Mountain," "Hitchin' Blues," "Little Glass of Wine" and "Traveling Express."

The band also played humorous versions of the "Land of the Lost" theme as well as The Who's "Pinball Wizard."

The mood, early on, was soft and relaxed with a mild and pleasurable tone. Toward the end of their performance, the beat had picked up, and the musicians were obviously warmed up for more.

Bassist Shawn Bennett, occupying the usual drummer's slot on stage, slapped his stand-up bass behind the rest of the band. The other members of Arkansas White Trash Express took advantage of the lack of percussion and delivered their own style of bluegrass/jazz.

Fiddler Amy Bush-Enos played quick, staccato notes while her bow rosin drifted like smoke in the glare of the stage lights.

With a three-piece harmony, guitarist Mike Horan, banjo player Mike Helvey and mandolin player Craig Deimer alternated between vocals and free-form playing. Most notable was Helvey's style of banjo playing which, at times, was out of synch with the others.

Arkansas White Trash Express can be best described as fusion bluegrass, if there is such a style.

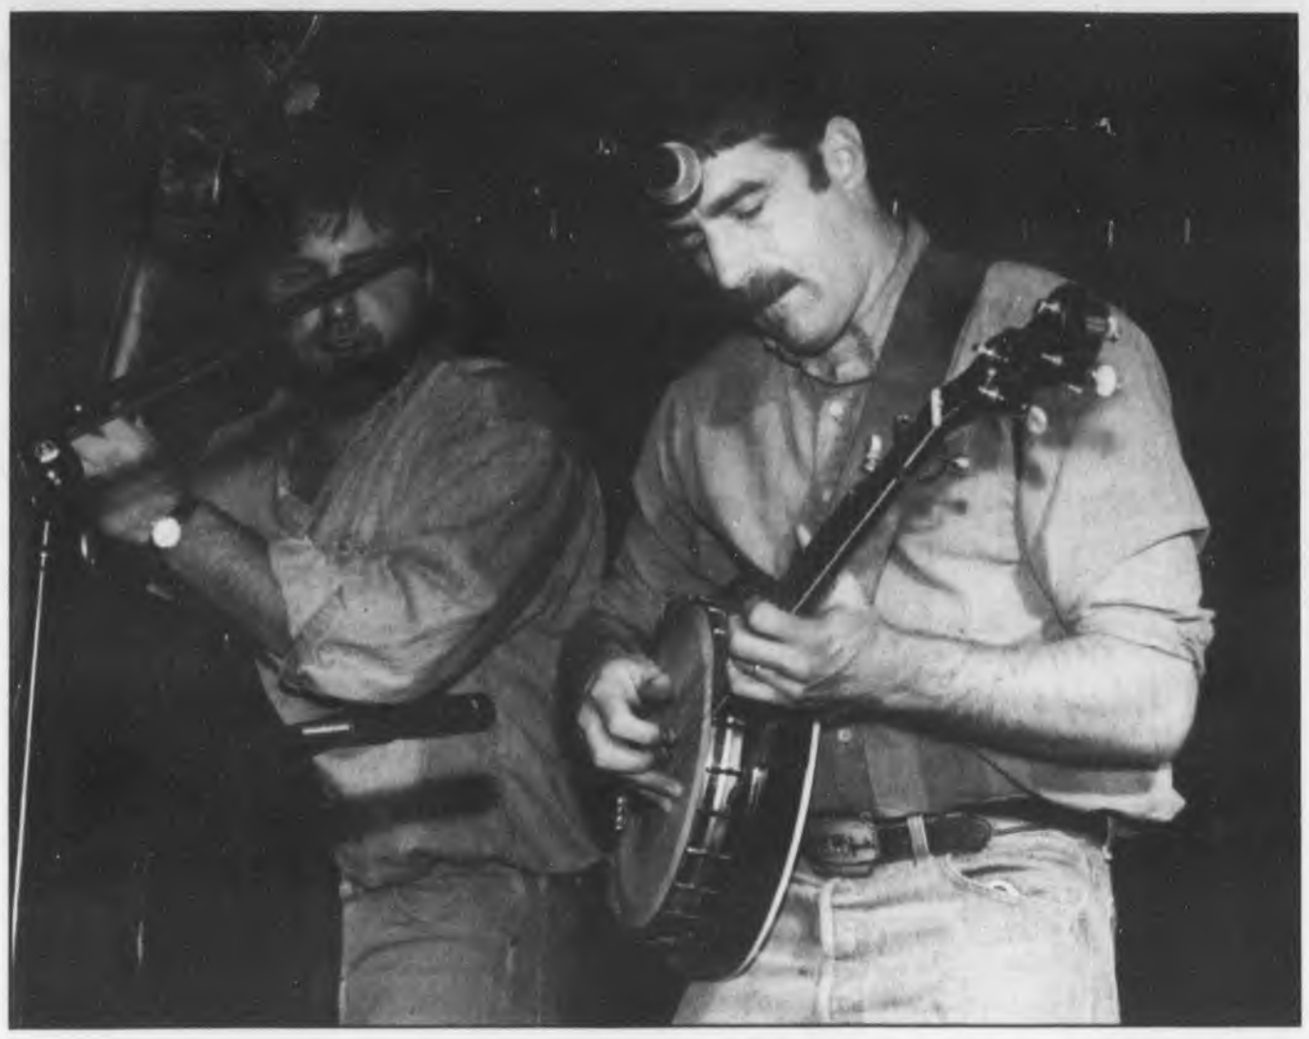
Wheatland Express, a four-piece from Manhattan, approached the music with a definite country influence. They began with the tune "Sled Ride" and took the audience on a entertaining ride filled with excellent musicianship.

Peter Knupfer, associate professor of history, had his fiddle squealing and weeping early on. "Fiddle tunes" kept Knupfer featured for most of the performance, and his playing was right on target. Like taking a long, hot shower on a cold fall evening, the notes from Knupfer's fiddle were repeatedly washed over the crowd. The audience responded with calls for more of the pleasing sensation.

Guitarist/mandolin player David Michal, guitarist/banjo player Chris Biggs and bassist Mark Bennet were equally impressive, although Michal was extremely hard to hear for most of the show.

Members of Wheatland Express took breaks between songs, explaining why they chose certain numbers as well as the feelings they got from them.

Songs such as Norman Blake's "The Girl I Left in Sunny Tennessee," Hot Rise's "Midnight on the Highway," Lester Flat's "Dim Lights, Thick Smoke and Loud, Loud Music" and the gospel tune "Mansion on a Hilltop" gave the musicians plenty of opportunities to show their talents.



The Kaw River Swamis relied on a basic bluegrass rhythm to entertain the audience. Led by no one particular member, the band took turns in the spotlight while the other members followed the lead.

Featuring hilarious songs such as "Mountain Dew," Jerry Reed's "Eastbound and Down" and the theme to "The Jeffersons," they made it clear from the beginning that they wanted to goof around.

Guitarist Eric Henry, banjo player Ed Skoog, bassist Paul Schmidt and rhythm guitarist Dave Frese played well during the bluegrass jam session despite the playful mood.

Guitarist Shawn Bruce had the audience chuckling with his vocals during "Five Pound Bass." In describing a long-winded fish tale, Bruce declared he had snagged a bass "as big as a goddamn baby."

Too bad more people couldn't have heard his ludicrous exaggeration.

Chris Biggs, guitarist/banjo player for the Manhattan-based bluegrass band Wheatland Express, gets into the fevered picking and plucking characteristic of most bluegrass music Wednesday at the Warehouse. Wheatland Express performed its hur-long set between sets by Lawrence's Arkansas White Trash Express and Manhattan's Kaw River Swamis.

"We are not sending her (Finney) a clear message on what we want," Carney said. "We have to strike and strike now."

Derek Kreifels, business senator, said he agreed.

"I really think delaying our decision is a bad idea," he said. "This is our break. If we pass it up, we may fall flat on our faces."

"If we pass this tonight, we fall flat on our faces," Sarah Caldwell, arts and sciences senator, said. "I think we will be hurting ourselves and our credibility on the regents level."

Stacy Dalton, business senator, said Student Senate needs to study the program thoroughly before it decides whether to support or oppose it.

"My concern is that K-State will lose even more funding," Dalton said. "Let's sit tight and wait for two weeks."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

T-shirt poses endowment question

Dear Cassandra,

Have you noticed that many guys on campus are wearing those T-shirts with a peculiar cartoon logo and the words "Big Johnson" emblazoned across it?

Based on what I can tell (I walked up close on a guy once) the cartoon shows a dorky looking, scrumpy little fellow surrounded by voluptuous, scantily clad women.

The graphic implies the little fellow possesses an extravagantly large phallic organ.

Usually one of the women is sitting on his lap with an overwhelmed expression, while the scrumpy little fellow has this wry satisfied smirk on his face.

But what I can't understand is what the white male students who wear the T-shirts find so fascinating or amusing about the cartoon.

It is quite well known that white men are least endowed in that regard.

As a black male who is puzzled about this Caucasian cultural icon, can you help me to understand the basis of this cartoon's popularity?

Signed,
Earnest Curious

Dear Earnest,

First, I haven't seen these T-shirts out and about, but I'll take your word for it.

Second, as to why the cartoon is popular, I would suggest it is the reflection of insecurity on the part of men as a whole rather than only Caucasians.

Third, regarding the notion that "it is quite well known that white men are least endowed in that regard" — you're referring to size here I assume — I'm wondering what book of myths and crocks of bull you've been reading.

Race does not affect the size of anything. Black, white, Asian, Indian or otherwise, everyone has an equal shot at having that "Big Johnson."

Film builds romance

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

"Sleepless in Seattle" creates an aura of fleeting hope for the hopeless romantic in each of us. This movie titillates the heart and manipulates viewers' emotion, turning fantasy to reality and creating faith in destiny.

REVIEW

The real manipulation of the movie begins when Jonah (Ross Malinger), desperate to find a new wife for his bereaved father, calls into a national radio show as a part of his quest.

In a twist of destiny, Annie Reed, played by Meg Ryan, hears the boy's emotional appeal. She then hears Samuel Baldwin's (played by Tom Hanks) testimony after he is coaxed to the phone by his son:

"I'm going to get up every morning and breath in and out. ... and after a while, I won't have to think how great and perfect I had it for a while."

Jonah is convinced Annie is the woman for him and his dad. He relentlessly goads his father, refusing to accept no for an answer. Sam is meanwhile struggling to go on with his life, haunted by the memories of the love he lost.

Annie, engaged to a big schmuck, Walter, longs for the magical love she is sure exists because of watching "An Affair to Remember" too many times. Annie becomes obsessed and convinced her fate is Sam.

Annie's best friend, Becky, sums it up best by saying, "That's your problem — you want to be in love in a movie."

What ensues is an intricate play on the audience's emotion by using not-so-subtle foreshadowing, dropping signs of fate all over Baltimore and Seattle. Through the use of hope, this movie shows Sam and Annie leading parallel lives, making for a wonderful creation of a fantasy romance.

The audience is kept in itching suspense as it waits for the perfect romance to occur. It is possibly the greatest love-in-waiting story created.

COLLEGIAN'S DAILY DESTINIES By Gypsy Rose

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Wear your tiger-striped undies underneath your true purple colors. The game could be exciting.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Throw an all-weekend game party. Invite the seniors and Coach Synder for post-game drinks.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Imitate the Iowa streaker if you want to become famous.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Pitch a tent for the game tonight and roll around with your friends.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Save yourself from an ulcer. Skip the game and go to a movie instead.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Drink hot chocolate with your favorite schnapps. It will make the game a lot more exciting.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Start a titanic wave at the game. You'll be the first to succeed.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Save your pennies. We might go to the Copper Bowl.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Start a trend. Wear a McGrowl towel on your head.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Palm trees and sunshine are in the future. Get your swimwear out and start saving up.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Take blankets to the game and cuddle up.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Yell like hell at the game. Make it one the seniors won't forget.

Singer inherits blues

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

You can still listen to Stevie Ray Vaughn, but he's dead.

Tom Principato has distinguished himself from most great blues singers simply by the fact that he is not dead, and his latest album, "Tip of the Iceberg," establishes him as a candidate to inherit the legacy left by the deceased Vaughn .

The lyrics Principato works in between his extended jams are typical blues of the my-baby-left-me variety, but his delivery just lacks the passion found on an old Robert Johnson or Howlin' Wolf record.

This is not Principato's fault.

The first law of applied blues theory says to be a great blues musician, it sure doesn't hurt to be dead.

Most great blues performers have lived in relative obscurity, only to achieve fame and sell records after assuming room temperature.

The blues had its origin in the songs black slaves in America would sing in and out of the fields.

That is a feeling and a passion that is rarely recreated in 1993.

You can't blame Tom Principato for trying, though.

The music he's produced is very adequate blues-rock, highly versed in the tradition of Stevie Ray and others of the southern blues-rock genre.

Principato has put a tight band together, featuring Principato's screaming blues guitar and the loose Hammond organ of Kevin McKendree.

Principato shows a more classical side on the instrumental "Goodbye For Now."

The song features his lone guitar in a sad, chilling melody.

"Tip of the Iceberg" shows Principato's desire and initiative to achieve blues success, but it does not shine above anything other than being just another blues album.

Speaker redefines leadership

Professionalism, incentives help business growth

LEIGH NEVANS
Collegian

The former dean of the College of Business Administration gave the last in a series of speeches for Blue Key's Leadership Week.

Randy Pohlman, director of human resources and corporate services of Koch Industries, spoke at 2:30 p.m. in the Union Big 8 Room.

Pohlman was the dean of the College of Business Administration for six years before taking a job with Koch Industries in 1990.

He focused on the new style of management in use at Koch Industries, called market-based management.

It is a management approach that uses organizing principles and a system of individual rights and responsibilities to provide the best use of knowledge and decisions that motivates people to advance the common goal, he said.

This is going to be the paradigm of the future, Pohlman said.

Theories like total quality management all have their place, but they are not the answers, he said.

"Instead of evaluating people all the time, why don't you lead them?" Pohlman said.

"We try to take principles of a free society and bring it inside our company and run it like a free society," he said.

As a part of its management style, Koch supports issues such as property rights, social coordination, focusing on the customer, organizational learning and incentives aligned to net present value.

Jelena Jovanovic, senior in psychology and co-director of Blue Key Leadership Week, said the lecturers brought different attitudes and perspectives to campus.

"We had a real diverse group of speakers," she said.

"Each brought a different view to campus. We wanted speakers who represented all the colleges," Jovanovic said.

Jason Kastner, senior in food science and president of Blue Key, said the diverse group of speakers presented different perspectives.

"We've had different people speaking of different aspects of leadership," he said.

The speakers were graduates of K-State, Kastner said.

"They're all K-State graduates that have gone on to succeed in different areas," he said. "I've been pleased with the turnout and pleased with the speakers."

'Sunshine Boys' in its prime

BROOKE PATTERSON
Collegian

Manhattan Civic Theatre's production of Neil Simon's "The Sunshine Boys" is one filled with charming and endearing portrayals. The characters created in the play are those that imprint a semi-lasting impression in the audience's mind.

The opening scene reveals that Willie Clark (Dwight Nesmith) and Al Lewis (Shel Edelman) were, for 43 years, part of the once-great vaudeville act, the Sunshine Boys. The two, who have been divided by bitterness for 11 years, are brought together by Willie's nephew, Ben Silverman (Blair Jones) to perform in a TV special.

The anger dividing them is Willie's unrelenting grudge toward Al for retiring from the act and leaving Willie's career high and dry.

"When he retired himself, he retired me," Willie said.

What ensues is a comical, gut-wrenching look inside the intricacies plaguing the relationship of two belligerent old men who are past the glorious prime that could not last long enough.

The amusing dialogue between the two witty duffers becomes trite at times, which is very effective in conveying the petty things these two stubborn old farts will not let die.

The characters created by Nesmith and Edelman are delightfully real. The unresolved issues between them are never presented in too serious a light. Humor shades the serious moments, yet never blatantly so.

Nesmith portrays Willie as this crotchety, yet endearing older man. He is gruff with a charming edge. This character is very enjoyable to watch.

Edelman characterizes Al as the less-than-enthusiastic, absent-minded and not-so-willing participant. However, he is more willing to swallow his pride than Willie is.

All in all, "The Sunshine Boys" is a worthwhile evening spent in the theater. The production has heart and soul, elements simply not found just anywhere.

'Fools' offers look at other side

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

"A Gathering of Fools" goes behind the scenes of William Shakespeare's "Macbeth" and attempts to answer the question, Lady Macbeth: Scheming bitch or victim of fate?

A little of both, as it turns out.

Charlotte MacFarland, assistant professor of speech and writer and director of the play, transforms the character of Lady Macbeth from the rather one-dimensional portrayal of a woman blinded by ambition to a woman torn by fears, divided loyalties and determination.

The play begins in the castle of Duncan, King of Scotland. The men are away at war, and the women are waiting, except Lady Macbeth, who has dressed as a man and gone to the front.

This behavior symbolizes the personality of Lady Macbeth, played by Laura Camien, senior in theater. She acts with disregard to the consequences.

Her free spirit is not appreciated by some of the other ladies, who must live within the constricting boundaries of their society. Her one friend, Lady Macduff, played by Renee Hochanadel, junior in theater, is as passive and sunny as Lady Macbeth is forceful and dark.

The women, chafing at having nothing to do, snipe at each other. Lady Bledsoe, played by Caisha Williams, sophomore in theater, is old, stooped and incontinent. She has boiled life down to its basics: belching and farting. She wanders about waiting to die, and truly, it's a wonder someone hasn't already killed her.

The nature of men is grist for the women's mill. They are always off fighting and killing. If women were in charge, there would be no war.

In the next moment, Lady Banquo, played by Erin Mansur-Smith, senior in theater, and Lady Bledsoe are pulling each other's hair and rolling down the stairs. Ah, sweet femininity! The Fool, played by Scott McLean, junior in journalism and mass communications, philosophizes, "Women's greatest enemy is neither men nor old age. It's other women."

Lady Macbeth's humble background and bareness make her desperate not to lose all she's gained by her own cunning. Her fears make it impossible to enjoy what she has.

"A Gathering of Fools" is about the rise and fall of a charismatic, bitchy and human woman. The last two acts are strong and emotional.

Hochanadel seemed to breathe light, and Camien was very charismatic and sensual. The play worked best when these two were together.

There was no clear theme to the play. It might have been summed up by one of the characters: "It's terrible being a woman." However, MacFarland seems to say that it's far more interesting, too.

Vitamins suggested for HIV

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The AIDS virus may destroy the ability of the body to process a corrosive type of oxygen molecule, leading to an acceleration of the fatal disease. The solution may be some type of vitamin therapy, experts said.

Scientists at a National Institutes of Health conference said studies have suggested strongly that the AIDS virus blocks the body's normal defenses against oxygen free radicals, naturally occurring molecules that can be highly destructive of cells if not kept in proper balance.

Oxygen free radicals are normally neutralized in the body by the so-called antioxidant nutrients — such as a betacarotene and vitamins A, C and E. But Dr. Howard Greenspan, chairman of the NIH conference, said the AIDS virus prevents the normal absorption and use of these nutrients in the body.

"The virus has some mechanism that shuts down the body's defense against the overproduction of these free radicals," Greenspan said Wednesday at a news conference.

Rudeness takes its toll

VICKY TILLIER
Collegian

It might start out to be a wonderful day, but someone will come along and ruin it.

"You'll have a thousand things on your mind," said John Bohning, sophomore in graphic design and theater.

"You're in a hurry to get to class, and another student will steal your parking space right out from underneath of you," Bohning said.

Bohning said he recently came close to having a nervous breakdown in his public-speaking class because he lost several of his materials and did not have a chance to study due to his heavy work and class schedule.

He also deals with all kinds of stress working at Wal-Mart, Bohning said.

"They're screaming at me over the intercom to get carts off the lot and to handle customer courtesy calls," he said.

"I have to be janitor, butler and maid all wrapped up into a neat little package, and, see, it gets on your nerves."

The overwhelming stress makes him value human life very little, Bohning said.

"I'm walking around," he said, "Like man, I don't want to be nice to you."

The stresses of life, conflicting roles, working and carrying heavy class loads at the same time are a few of the things that cause rudeness, said Rick Scheidt, associate professor of human development and family studies.

"There are probably as many reasons for rude behavior as there are examples of what rude behavior may be," he said.

According to Webster's Third New International Dictionary, rude implies either a general and habitual deficiency in manners, grace, or polish, or a coarse insensitivity to another's feelings.

Rude behavior could be defined as just another one of those daily hassles people encounter, Scheidt said.

"We have got a lot of evidence that those so-called daily hassles of life grate on people's nerves more and are more stressful in the long run than the so-called major life events," he said.

Scheidt said examples of daily hassles that cause other people stress may range from getting telephone calls during all hours of the night to trying to cross a busy street or straightening out a pile of bills.

Melissa Wells, junior in accounting, said a professor told her class any time someone needed help to just come see her.

"When I went to see her, though, she practically bit my head off," she said.

Students and professors live in different phenomenal worlds, Scheidt said.

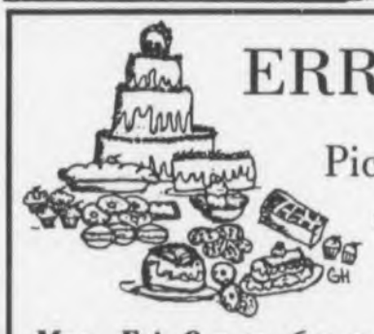
"I don't think that professors give enough thinking to the total context of what may be going on in the life of a particular student at a particular time outside of his or her class," he said.

"Also, on the other side, students oftentimes don't realize that professors have lives too.

Scheidt said professors and students don't communicate with each other.

"Students complain to students about professors," Scheidt said. "Professors complain to another professor, but the students and professors don't talk to each other."

Scheidt said the lives of students outside the classroom compete with the responsibilities and duties professors expect students to fulfill.



"Professors who don't cut students some slack by appreciating that other perspective are in a confrontational heading that isn't necessarily a healthy one," he said.

People have different ways of coping with stress, Scheidt said.

"Oftentimes rude behavior may occur because individuals are under a great deal of stress, overburdened, overloaded and experiencing a little bit of burnout," he said.

Bandits kill 15, hurt 13 in heist

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Bandits held up a truck convoy and shot dead 15 Somalis and wounded 13 before escaping with 10 of the trucks, U.N. officials said Sunday.

Italian troops gave chase, recovering four trucks and handing over four of the bandits to the Somali police, U.N. representative Farouk Mawlawi said.

It was not clear how many bandits attacked or whether any were wounded.

The convoy of 14 trucks was on its way back to Mogadishu after unloading at an Italian base Friday night. The Somalis were believed to be carrying cargo under contract for the United Nations, Mawlawi said.

U.N. officials dismissed the possibility that the attack may have been aimed at the United Nations and said it underscored a rise in banditry.

On Saturday, armed bandits hijacked a U.N. vehicle, killing an American civilian and wounding two other U.N. employees before fleeing with the car.

A memorial service was held Sunday for Kai Lincoln, 24, of Hoboken, N.J.

"There appears to be an increased possibility of banditry within Mogadishu," U.N. military representative Capt. Tim McDavitt said.

"A lot of the militia, a lot of the people out there fighting for the militia, are presently inactive. Perhaps they don't have anything better to do," he said.

Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid, leader of one of Mogadishu's two strongest rival clans, ordered a unilateral cease-fire against U.N. forces in October after a firefight Oct. 3 killed 18 American soldiers and an estimated 300 Somalis.

Senate serves as student advocate

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

This is the first in a three-part series about Student Senate. The series will explore how Senate works, how the senators represent their constituents and how the student body interacts with the senators.

Student Senate.

Every K-State student has heard or read about it, complained about it or even become involved with it, but many don't understand Student Senate.

Student Senate is the legislative body of the Student Government Association.

About 60 students from the eight colleges, such as Arts and Sciences and Agriculture, represent the student population at K-State.

The number of senators from each college is based on the number of students in the colleges. Senators are elected by their colleges and serve one-year terms.

Michael Henry, Arts and Sciences senator, said there are four main charges of SGA: the allocation of the student activity fees, legislative affairs dealing with the state government (to get the best deals for tuition and financial aid), trying to provide services to students and making sure student voices are heard by the faculty.

The No. 1 concern of Student Senate is to represent the views and needs of K-State students, Coordinator of Student Activities and Services Tricia Nolfi said.

The purpose of Senate is to serve as the advocate of the student body, to work for students' concerns and to make sure students get the service they need. It also provides a linkage between students and faculty, students and the state, the Kansas Legislature and the Kansas Board of Regents, Nolfi said.

The power of that representation is often overlooked, Phil Anderson, faculty representative for Student Senate and professor of speech, said.

"Student Senate is the representative of 20,000 students," Anderson said. "My biggest frustration is that most of the student body is ignorant of or unaware of how much power Student Senate is capable of. Student Senate probably has more real power than Faculty Senate."

Susanna Wisdom, SAS secretary, said allocation of student fees is equally important as representation.

"One of the more important duties for them is, not only are they the representatives of the students, they allocate the money that comes in from student fees," Wisdom said.

"A bulk of what senate is concerned with is the allocation of money. When you're talking half a million dollars a year, it's a big issue."

Wisdom said a lot of students don't understand the allocations process.

"When Student Senate allocates money to groups, the students don't understand that it's merely a paper transfer. They come in the next day and ask, 'Where's my check?' It takes time. Because it needs to go through a whole process, we have to jump through all the hoops," she said.

"A bulk of what senate is concerned with is the allocation of money."

SUSANNA WISDOM
STUDENT ACTIVITIES SECRETARY

Students are not aware of some of these processes because they have not gotten involved with Student Senate. Students can take their concerns or questions to the SGA office or present them during the open period at the beginning of every weekly Senate meeting.

Senators are required to spend at least one hour in the office a week, to attend weekly meetings and to make visitations to various college councils.

Senators who have three unexcused absences from the Senate meetings can be impeached. Other grounds for impeachment include malfeasance (misconduct), misfeasance (improper and unlawful execution of an act that in itself is lawful and proper) and nonfeasance (failure to perform official duties).

A lot of dedication, time and knowledge are necessary to be a good senator, Nolfi said.

"They have to be able to manage time," she said. "There's a lot to be up on. They need to know what's going on in Senate and on campus. They'll be in here maybe four to five hours a day, not just a couple hours a week."

Office hours are spent keeping up with paperwork, getting in touch with constituents and researching information for legislation.

Writing legislation is one of the primary powers Student Senate has.

"Student Senate on this campus has the power to enact, write legislation on one of two things: a resolution of the body, which only commits the opinion of the body and doesn't execute action, or bills, which actually execute the action," Wisdom said.

UPCOMING EVENTS

Author to address future state of Africa

KRISTEN WELBORN
Collegian

Ama Ata Aidoo, African writer and poet, will speak at 7:30 p.m. Monday in Forum Hall as part of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series.

The Lou Douglas Lecture Series' primary focus is topics pertaining to social justice, human development, world peace and human spirit, said Gloria Rumsey, coordinator of the Lou Douglas Lecture Series.

A former committee member, who has since moved, had the opportunity to hear Ama Ata Aidoo speak in person and thought she would be an exciting poet and novelist, Rumsey said.

The lecture is titled "Images of Africa at Century's End."

"Aidoo will talk about images of Africa at century's end, and she will be able to fill us in on how it really feels to live in Africa and where it's going," Rumsey said.

Aidoo will be reading a selection of her literary works during a class in the Women's Studies Program while she is on campus.

Aidoo is a guest professor in the Department of English at Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio. Last semester, she was a guest professor in the Department of English at Hamilton College, Clinton, N.Y.

She was born in Ghana, and it was there she received most of her education. She is a writer, university teacher and consultant on Literature, Educational, Artistic and Gender Issues.

LECTURE

■ Ama Ata Aidoo, African writer and poet, will speak at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Union Forum Hall.

Her novel, "Changes," was the recipient of the 1992 Commonwealth Writer's Prize for Africa. Her most recent work is titled "An Angry Letter in January and Other Poems."

She has traveled widely, concentrating on concerns as an African woman, teacher and writer.

"She has a lyrical way of talking, almost like she's singing. She has a beautiful, gracious way of speaking," Rumsey said.

"Africa right now is on the brink of a major change. A person living there knows it from a totally different perspective. This world gets smaller all the time. Everyone needs to know as much about what's happening there first hand, because what happens there can have an effect on us," she said.

Overlay proposal to be debated

Students, staff, faculty invited to voice opinions

KIM DILLON
Collegian

Students interested in voicing their opinions about the proposed multicultural overlay will have their chance from noon to 2 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Courtyard.

A Multicultural Overlay Forum will be sponsored by the Union Program Council.

The main purpose of the forum is to inform the students of the process so far and to give them a chance to voice their opinions of how things should proceed, Jennifer Lee, advisor for Union Program Council, said.

Students, faculty and staff who have questions about the overlay or who do not really know what it is should attend the forum because there will be people there who can answer their questions, said Jerrod Roh, coordinator of the forum, member of multicultural committee for UPC and senior in secondary education.

FORUM

■ A Multicultural Overlay Forum will be from noon to 2 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Courtyard.

"It will be centered around the academic issue," Roh said.

Roh said he doesn't mind if the societal aspects of the proposal emerge, but he wants academics to be stressed. He does not want people to get angry with each other, Roh said.

Roh said people who support multiculturalism can still be against this proposal.

Arlo Biere, professor of agricultural economics and a member of the panel at the forum, said he is concerned about the vagueness of the current proposal.

He said because of the vagueness of the proposal he can't tell whether it promotes diversity within unity or greater fractionalization within society.

There are some general principles in the proposal that should be more specific before it is done, Biere said.

"I hope that students show an interest and take the opportunity to show the Faculty Senate how they feel," Lee said.

CHINESE AIRLINER CRASHES

Heavy snow may have caused a passenger airliner to crash as it was preparing to land in western China, killing at least 11 people, Chinese news reports said Sunday.

The Chinese News Service in Hong Kong said 60 people also were injured when the MD-82 aircraft crashed and burned in a rice paddy about half a mile from the airport in Urumqi, capital of Xinjiang province bordering Russia.

The plane, belonging to China's Northern Airlines, crashed Saturday afternoon as it was arriving from Shenyang in eastern China via Beijing. The plane was carrying 92 passengers, nine crew members and an aviation official.

Cloud's population to decline by 2030

CONCORDIA (AP) — For two counties so close to each other, Riley and Cloud counties couldn't be much more different.

On one hand is Riley County, young and booming with the nation's third-highest concentration of young adults thanks to Kansas State University and Fort Riley.

At the other end of the demographic scale is Cloud County, with a graying population that has some people concerned about the county's future.

Cloud County, just 30 miles to the west, has the nation's third-highest concentration of adults 75 or older. State demographers project the population will decline by 30 percent by the year 2030.

"What I make of these figures is that we've got to get off our duffs and go to work," said Kirk Lowell, the new director of Cloud County Development Corp. "We've got some negative groups here who say we're dying. Yes, the door is shutting on us, and I say someone has to put a foot in it."

"Everything here is geared to older people," said Cloud County Sheriff Larry Bergstrom.

Nearly everyone in the county is concerned about the county's declining birth rate, which for the past three years has lagged far behind deaths.

Sex abuse allegations discussed by bishops

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alleged victims of sexual abuse by priests asked the nation's Roman Catholic bishops Saturday to change their focus from concern for abusers to concern about the needs of the abused.

But after a three-hour meeting with five members of the bishop's committee, which is considering the sex abuse problem, the only concrete agreement was to meet again next spring.

The session took place just one day after Cardinal Joseph Bernardin, archbishop of Chicago, was accused by a 34-year-old man of abusing him sexually 17 years ago. Bernardin arrived at the hotel where the meeting was held just before it took place but did not attend it.

He has forcefully denied all of the allegations.

"It was a very positive, tough meeting, a continuation of the dialogue," Bishop John Kinney of Bismarck, N.D., said. "It is tough to hear the stories of people who have been hurt by the church."

"We feel the bishops are putting their time and energy and focus on the priests, and we feel the needs of the victims are falling by the wayside," said Barbara Blaine, of Chicago, president of the Survivor Network of those Abused by Priests.

Pope blesses crowd in post-fall appearance

The pope dislocated and partially fractured his shoulder when he tumbled down four stairs on Thursday. Doctors told him to keep the shoulder bandaged for about a month.

"The incident was another chance to unite myself ... with brothers and sisters who are suffering," the pontiff said in his first public appearance since leaving a Rome hospital Friday.

The 73-year-old pope appeared in good health during the 15-minute address from his quarters overlooking the square.

"From my heart, I want to express my gratitude to all who immediately provided the necessary medical attention," he said.

He did not mention the sexual assault accusations against a prominent U.S. cardinal.

Painkiller addiction puts Jackson in hiding

LONDON (AP) — "Jacko: You can't hide!," headlined the Sunday Mirror.

But superstar Michael Jackson appeared to be winning his hide-and-seek game with the world's media on Sunday.

Jackson dropped out of sight on Friday after announcing he was cutting short his "Dangerous" world concert tour to get treatment for an addiction to painkillers.

News reports said he left Mexico City for London and, possibly, Switzerland, where his friend, actress Elizabeth Taylor, owns a chalet.

But there were no sightings of the elusive singer or his entourage.

The clinic, which provides drug rehabilitation treatment and guarantees privacy, resolutely refused to say whether the star was there.

Former Kansas governor John Carlin speaks to an electronic circuit-control lecture class Friday morning in Durland Hall. Carlin spoke to students about making flexible choices when looking for a job after graduation. After the speech, he fielded questions from the class.

Graduation advice

Former governor discusses job searches, NAFTA, opportunities

TARA FOSTER
Collegian

A combination of politics and business were the topic of an informal discussion presented by former Gov. John Carlin Friday morning in an electronic circuit-control class.

Carlin graduated almost 30 years ago from K-State with a degree in dairy science.

Since serving as Governor of Kansas from 1979 to '87, Carlin has started a business in Lawrence dealing with research in superconductivity.

"We are developing prototypes, and we may have our first product out next year," he said.

When considering a job after college, Carlin said, people need to be flexible in their choices. Not taking a job because a person wants to live in a certain area or wants to do work in a certain field is not smart.

"Don't get yourself focused in. You're going to have to be very open," he said.

He said when he looks for an engineer for his small business, he attempts to find one who can do a variety of tasks and someone who can communicate and work with others.

"Don't miss out on an opportunity to broaden your skills," Carlin said. "It's incredibly important to take advantage of every opportunity."

He said 30 years ago if a person had a degree, there was a job waiting, but not today.

Another quality employers look at when hiring is whether a person can get the job done. A person may graduate from college with honors, but if a person cannot deliver, the person will not be of much use, Carlin said.

"What is most important is what you can do," he said.

After speaking, Carlin fielded questions from members of the class.

When he was asked about his views on NAFTA, Carlin said he is philosophically in favor of the agreement but has not taken a position on it. He said he believes to be a good politician, a person must establish a career outside of politics. People who have an interest in it should get involved, he said.

"Take advantage of the opportunities to learn about it," he said.

Carlin said he supports term limits because they increase a person's opportunity to be in politics.

"If we have term limits, we can attract better people," he said.

He said people in government will not admit this, however.

U.N. doctors to help disabled

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The United Nations rushed in doctors and soldiers Sunday to protect hundreds of handicapped patients caught in a no-man's land between Bosnian government and Croat troops.

A team of Danish and Canadian doctors and nurses was dispatched to two hospitals in the Fojnica area, 25 miles west of Sarajevo, after most of the regular staff fled.

The team was to join Canadian medics and peacekeepers already there in the hospitals for mentally and physically handicapped patients, including about 60 children.

"We're not going to stand by and see people suffer who cannot help themselves," said David Fillingham, a representative at U.N. headquarters in Kiseljak, just west of Sarajevo.

By Sunday evening, the medical reinforcements had not arrived after being held up at various checkpoints, Fillingham said.

He said the United Nations almost certainly would not attempt to evacuate the patients because they have nowhere to take the people.

U.N. patrols in Fojnica reported late Sunday that some government troops remained in the nearly deserted central Bosnian town. Croat forces had moved to Fojnica's outskirts by late Sunday, Fillingham said.

U.N. monitors were unable to enter the town itself, but recorded at least 40 artillery rounds fired around Fojnica on Sunday, he added.

Bosnian army sources in Sarajevo acknowledged that government units had pulled back from some positions in Fojnica, but said the army was not conceding control of the town and might try a counterattack.

Croat and Bosnian government forces were allied early in the war, which started in April 1992 when Bosnian Serbs rebelled over a Croat-Muslim vote to secede from Serb-led Yugoslavia. The alliance collapsed as Serbs and Croats began cooperating on plans to partition Bosnia.

As many as 200,000 people have died in the fighting.

Heavy Croat shelling on Saturday led to the capture of several villages south of Fojnica, and British peacekeepers also reported a massive Croat troop buildup just 12 miles west.

Fighting was reported north of Sarajevo in the Vares region, where government troops have been battling Bosnian Croat and Bosnian Serb forces, said Maj. Manuel Cabezas, a U.N. representative in the Bosnian capital. Bosnian radio reported Serb attacks in the central towns of Maglaj and Olovo.

A seminar for mothers and daughters
You'll always be my baby.
Whether you're a mother, a daughter, or both, the bond between a mother and a daughter can be one of the most fulfilling and cherished relationships of a lifetime. However, we also may, at times, wish we could trade our mother or daughter in for a "new and improved" model. But because we can't, we must learn to cope.
Mothers and Daughters: Growing Together, a seminar for mothers and daughters sponsored by The Women's Program at Menninger, will:
- explore the mother/daughter relationship
- provide ways to communicate effectively with your mother/daughter
- suggest strategies for initiating change in your relationship
Meredith Titus, PhD, and Ellen Safier, MSW, are the featured presenters.

Political club funds should remain at their current levels

Student Senate is on the verge of making a monumental mistake when it decides the fate of political-club funding.

At the Oct. 14 Student Senate meeting, a group of senators decided it was a waste of student-fee money to fund the three political groups that are associated with the three parties the state of Kansas recognizes, Young Democrats, College Republicans and Libertarians.

Not only is this a bad idea, but it would also fail to accomplish its objective of saving students' money.

If these groups' budgets are added together, they come to $2,734.40 for the spring semester. That might sound like a lot of money, but remember during spring allocations, Student Senate will give out more than $30,000 to more than 20 clubs and councils.

This club money comes out of the $8 all students pay in club fees when they pay tuition. If you divide the total budgets of the political clubs by the total amount of spending, you would see students would save nine cents on the dollar.

There would be no significant savings. In fact, if Senate did cut the money from its budgets, it would probably not give this pocket change back to the students; instead it would more than likely spend it on some other club or project.

These facts should be enough to persuade anyone from cutting these budgets to save money.

Some people believe these clubs are not very involved with the campus and do not have large memberships. Again, these arguments are incorrect.

All three of these groups are among the most active on campus. During election years, they bring candidates to the campus, help in voter registration and provide other services. During non-election years, the clubs sponsor awareness weeks. For instance, the Young Democrats had a political-awareness week last month and Rep. Joseph Kennedy, D-Mass., as a keynote speaker.

Some might say these groups are too partisan and are unable to attract big crowds. The most recent example that defies this claim was Kennedy's speech Oct. 1 in Forum Hall. Newspapers across the state reported on his speech and of the standing room only in Forum Hall.

The opponents of funding political clubs have pointed to a recent California Supreme Court decision that said students must be allowed to choose whether they donate to political clubs.

Kansas Attorney General Bob Stephen said in a legal opinion that Kansas University may collect mandatory fees and give some of the money to political organizations. His opinion overrules any effect the California case might have had.

We hope Student Senate will see the value of these clubs and realize the students would be the big losers if their budgets are cut.

Technology our next key to learning

Growing up, I was always fascinated by the idea that our technology would soon outstrip our wisdom and be the doom of the human race. There were the examples of the titanic, omniscient machines forcing their wills upon the meek populace or super-sentient computers wreaking havoc by controlling all means of life.

It fascinated me because I simply couldn't believe it.

Yes, we do live in a world where super communications highways are becoming a reality, where our technology can solve problems in seconds that once took years. As our knowledge grows, our world shrinks. And of course, many people are resistant to this idea.

They are resistant because of the idea we will be destroyed by our own insistence on knowledge. In this day and age, with a world at our fingertips and effort at a minimum, a little learning is now a realistically dangerous thing. Or so they say.

I can't see it this way. As a student teacher, I work with multimedia (the new catch-phrase) every day. This is a computer system that allows a student to use CD/ROMs, a variety of programs, laser disks, video and graphics all at once. Instead of producing a project merely consisting of a long speech and some pie charts, they can teach other students (and quite often me) with a stunning variety of pictures, graphics and text.

Instead of students being passive receptors to all our new technology, they are becoming active parts in its manipulation.

I find this to be fantastic. CD/ROMs carry the equivalent information of 350 floppy disks. These disks have text, pictures, actual video and a variety of sounds. It's been called "edutainment." I call it taking advantage of what the world has to offer and learning all you can from it.

JARED SAVAGE
OPINION PAGE EDITOR

And in our world of sound bytes and special effects, education must keep up or become archaic. "Full-motion video is so much more entertaining than just text," said Kimball Brown, an industry analyst with Info Corp. in Santa Clara, Calif. "The more engrossed you are in the content, the more you learn."

If our students are learning what they need to know to succeed in a rapidly evolving world by interacting with their learning environment, then so be it. It is natural to fear what is not understood, but if we allow our students to grow with this new technology, then they need not fear anything.

As for my students, they have brought a whole new dimension to learning in the classroom. We've seen slide presentations on the destruction of the world's rain forests, laser-disk shows on the Israeli-PLO conundrum, an in-depth look at colonial America through CD/ROM presentations and an overview of the German reunification through computer graphics, maps and text. And most of these students learned the tricks of the trade only during this first semester.

When I was in high school, computers were for the super-brains, who walked with an air of superiority and looked upon the other students as peons. Now, computers know no age, no race, no I.Q. They are there to be used, not feared, as tools of education.

I look forward to the future of education with hope when I see what my students do with this technology. If we can ignore the Nintendos and Game Boys and focus on educational and entertaining materials, then education can only improve.

And I, for one, will do all I can to dismiss the fear and facilitate the learning of every student who walks in my classroom.

INSTEAD OF STUDENTS BEING PASSIVE RECEPTORS TO ALL OUR NEW TECHNOLOGY, THEY ARE BECOMING ACTIVE PARTS IN ITS MANIPULATION.

READERS WRITE

▶ NEWS STORIES

A little more human interest and a bit less generic news, please

Editor,

After reading the Collegian almost every day this school year, I have noticed there has been a lot of articles issued by the Associated Press and not written by the Collegian staff. I believe this may be attributed to the laziness and inability of the staff not going out and looking for local interest stories. I subscribe to the Kansas City Star, and if I want to read what the Associated Press has to say, then I'll just read the Star. There's plenty of human interest right here on campus or in the community.

I'm not suggesting that you become a totally local paper, because national and international news is important. What I am suggesting is that if you use the articles that come from the AP, you might want to read the articles before you print them.

More specifically, there was a front-page headline in the Collegian on Nov. 8 that read "Jewish settlers protest Rabbi's death." If anyone would have taken the time to read the first sentence of the article they would have seen it and said, "Gunmen open fire on a car carrying a prominent right-winged rabbi, killing his driver and injuring the rabbi."

It is obvious from the headline that someone didn't even know what the article was about before assigning a front-page headline to it. Someone must have attempted to read the article so as to pull out the quote that was enlarged and placed to the side. I know the "good stuff" never comes at the beginning of the article, maybe just the topic sentence or something unimportant like that.

I know the knowledge of Judaism at K-State among students and administration is very limited, and being one of the few Jewish students on this campus, the last thing we need is the Collegian reporting false information concerning our people. Everyone makes mistakes. All I ask is that the mistakes be fewer in number.

▶ RAPE

Women have right to equal protection under the law from violation

Editor,

Recently, I had a conversation that really scared me. A professor in my department stated that he thought it would be better if a woman were raped than if she defended herself with a gun. The very thought of this is utterly revolting. To expect women to accept rape without resistance just to protect the rapist is a prime example of what is wrong with our criminal-justice system. The answer to the crime problem is not to make people easier victims, and the No. 1 priority is not the safety of the criminal!

People who think the victims of rape should submit are absolutely demented. I wonder if these are the same people who used to say the woman should just lay back and enjoy it!

The people who have different ideas about specific gun-control measures, criminal sentencing or items such as the death penalty than you do are not the enemy. The enemy is the idea that honest, law-abiding citizens should have fewer rights than the criminal. If someone would rather stand by and watch his wife or daughter be raped than take a chance on hurting the rapist, let him, but we must not let this twisted idea of justice be forced on the rest of us.

▶ ATOM POWER

The benefits of nuclear power are highlighted in a week of activities

Editor,

I would like to take this time to inform everyone of 'ANSWERING,' American Nuclear Society's Week Explaining Really Interesting Nuclear Gains. ANSWERING has been organized by the student chapter of the American Nuclear Society to inform the public about peaceful uses of the atom.

ANSWERING begins today and will end next Monday. We have a week full of activities on and off campus. Today through Thursday there will be tables in the Union from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. explaining different aspects of the atom. Today, the table features research applications using the atom. Tomorrow, it will highlight nuclear power, and on Wednesday radioactive waste disposal will be shown.

Thursday is perhaps the most important day in ANSWERING. Engineer Terry Garrett from the Wolf Creek Nuclear Power Plant will be giving a talk from noon to 1 p.m. in Union 212. Mr. Garrett will be discussing how Wolf Creek works and its effect on the environment.

After Thursday, our activities will go outside the campus. Friday, ANS members will talk to area junior and senior high schools about nuclear power and research applications. Finally, the U.S. Navy will be having a meeting at 6 p.m. Monday at Valentino's Restaurant informing students about the Nuclear Navy program. Pizza will be provided to those interested in applying.

I encourage everyone to stop by our tables this week and listen to Terry Garrett speak on Thursday. Our goal for this week is to inform the public about the peaceful atom and eliminate some of the myths concerning nuclear power, radiation and waste. I hope to see you there!

Puerto Ricans vote 'no' on statehood

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Supporters of continued commonwealth status for Puerto Rico defeated those who wanted statehood in a vote Sunday that turned back the strongest movement this century for full union with the United States.

"The people spoke, and I will obey them," said Gov. Pedro Rossello, who spearheaded the statehood campaign, in acknowledging defeat to a speech of thousands of supporters.

But he added, "This is a struggle that will go on."

With votes counted from 99.7 percent of the precincts — 1,779 of 1,784 — official results showed continuing commonwealth status receiving 821,235 votes, or 48.4 percent; statehood 783,843, or 46.2 percent; and independence 75,034, or 4.4 percent.

The remaining ballots either were left blank or were disqualified.

Ethnic pride and economic concerns were among the main issues in the non-binding referendum.

Statehood supporters said it would bring billions of additional dollars in federal aid and played to Puerto Ricans' fears by saying their U.S. citizenship might be lost if they stayed a commonwealth.

But commonwealth supporters contended that the island's culture and language might be lost in statehood and noted that becoming a state would mean Puerto Ricans would have to pay federal taxes.

Although the margin of victory for commonwealth status was less than 3 percentage points, "this was a clear repudiation of statehood," Miguel Hernandez Agosto, leader of the pro-commonwealth Popular Democratic Party, said at a celebration following the vote.

Thousands of commonwealth supporters filled the streets and started a blocks-long caravan. One of the celebrants, Nereida Rodriguez of the central city of Caguas, said commonwealth changed the poor, sugar-farming island into an industrial success, and she was forever grateful.

Screaming over salsa music and honking horns, Rodriguez, 56, said, "We've affirmed that we're Americans — but we're Puerto Ricans, too. We have our own separate Olympic teams, our own Puertoricaness.

"See this flag," she said, pointing to her single-starred, red-white-and-blue Puerto Rican banner. "This is my flag."

Political status has been hotly debated here almost since the moment U.S. troops captured the Caribbean island from Spain in 1898. Despite heavy rains, about 75 percent of the 2.3 million eligible voters turned out.

Celeste Benitez, campaign director of the pro-commonwealth Popular Democratic party, credited the heavy turnout to a party campaign of calling 20,000 supporters a day to bring out the vote.

Sunday's results may stall the recent momentum toward statehood, which had the support of former presidents Reagan, Bush and Ford. The vote was called by Rossello after his election last year.

Although the referendum was not binding, President Clinton said he would respect whatever position the voters favored.

Puerto Rico became a commonwealth with some autonomy in 1952, two years after Puerto Rican nationalists tried to assassinate President Harry Truman.

Rossello, however, characterized the narrowness of the loss as an indication that his movement is gaining. The vote came closer to the truth than ever before, he said.

The race was closely watched by District of Columbia residents, also in line for statehood, as well as the U.S. mainland's 22 million Hispanics, 2.6 million of them Puerto Rican.

In the last plebiscite on status in 1967, 67 percent of voters opted to maintain commonwealth status, known in Spanish as "free associated state."

As a commonwealth, Puerto Rico elects a non-voting representative to Congress and has no vote for president. Statehood would have allowed it to elect at least six Congressmen, as well as two senators.

Puerto Ricans welcomed U.S. Gen. Nelson Miles when his troops landed on the island in 1898, but his promises to bring freedom and democracy to Puerto Rico turned sour under a series of American-born governors. Luis Munoz Marin became the first Puerto Rican governor in 1946 and ushered in a period of some self-rule with commonwealth status six years later.

Museum focuses on space program

KIMBERLY HELFING
Collegian

The Dwight D. Eisenhower Library dedicated a new exhibit Saturday commemorating the 35th anniversary of a bill that created the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Eisenhower was instrumental in getting the U.S. space program started and in getting money allocated for the program, Dennis Medina, museum curator, said.

Although targeted toward children, the exhibit appeals to all ages, Medina said.

"Everything is very simple," Medina said. "We tried to select things commonly asked such as 'What do they (astronauts) eat?' and 'How do they go to the bathroom?'"

Items displayed include a variety of spacesuits, spacecraft parts and models of U.S. spacecraft dating from the 1950s.

Miscellaneous items such as a sleeping bag for astronauts that resembles a body bag and moon rock from Apollo 15 are also shown.

One of two X-15 flight suits worn by Maj. Michael James Adams, killed in a X-15 accident on Nov. 13, 1967, during his testing of the X-15 rocket-powered researched plane is displayed.

Historical items about the Russian space program were displayed, including political cartoons and newspaper clippings dealing with the Russian Sputnik and a model of Vostak 1, the first manned space flight launched by the Russians on May 12, 1961. A Russian in-flight jacket and Russian communication cap is also displayed.

Medina said the Russians were much more secretive about space program than the United States, and that the number of Russian astronauts killed is unknown.

Many of the items exhibited are borrowed from the Kansas Cosmosphere and Space Center in Hutchinson as well as several presidential libraries. The Johnson Space Center in Houston, Texas, as well as the Smithsonian also loaned items to the Eisenhower museum for the exhibit.

"It's a topical subject, and it's still going on," Medina said.

The NASA exhibit will continue until the end of October 1994.

History 101 — Cats make holiday plans for 2nd time, await invitation from Aloha or Copper

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

Got any holiday plans?

Well, cancel them all — K-State is going bowling.

For only the second time in 98 years, the K-State football team is going to a postseason bowl game.

The Cats assured themselves a spot Saturday when they beat the Missouri Tigers 31-21 at KSU Stadium.

"It was good because it solidified our bowl bid," Coach Bill Snyder said, "but our goal is to play in the best bowl possible and to finish as high as possible in the conference. Personally, it magnifies last week's loss at Iowa State."

The win moved the Cats to 7-2-1 on the season, their best 10-game record since the 1934 team finished 7-2-1.

After the game, most K-State players were talking about finishing higher than fourth place in the Big Eight Conference. A fourth-place finish would place the Cats in the Copper Bowl.

The Cats still have a chance to play in the Aloha Bowl, which picks third in the Big Eight. Snyder said the only way to get the opportunity to play in the Aloha Bowl is to beat Oklahoma State next week.

"With the win and getting to the bowl game doesn't mean we have to overlook Oklahoma State," Snyder said. "We told our players, 'Yes we've solidified a bowl spot, but our goal has been to play in the very best bowl, and to finish as high as we can in the conference'."

In the third quarter, the Cats' bowl hopes were on the line, as Missouri fought back from a 10-0 deficit to take a 13-10 lead on a 16-yard touchdown pass from Missouri's second-string quarterback, Brian Sallee.

Sallee hit tight end A. J. Ofadile on a play-action pass on third down and short yardage with 4:27 left in the third quarter.

Missouri's starting quarterback, Jeff Handy, was knocked out of the game in the second quarter with an ankle injury.

Earlier in the third quarter, the Tigers scored on a another Sallee touchdown pass to tailback Joe Freeman out of the no-back set. The touchdown was set up when receiver Andre Coleman dropped the opening kickoff of the second half, and the Tigers recovered at the K-State 18-yard line.

K-State linebacker Kirby Hocutt said the Cats were still confident despite falling behind in the third quarter.

"I thought back to Iowa State when they came back to take the lead," said Hocutt, who finished with 10 tackles to lead K-State. "We had faith, and the coaching staff kept reminding us of the feeling we had on the bench last week."

That feeling, one of defeat, wouldn't reoccur.

Quarterback Chad May set the Cats' offense up at their own 20-yard line and then hit tight end Brad Seib on a 43-yard reception over the middle.

After a sack for a loss of nine yards, May hit receiver Kevin Lockett crossing the middle of the field for a 16-yard gain and a first down. May then tested the middle again, this time hitting Coleman on a post route for a 27-yard touchdown pass. The extra point by Tate Wright gave the Cats a 17-13 lead, which they would never relinquish.

Snyder said it was important to score right after Missouri did.

"It was something you saw happen to us against Iowa State," Snyder said. "They came down and scored on us right after we scored. I don't know if it's the drive of the season, perhaps it is, but it was the drive of the game for sure."

After both teams traded two possessions, the Cats were at their own 35-yard line with 6:17 left in the game. On first down, Missouri defensive end Damon Simon jumped offside, and May took advantage of the free play by hitting Coleman on a hitch pass toward the right sideline.

Coleman caught the ball, juked his way through Missouri defenders and was off to the races for a 65-yard touchdown reception that expanded the Cats' lead to 24-13 with 6:15 left in the game.

"Kevin (Lockett) made a great block on the play," Coleman said. "It was just a hitch route. It's just designed for a short pickup, but they all ran at me and missed. I took off and outran them."

Missouri coach Bob Stull said the catch changed the momentum of the game.

"Coleman has great speed, and his play really hurt us at an inopportune time," Stull said. "He got out there, and he was gone."

The K-State defense then provided a big play when defensive end John Butler sacked Sallee and forced him to fumble the ball. Defensive tackle Tim Colston fell on it, and three plays later, May dove into the end zone to make the score 31-13.

Seniors make final home appearance a lasting impression with 31-21 victory

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The entrance to the Dev Nelson Press Box displays photographs of the great football players who have played for the K-State program. The wall of photographs might be expanded to include the senior class of 1993.

Seventeen seniors made their final mark on the Wildcat program at KSU Stadium Saturday afternoon when they and the rest of the K-State team beat Missouri 31-21.

Coach Bill Snyder said he is proud of the seniors who played their last game at KSU Stadium.

"I think it was a very special day for the seniors," Snyder said. "We have a wonderful group of men. They've been the building blocks for this program. They headed all of the goals and ambitions, and I feel like it was a wonderful day for them."

The seniors have helped turn the program around. The win against Missouri extended the home unbeaten streak to 13 games and gave K-State its second bowl bid in school history.

One senior who played well was wide receiver Andre Coleman.

Coleman had two touchdown receptions, which gave him 12 career touchdown catches to surpass Michael Smith on the K-State all-time career charts.

"I guess it's a big accomplishment. I'm happy," Coleman said.

"I guess to beat Michael Smith in anything is a big accomplishment. He has meant a lot to me. He's probably the reason I'm here."

Coleman had 112 yards receiving and moved to fifth place on K-State's career receiving yards charts with 1,479 yards. He surpassed Charlie Green and trails Frank Hernandez by just 10 yards for fourth on the list.

Coleman's 270 all-purpose yards moved him into fourth place on K-State's single-season, all-purpose yardage list. He needs 68 yards to pass Henry Hawthorne's 1,491 to move into third on the chart.

Two other seniors had a superb day. Free safety Jaime Mendez picked off his 15th career pass, tying him for eighth on the all-time Big Eight list, and Tate Wright moved up to second on K-State's all-time scoring charts with seven points against the Tigers.

Wright is just three points shy of Ralph Graham's 196 points.

Center Quentin Neujahr said the seniors got rid of the feelings of playing for the last time at KSU Stadium before the game.

"There was a lot of emotion — pretty much a lot of that was aired before the game," Neujahr said. "When we got on the field, we got down to business."

Senior cornerback Thomas Randolph said he was glad he came to K-State.

"I came here five years ago, and none of this was here," Randolph said.

"We didn't have any of this stuff. No indoor practice facilities or new press box. I'm just happy, that in my senior year, we finally turned the corner and went to a bowl."

Coleman said the seniors and the rest of the team still have more work ahead of them.

"It's a big accomplishment, but we're not going to settle for a bowl game," Coleman said.

"We want to finish as high as possible in the Big Eight Conference, and the only way to do that is go out and beat Oklahoma State."

Game Notes K-STATE VS. MISSOURI

✔ With the victory against Mizzou, K-State has now moved its home unbeaten streak to 13 games and lengthened its home streak against Big Eight teams to seven.

✔ K-State got its sixth Division-I win and has the opportunity to make its second bowl appearance ever. The first was in 1982, a 14-3 loss to Wisconsin in the Independence Bowl.

✔ The win gives K-State a 7-2-1 record, its best record after 10 games since the 1934 team finished the season 7-2-1.

✔ Free safety Jaime Mendez picked off his 15th career pass, tying him for eighth in the all-time Big Eight list with Oklahoma's Zac Henderson.

✔ Brian Rees caught two passes Saturday, his first receptions of the season. One of the receptions went for a touchdown, his first career score.

✔ With his two touchdown pass receptions, Andre Coleman now has 12 career touchdown catches, surpassing Michael Smith on the K-State all-time career charts.

Frustration continues; Cats lose to Sooners

WESS HUDELSON

Oklahoma visited Ahearn Field House Saturday and disposed of K-State in three games.

The Sooners needed only 58 minutes to defeat the Wildcats 15-6, 15-3 and 15-5.

"All I can say is that we have to be persistent and deal with this situation head on," Coach Patti Hagemeyer said.

The loss extended K-State's losing streak to 14 matches and 27 straight in the Big Eight Conference.

The Sooners jumped out to an 11-0 lead in the first game before freshman Kate DeClerk blocked an Oklahoma shot to score the Wildcats' first point of the match.

"Frustration is a factor. We've been having really good practices, because the attitude on the team is still positive."
KEVIN MERTHA
PROFESSOR OF GEOLGY

"Actually I thought they were more focused for this game than they have been in the last couple of matches," Hagemeyer said.

K-State scored two more points off Sooner miscues to make the score 11-3. Oklahoma scored twice from K-State errors to make the score 13-3.

The Wildcats made the score 13-6 from two more Sooner errors and a kill by DeClerk. The Sooners then finished off the first game 15-6 when K-State blocked a spike out of bounds.

"Kate is getting better every match," Hagemeyer said. "She's hitting and passing the ball very well."

The Wildcats again fell behind early in the second game when Oklahoma took an 11-1 lead. K-State managed only two more points from blocks by Angie McKee and Suzanne Hagge.

The Sooners' Gloria Holcomb and Gretchen Anderson put the second game away 15-3 with a kill apiece.

Anderson finished the match with 16 kills and six digs to lead Oklahoma.

"We've been talking about mental toughness and extra effort, and I feel they showed some signs of that tonight," Hagemeyer said.

Game three was a similar scenario for the Cats as they fell behind 6-0, before a block by DeClerk gave them their first point of the game. K-State scored again on an Oklahoma error to make the score 6-2.

Oklahoma then scored five straight to make the score 11-2.

The Wildcats grounded out three more points on a Sooner error, a team block and a kill by Yolanda Young, but it was not enough as the Sooners clinched the match with a 15-5 victory in game three.

"Frustration is a factor," Hagemeyer said. "We've been having really good practices, because the attitude on the team is still positive, but no one can see that."

DeClerk lead K-State with seven kills, one solo block and two block assists.

The Wildcats next contest will be 7:30 p.m. Wednesday against Kansas at Ahearn.

Runners qualify for NCAA meet

COLLEGIAN STAFF

CARBONDALE, Ill. — The K-State cross country team qualified three runners for the NCAA Cross Country Championships Saturday at the District V meet.

Sophomore Ryan Clive-Smith and senior Francis O'Neill finished fourth and sixth, respectively, snagging two of the three individual qualifying spots up for grabs in the men's race.

Senior Paulette Staats captured the second open slot by finishing third on the women's side.

"I'm very proud of all the qualifiers," Coach Terry Drake said. "They knew what they had to do to go to nationals and took care of the task at hand. It was exciting to watch it all unfold. We had an almost-perfect day.

"Ryan Clive-Smith ran the race of his life, and Francis O'Neill had a solid race. He still feels like he's coming on after being sick.

"I'm very excited for Paulette Staats. She is proving how good of a runner she really is this season."

The top three individuals, who are not members of qualifying teams (the top two teams), qualify for the national meet scheduled for Nov. 22, in Bethlehem, Pa.

O'Neill will be making his second trip to the national meet in as many tries, attempting to capture his second-consecutive cross country all-American award.

Staats will be making her fourth trip to the national meet.

K-State junior Jeanene Rugan missed taking the third qualifying spot by just four seconds.

Sophomore Cari Warden (19:40.4) and freshman Megan McGrath (19:44.1) placed 39th and 41st, respectively, for the Wildcat women.

Mizzou takes 3rd-quarter lead, but Cats rally in 4th

"We knew what we had to do," May said.

"After the big drive, we had the momentum. I knew that we could make the big plays."

K-State opened the scoring in the game with a 49-yard field goal by Wright in the first quarter.

Then, with 1:15 left in the first quarter, May hit tight end Brian Rees on an 11-yard scoring strike.

With that pass, May set a Big Eight record by throwing for a touchdown pass in nine consecutive games.

May finished the game 13 of 30, but he had 192 yards passing in the second half to finish the game with 248 yards.

"Early in the game, I was having a hard time finding my third and fourth receivers because of the pressure," May said.

"At halftime, we made adjustments in blocking, and that gave us some time to find those receivers."

Missouri scored in the last minute and added a two-point conversion to cut the score to 31-21.

The Cats' defense played tough, Stull said.

The defense only allowed one completion in the first half and only 191 yards passing for the game.

The defense also had two interceptions, one by free safety Jaime Mendez and the other by Hocutt.

The Cats also had seven sacks on the game.

"Our offense struggled today," Stull said.

"K-State did a good job of pressuring Sallee. We played hard, and so did K-State. We had two turnovers that were crucial, and they had two big plays that were certainly instrumental in their victory.

"Like I said, the two teams played hard, but K-State played harder."

Coleman said the game was just another benchmark for the program.

"I think it proves that we're for real because we never gave up. Our defense rose to the occasion when they had to, and the offense did also," he said.

"They got some big plays, and so did we."

Allen leads Chiefs past Raiders, 31-20

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — As usual, Marcus Allen was a winner at the Los Angeles Coliseum on Sunday. Only this time, he prevailed in his first game as a visitor.

He received a polite ovation from the sellout crowd of 66,553 in pregame introductions, then helped the Kansas City Chiefs rally from a 14-0 deficit to beat the Los Angeles Raiders 31-20.

Allen, who played four years for Southern Cal before his outstanding 11-year career with the Raiders, gained 85 yards on 17 carries and caught one pass for four yards.

The win was the ninth for the Chiefs (7-2) in their last 11 games with the Raiders and kept them in first place in the AFC West. They prevailed despite the absence of quarterback Joe Montana, who missed his second straight game with a hamstring injury.

Replacing Montana, Dave Krieg passed for 178 yards and three touchdowns. Krieg, who completed 12 of 27 passes without being intercepted, became the 17th quarterback in NFL history to surpass the 30,000-yard mark in passing.

"People only seem to talk about Dave's fumbles, but the only thing I care about is interceptions," Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer said. "He does not throw many, so I have every confidence in him.

"We have won a lot of games with him, and we will win a lot more."

Allen, 33, signed with the Chiefs as a free agent on June 9. The leading rusher and touchdown scorer in Raider history, he had made his longstanding feud with Raiders owner Al Davis public late last season.

"The thing between me and Al has been perpetuated a little by me and a little by the press," Allen said. "I think the media makes more out of this than there is.

"I am just glad we won. This is still home to me. I got a great lift when the fans cheered for me."

Allen scored his seventh touchdown of the season and the 105th of his career on a four-yard run in the third quarter, two plays after his 39-yard run, to cut the Raiders' lead to 17-14.

"The blocking was great, and I made two good moves," Allen said concerning the 39-yard run. "I just could not quite shake that last guy (Aaron Wallace)."

Right after Allen's long run, a fan just below the press box yelled up toward Davis' private booth, loud enough to be heard: "Nice move, idiot," apparently referring to Davis allowing Allen to get away.

K-STATE SENIORS ATTRACT NFL SCOUTS

The latest update of The NFL Draft Report had five Wildcat seniors ranked with the nation's top players. The report is compiled by NFL scouts across the country. Here is a sampling of what they are saying about the Cats.

Andre Coleman, WR — Seventh-rated senior wide receiver in the country. "With few peers as a return specialist, he's come on strong this year as a receiver. This kid could be the biggest weapon to hit the NFL since Dave Meggett (N.Y.Giants) burst onto the scene."

Kenny McEntyre, CB — "Most-underrated player in the country at his position. Rising star who is the best athlete in the Big Eight Conference. He'll make some general manager look like a genius after being taken on draft day."

Jaime Mendez, FS — Listed as the second-best safety in the country, the 11th-best defensive player and the 22nd-best player overall. "There is not a more aggressive or instinctive secondary player in the nation. The only thing that will stop him from being an all pro is if the NFL gives up playing football."

Quentin Neujahr, C — Third-rated center in the country. "Unsung hero whose leadership and ability has been the major reason for the offense's success this year. The way he flattens defensive linemen, he ought to be called IHOP (House of Pancakes) for all of the knockdowns he delivers."

Thomas Randolph, CB — Listed as the top defensive back in the country and the third-best player overall. "Thomas Randolph has shown me he is the finest player to perform at this spot in the last decade. This is one player who will be spending quite a few years playing in the pro bowl."

Espinosa wins race after 3 attempts

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Mexico's Andres Espinosa, the runner-up in the New York City Marathon the past two years, raced to a convincing victory in the race Sunday on an unseasonably warm day.

Espinosa, 30, was the surprise second-place finisher behind countryman Salvador Garcia in 1991 in a career-best 2 hours, 10 minutes, then placed second again, nearly 1:30 behind Willie Mtolo of South Africa last year.

This time, Espinosa earned the $20,000 first prize and a Mercedes-Benz sedan by sweeping across the finish line in an unofficial 2:10:03.

It was a strong performance, considering the temperature reached 70 degrees and the humidity 61 percent.

This time, the second-place finisher was Bob Kempainen, 27, of Minnetonka, Minn., a medical student at the University of Minnesota. It was the best finish by an American in this race since Ken Martin also was second in 1989.

Mono can upset student schedules

Lafene Health Center treats few cases during fall

PAULA MURPHY
Collegian

The affliction drags its victims down like an insistent undertow. Some flounder in the impending waves of tiredness. Others are able to shake it off and return to normal activity.

It's called infectious mononucleosis, but most people know it as mono.

Mono got the "kissing disease" nickname because it is spread through saliva. But it can be hard to tell who passed the infection because only about a third of the affected people develop classic mono. Also, people who have had mono can carry the virus in their saliva even after the illness is over.

Dr. Paula Davis at Lafene Health Center said those affected might have only a sore throat. Or they could have a sore throat accompanied by swollen glands and fever. Sometimes there is some sort of abdominal distress. The symptoms vary widely. They could be slight headaches or a loss of appetite.

"Often, a student will come in and say 'I'm so tired,' then we'll find swollen glands, do a mono test and find that it's positive," Davis said.

Twenty-nine cases have been diagnosed at Lafene since the semester began.

Davis said there are seasonal peaks in the fall and spring.

"Most people are already immune to mono because they've had a mild case as children. Parents thought it was a cold and simply took care of them," she said. "By age 30, almost everyone has had mono and are therefore immune to it."

Davis said the highest incidence of mono occurs in the pediatric population.

"However, the people who get sick with mono are usually in the 18-22 year range.

"Mono is like the measles or chicken pox. If college students get it, they're likely to get very sick. In most children, it's not nearly so severe," Davis said.

Kathy Zweimiller, sophomore in medical technology, said she had mono three weeks before finals last year. She didn't know she had it at first.

"I just wanted to sleep. I was going to bed at 9 and then getting up 15 minutes before classes," she said. "I didn't have any energy, so I had no social life. All I wanted to do was stay home."

Zweimiller said it was hard to concentrate on studying.

"I didn't get really sick like some people, but I was very tired."

Most people return to normal activities within two weeks. Fatigue can sometimes last for two or three months.

The best treatment for mono is rest. Davis suggests finding a quiet, comfortable place.

"If a student is in a group-living situation where there's always someone coming in and out, they should probably go home for a week, and that's what I recommend," she said.

"However, there are some of those Type-A students who want to keep going to class, and they will heal. But resting in a comfortable place may provide a quicker recovery."

THE SYMPTOMS OF MONO

Twenty-nine cases of infectious mononucleosis have been diagnosed at K-State since the beginning of the semester. Symptoms vary widely, but some of the common symptoms are as follows:

- Sore throat
- Sore throat accompanied by swollen glands and fever
- Abdominal distress
- Slight headaches
- Loss of appetite
- Fatigue

TELEVISION

Networks see dollars in ruling

ABC, CBS, NBC will battle cables with own medicine

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — How did the big three television networks get access to the gold mine of syndicated television? By losing viewership.

A judge's decision to allow ABC, CBS and NBC to own, produce and syndicate their prime-time TV shows overruled objections by Hollywood studios that the networks would quickly monopolize programming.

U.S. District Judge Manuel Real's decision permits the networks to enter the multibillion-dollar programming and syndication market for the first time since antitrust rules were adopted in 1974.

That year, the networks drew more than 90 percent of all TV viewers. Today, they draw less than 65 percent of the audience, in part because of cable television and the upstart Fox Broadcasting Co. network.

The networks face a further threat as cable and telephone companies develop a fiber-optic TV system with 500-channel capability.

"Even if a network controlled all of the syndication of its network programming ... it appears that not a single network would control a sufficient share of the market to exercise monopoly power," Real's decision said.

The ruling seemed to validate the networks' argument that the television marketplace has changed dramatically since 1974 and the rules are outdated and restrictive.

Warner Bros., Paramount, MCA and other studios which earn substantial profits from syndicated television, claimed the networks would be able to monopolize programming. TV producers said networks would be able to drive them out of business, and independent television stations argued the networks would refuse to sell rerun rights to non-affiliates.

There was no one available to comment Sunday at MCA, Warner or Paramount.

Real's decision was sent to Hollywood studio executives late last week. It lifts the so-called financial interest and syndication rules that prevented the networks from owning most programs they show. The fin-syn rules also prevented the networks from earning profits when the reruns of those shows were sold in syndication to local TV stations.

The potential profits are huge. Just the reruns of "Cosby" and "Cheers" have together earned more than $1 billion.

Real's decision also allows the networks to enter the fast-growing first-run syndication market for daytime talk shows like "The Oprah Winfrey Show" and "Donahue."

The Federal Communications Commission voted in 1991 to relax some of the restrictions on the networks, but the 1974 antitrust consent decrees prevented the new rules from going into effect.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Dear Cassandra,

I am a girl. As a girl I do not understand what compels men to grab and/or scratch their privates in public. Is there some physical cause? Do men have little lice "down there" that gnaw away at their precious jewels?

Perhaps its cause is psycho-social — to belong to the brotherhood of man one must fondle himself at his leisure in the public eye.

Could it be peer pressure — all of their friends are doing it? (Monkey see, monkey do?) Perhaps it is rooted in ancient ritualism — each little scratch is an offering of worship to the ancient Phallic God?

Cassandra, please clear this up! Do we as women of the 1990s have the right to scratch ourselves in public? How would all of the guys feel about that?

Signed,
Penis Envy
(I think NOT!)

Dear Girlie,

After consulting with a few men on the subject, my research concludes that some men don't even consider scratching in public a problem.

The rationale for such behavior, these men said, was that sometimes "things" get out of place when walking or with other movement, and thus "things" become rather uncomfortable — painful even.

And so, when this situation arises, the need to rectify the problem supersedes any social expectations of how a civilized male should act in public.

My theory is that the likelihood of a man scratching in public is indirectly proportional to that man's stature in our society.

Take public officials and world dignitaries, for example. Being so high on the societal totem pole, you will see NO public scratching.

But take the other hand, college boys. Being so low on the societal totem pole, there's a "whole lotta scratchin' goin' on."

Anyway, that's my idea.

As for your final question, you, as a woman of the '90s, do indeed have a right to the same sort of behavior. Whatever floats yer boat, baby.

'Yonkers' pushes the extremes

Neil Simon's "Lost in Yonkers" features an intriguing assimilation of lunatics, exemplified in the Kurnitz family of Yonkers, N.Y.

Sunday's production at McCain Auditorium was one filled with intense emotional extremities.

At one moment, the audience was in hysterics by the antics the lunatics pulled. Yet, other moments were wrought with emotional intensity as the characters confronted the horrors life had thrown their way.

REVIEW

The central character of the play is Grandma Kurnitz, who is the embodiment of emotional strength. Grandma is a German immigrant whose life has been plagued by hardship.

As a means of survival, she has hardened herself to the extent that even her children insist she is made of steel. She views any indication of emotion a weakness.

"I buried a husband and two children, and I didn't cry," she says.

The play confronts the family's many issues and struggles. Grandma Kurnitz's hardened heart affected each child differently, hurting them and leaving them with their own emotional impairments.

Bella, her 30-year-old daughter, resides with Grandma above the apartment over the Kurnitz's Kandy Store. Bella's development has been stifled, leaving her a child emotionally tinged with the natural desires of a woman. She was left isolated, longing for affection throughout her childhood. She longed to be loved, touched and held.

Bella appealed to her mother saying, "Do you know what it's like to touch steel? It's hard and cold. I want to be soft."

Louie, determined to match his mother's strength, has turned to a life of crime. He never let her get him down, but she has driven him to immoral destitution.

Eddie was the child forced to emotion. He was the one Grandma looked down on. He was left so emotionally destitute he was not afraid to cry.

Gert is left blatantly impaired by the emotional neglect. She is unable to establish a way of speaking and breathing without the two affecting one another. Every time she speaks, it sounds as if she is hyperventilating.

Neil Simon's beauty is that he takes the day-to-day life of these people and makes the audience part of all of the emotion and conflict. This production was incredible.

I was able to see inside every character. I was able to understand what motivated them and the events that led them to who they are now.

Grandma Kurnitz captured perfectly the underlying theme of the play:

"Everything hurts. Whatever it is you get good in life, you lose something."

PLO, Israel urge an end to conflict as talks resume

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israel accepted the PLO's condemnation of the killing of a Jewish settler but pressed Yasser Arafat on Sunday to exert more control over the occupied territories before the implementation of autonomy.

A day before peace talks were to resume, Israeli Police Minister Moshe Shahal said Arafat must rein in the radicals, especially those from the extremist Hamas and the Islamic Jihad groups, which oppose Israel-PLO peacemaking.

"This is what we expect from him, and this is his test. This is how we will know how the agreement will progress and what will be the extent of his validation on the ground," Shahal told reporters after the weekly Cabinet meeting.

On Saturday, Arafat issued a statement denouncing the Oct. 29 killing of Jewish settler Haim Mizrachi that Israel says was carried out by members of Arafat's own Fatah faction of the PLO.

Israel said the condemnation, the first time Arafat denounced a Palestinian attack in Israel or the occupied lands, would enable peace talks to resume.

"When the PLO condemns terrorism, it is definitely necessary and good, but it is not enough. The PLO needs to show at least preliminary signs that it is starting to and is capable of controlling the area," said Environment Minister Yossi Sarid, one of the most liberal members of the Cabinet.

Sarid said a few low-ranking PLO leaders in the occupied territories knew Mizrachi had been killed by Fatah members but did not inform headquarters in Tunis, Tunisia.

Since the Sept. 13 signing of the agreement, eight Israelis have been killed. Only Mizrachi's death has been linked to the PLO.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres called Mizrachi's death an exception and said the PLO, as an organization, is fulfilling its obligation to halt terrorism.

PLO activist Samir Shehadeh, whose son Nizar led the ring accused of Mizrachi's murder, called for Israeli condemnation of rioting settlers and soldiers who kill Palestinians.

"I think that what is needed from the Israeli government and (Prime Minister Yitzhak) Rabin is to condemn and stop such acts because I think it is unfair to say Jewish blood is more valuable than Palestinian," Shehadeh said.

"When the PLO condemns terrorism, it is definitely necessary and good, but it is not enough."

YOSSI SARID
ENVIRONMENT MINISTER

Shehadeh accused Israeli interrogators of injuring Bassem Tamimi, also being held for Mizrachi's death, who was hospitalized hours after his arrest.

The Daily Haaretz said Tamimi was hospitalized with severe head bleeding Wednesday. Shahal said an investigating committee had been appointed. Palestinian negotiator Ziad Abu Ziad acknowledged problems convincing Palestinians that Israel truly intends to withdraw from the occupied territories and settle the conflict.

He warned that drawn-out negotiations would exacerbate the problems.

Negotiations over the peace accord, outlining Palestinian autonomy starting in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank town of Jericho, are to resume Monday in Cairo.

Abdel-Wahab Darawshe, an Arab-Israeli lawmaker visiting the Egyptian capital, said Sunday that Arafat and Rabin will hold a summit meeting in Cairo next month.

Israeli gradual withdrawal from the occupied territories is scheduled to begin after Dec. 13, and the initial stage completed by April 13, but the halt in negotiations has raised fears the deadlines will not be met. Israel's Cabinet decided to call a special meeting to discuss the settlers' violent confrontations.

Students to train animals for show

Little Royal offers enjoyment, chance to exhibit

BRENT DUNGAN
Collegian

When people think of teammates, they usually think of humans competing with humans. But some students at K-State have teammates that include horses, cattle, pigs or sheep.

The Little American Royal is a student organization that teaches students how to show livestock in a competitive arena.

Miles McKee, professor of animal science and industry and adviser to the club, said there are about 150 students in the Royal.

About 125 students actually show animals while the others help with committees, McKee said.

Students learn how to wash and clip animals as well as how to lead them around a ring.

Judges look for well-groomed animals who respond well to leading. The animal should not have to be pulled or tugged around the ring.

"The judges look to see if the animal is put together correctly," McKee said.

The better the animal appears to the judges, the better chance there is someone will buy that animal for a good price.

"If the apples in the store aren't polished, people won't buy them," McKee said.

The Little American Royal is sponsored by the Dairy and Block and Bridle clubs, but it is open to all.

"I can't encourage people enough who aren't involved with agriculture or animal science to do it," Heidi Wolcott, senior in animal science, said.

Wolcott competed in the swine category two years ago and said she enjoyed the experience.

"It's not a high-pressure competition," Wolcott said. "People who have little experience can have fun doing it."

Each student draws for an animal and trains that animal during his or her personal time for the competition.

The animals are owned by the University, and students use University barns to train the animals.

McKee said there are training sessions to teach students how to train animals, and there are herdsmen at each of the barns who are willing to help students with questions.

Adam Weigand, senior in animal science and industry and chairman of the Little American Royal, said competing in the Royal is a good way to showcase talent.

Weigand competed in the cattle division. He spent a couple of hours, two to three nights a week, training his animal.

However, Wolcott said not all animals, like swine, require as much time.

"I wanted to be involved but didn't have a lot of time," Wolcott said.

Sign-up doesn't start until after the fall semester, so there is still time to get involved, McKee said.

Bead Emergency
Bead Famine
The cold war is over. Beads are back with a vengeance. Everywhere you look people are wearing beads. What does that mean to you, the bead maker? Well, in the beginning it spells glory but in the end...possibly disaster.
When the cold Canadian winds blow again, expect shortages, rationing, and yes, possibly famine. Imagine a world in which December 22 rolls into town and you don't have your beaded necklaces, bracelets, and gifts made. It could happen.
Am I trying to alarm you? Not at all. But just as surely as Boris Yeltsin is sleeping with a pistol under his pillow these days, we are going to have problems. There won't be enough beads to go around.
I've hired extra staff to handle the rush and we're stocking up. Still, it isn't going to be pretty. Expect the lines to be long.
Plan ahead. Expect your friendly retailer to be less friendly as we fight off the mobs demanding beads now, now, now. Plan ahead.
It's time to get serious.
Thank You,
Krystallos Your Bead Store

CATEGORIES
To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD
Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Steer roper

Todd Nutsch, senior in agribusiness, ropes a steer while competing in the jackpot Sunday afternoon in Weber Hall Arena. Nutsch was competing as a team with his father in the team roping event. He said he normally is the heeler, the rider who ropes the heels of the steer, but for this run, he was the header. Nutsch was in seven teams during the 106-team first round. Three of his seven teams made it into the 58-team second round. He advanced into the third and final round of 27 teams as a member of two teams.

Democracy alive, well in Senate

Most of the bills originate in the standing committees. Occasionally, they will come directly from senators or constituents. Before a bill can become law, it has to pass through a certain process, Anderson said.

"Bills are introduced at a committee level," Anderson said. "The idea is written in a form of a bill or resolution. It's put together with various whereas clauses and then brought before the assembly.

"The bill goes through two readings. During the first, it is read, questions are asked, then it sits for a week. During the second reading, the bill is read once again, any further questions are answered, and then it's voted on," he said.

A majority vote is required for a bill dealing with laws of the student body to pass. Laws providing for creation or change of student fees under Student Senate jurisdiction must have a two-thirds vote.

"Democracy in action is a scary thing to behold. You have 55 or so senators all with different points of view attempting to get the Senate body to a point where it makes a decision. It's like trying to have 55 brains do one thing, all in sync. It's not a pretty sight," Anderson said.

SCIENCE

Children enjoy wonders of chemistry at the mall

KIM DILLON
Collegian

Children and adults got a chance to see chemistry in action Saturday during a Chemistry Fun Day at Manhattan Town Center.

There were demonstrations from how superconductors work to how to make a silly putty-like substance.

"This is kind of a science outreach activity," said Karl Kramer, research chemist for the U.S. Department of Agriculture Grain Marketing Research Laboratory and adjunct professor of biochemistry.

Alpha Chi Sigma members Rachel Hamman, senior in chemistry, Jason Dana, sophomore in chemical engineering, and Carl Ohrenberg, graduate student in chemistry, put on three chemistry shows during the day. They used children volunteers to help with their demonstrations.

The children seemed excited about the prospect of helping, and there were plenty of volunteers to keep things moving. The group demonstrated several concepts, including how to use red cabbage as an indicator to find out if household chemicals are acids or bases.

The cabbage is put through a blender until its consistency is as fine as possible and then is strained to get any pieces out. Water is added to the the cabbage liquid. When chemicals are added to the mixture, it turns pink if the chemical is an acid and blue or green if it is a base.

There were lots of opportunities for the children and adults present to have hands-on experience with several different principles.

Participants got the chance to see DNA at one table. They could go through the process of drawing cow DNA out of a solution so they could see it themselves.

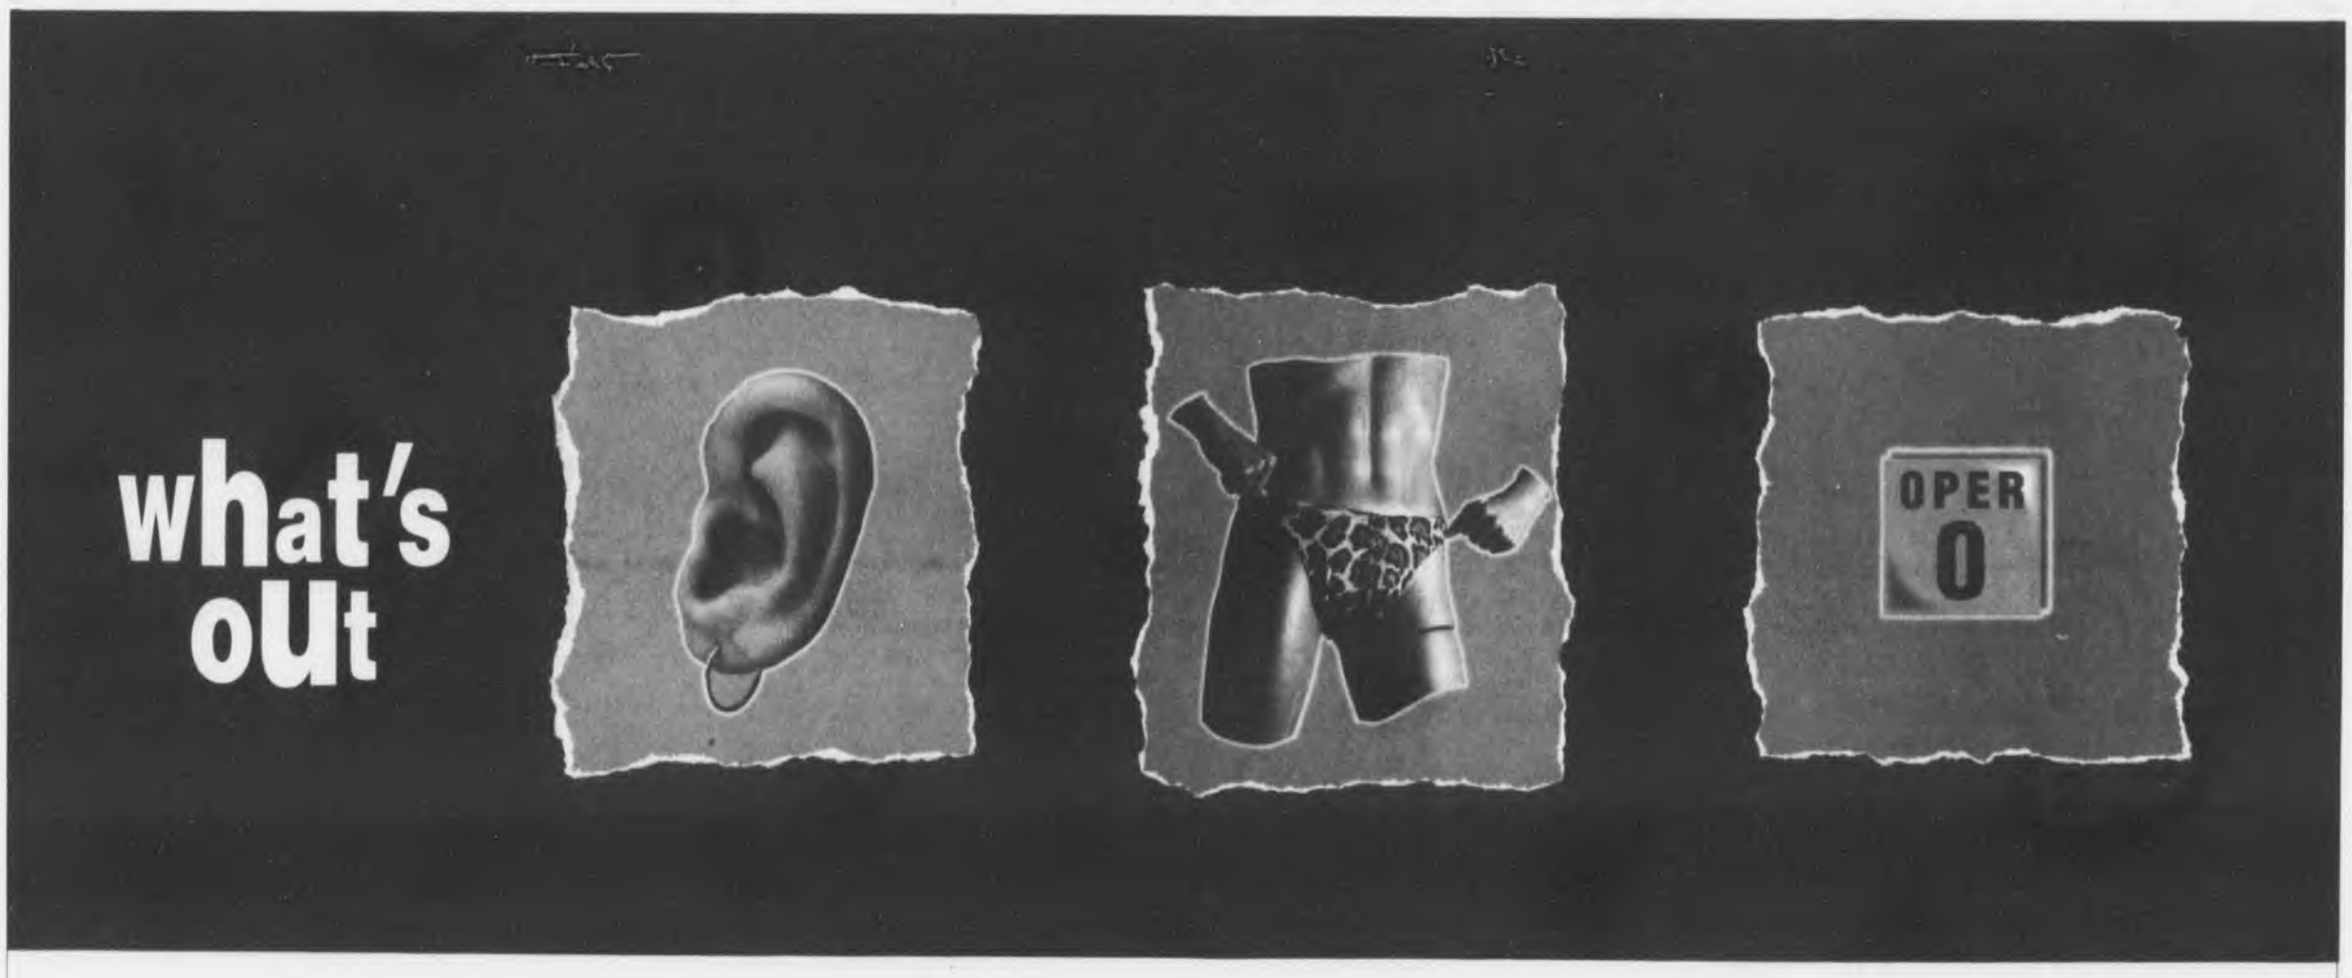
Jim Dyer, graduate student in biochemistry, said the demonstration was interesting to the children present because they could see the DNA come out of the solution and relate it to the premise of "Jurassic Park," where the DNA of dinosaurs was taken out of the blood in a mosquito and used to clone dinosaurs.

Another table with hands-on participation had the stages of a tobacco hornworm's life cycle. People could hold live caterpillars and pupae.

Elizabeth Willott, research associate in biochemistry, said she is using these insects to research insect blood cells and immune systems. She brought them to show the life cycle of these insects from egg to moth and to try to get people of all ages more comfortable holding insects.

To help show plant growth in response to gravity, a table was set up with plants growing in a pot on a turntable that was constantly moving. Dyer said this showed the plants would grow away from force.

Kramer said the attendance was slightly less than last year, probably because there was a home K-State football game.



"I think it's neat for the little kids to come and see," Cate Pugh, junior at Wamego High School, said.

Pugh volunteered to help at the fun day in her chemistry class at school. She was demonstrating the force field that exists between superconductors and magnets by putting a superconductor in liquid nitrogen and putting a magnet on top. The magnet spun freely without touching the superconductor.

This is the second year the K-State section of the American Chemical Society has been host to a Chemistry Fun Day at the mall.

The K-State section was one of five sections that was nominated nationally for the Phoenix Award for best shopping mall event in 1992, Kramer said.

These events are to get kids interested in chemistry, Kramer said. Science is in the news with the different problems that it can cause. This is a way to improve the image of chemistry by showing the positive things it can do, he said.

Poet retells African history

COLLEGIAN STAFF
Collegian

With flowing robes reminiscent of her native Africa and an accent as thick as the Serengeti brush, Ama Ata Aidoo spoke to a large audience in Forum Hall Monday evening.

Aidoo, an African writer and poet, presented two excerpts from her paper, "Images of African Women at Century's End," as the final speech of the 1992-93 Lou Douglas Lecture Series.

The excerpts centered around the issues of African women, the negative way in which they are viewed by the world outside of Africa, realities of African women in the past and, finally, the state of African women now and in the future.

Aidoo explained that typically the women of Africa are viewed as half nude, incompetent of caring for their many children, dependent, weak, victimized and usually are portrayed with flies buzzing around them.

Aidoo said throughout the history of Africa, however, women have played a primary role in the rule and defense of the nation.

"No one teaches African history correctly, even in Africa," Aidoo said.

History teachers completely overlook women in the African military defending Africa against enemies such as the British in the 1800s, as well as African queens as a political basis in that country, she said.

"No one teaches African history correctly, even in Africa."

AMA ATA AIDOO

Even today Aidoo said African women play a large role in the continent's political system.

"South Africa's fight would be much different if not for women such as Winnie Mandela and the sacrifices they have made," she said.

Aidoo said though Africa is the second-largest continent on Earth and potentially the richest with unexploited natural resources and a relatively low population, African women still must deal with issues such as low educational opportunities, health care, transportation to needed supplies, disease, famine and AIDS.

Education is an especially large problem for African women, Aidoo said. Africa works on a pyramid scale with a good base of women in schools at lower levels and few women in higher education.

On average the number of women in African schools can be one in 10 compared to

Fraternity put on probation

SAE pledge program to be re-evaluated

CRISTINA JANNEY
Collegian

The Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity was placed on University probation for a hazing incident that occurred in October.

Fraternity President B.D. Horton, senior in accounting, said the hazing incident was isolated and was not endorsed by the fraternity as a whole.

"We realize hazing in any form is wrong," he said.

Horton said the hazing involved four fraternity members and two pledges, but he would not release the names of those involved or details of the incident.

Horton said the chapter didn't know the incident occurred until one of the pledges involved reported it to University officials.

The fraternity's punishment could have been much worse, Horton said. University probation does not exclude the fraternity from social or intramural events.

The Interfraternity Council decided the incident was not a significant infraction of the University hazing policy, Horton said.

"The council found that the infraction didn't endanger anyone's life, and it wasn't psychological hazing," he said.

Barb Robel, greek affairs adviser, declined to release any information about the hazing or the terms of the fraternity's probation.

The IFC will decide how long the fraternity is on probation. Removal from probation will depend on a review of the chapter and its pledge program, but Horton said he did not know when that review would take place.

"We are going to bring in two speakers, one to talk about the risks of hazing and an educational speaker," he said.

The fraternity members involved in the incident were placed on social probation until spring. They are also required to spend 10 hours a week tutoring members of the pledge class, Horton said.

"We are re-evaluating our pledge program," Horton said. "Despite this incident, we think we have a good pledge program. We already have a lot of educational elements in the program."

Professor to speak on Indian rights

TED KADAU JR.
Collegian

Henrietta Mann, professor of Native American studies at the University of Montana, will speak at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday in Throckmorton 131.

Mann, who is a visiting professor at Haskell Indian Nations University in Lawrence, will be speaking at K-State at the request of Marsha Frey, professor of history.

"Periodically, Marsha visits the University of Montana, and she has met Henrietta," Professor Don Mrozek, head of the K-State history department, said. "She knew that Henrietta was on a one-year stint at Haskell Indian Nations University as a guest professor, and she called her and asked if she would like to speak at K-State."

The subject of Mann's speech will be "American Indian Spirituality and First Amendment Rights."

Mann served as national coordinator for the American Indian Religious Freedom Act Project for the Association on American Indian Affairs from July 1991 to July 1992. She has done extensive research in the area of American Indian religious freedoms.

LECTURE INFO

■ Henrietta Mann will speak at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday in Throckmorton 131.

These religious freedoms include such issues as the use of the drug peyote by Southwestern Indians in religious worship.

"In my opinion, she is doing some very interesting work in the area of legal rights in religious freedoms," Mrozek said. "I feel that her talk will be interesting in that this is an issue that is not exclusive to Native Americans. It can also be interesting to people who may have no interest in Native Americans but who are interested in religious freedoms."

Students express need for communication with representatives

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

K-State students and Student Senate have a love/hate relationship.

Student involvement with Senate is relatively low. Dissatisfaction about representation and Senate's contact with constituents can be seen on campus.

"Sometimes I wonder how in touch they are with people they represent and if they're in there to do what they want or to actually represent us. I guess you could say I'm a little wary of the senators and the whole situation," Robert Walters, junior in computer engineering, said.

Stephen Thomas, junior in nuclear engineering, said Senate does not provide an accurate representation of the K-State student body.

"One of the unfortunate things is that there's not a diverse representation on Senate. Senate would better serve K-State if it was more diverse," Thomas said. "I know it's something they're not supposed to do, but perhaps they should look into going out and recruiting more minorities into the Senate."

Cory Engelken, junior in information systems, said he felt Senate was doing all right but did not know exactly what Senate involves.

"They're doing a decent job, I suppose. I don't really know what they do. I know they represent us. I think we need more communication," Engelken said. "I think they could get out and talk to people more."

Amy Teagarden, junior in animal sciences and industry, said she felt Senate was improving communication this semester.

"They're working hard to hear more of the students' voice. They're doing more this semester. They came to our residence hall, spoke to us and passed out suggestion cards. Usually, they don't come unless it's around campaign time," she said.

Voting for the senators is often as far as student involvement goes.

"The only thing I pay attention to is the elections, and that's about it," Christine Kempke, senior in finance and accounting, said.

During campaign time, posters with names of Senate candidates are plastered all over campus. But just seeing the names is not enough, Dan Suderman, sophomore in animal sciences and industry, said.

"You'll see all these fliers with names and no faces," Suderman said. "I'd be surprised if 90 percent of the students could name four, three, maybe two of their senators."

Students who have gotten involved had mixed responses to Senate.

Julie Rohlman, junior in marketing management, attended a Senate meeting when funding was to be cut at the K-State child-development center where she works.

"I think they really listened to me when I talked to them," Rohlman said. "Before this I'd read in the paper about what was going on but didn't really get involved. I think they spend a lot of time working for us, though."

Another student who has spoken in a Senate meeting is Lynette Maurer, sophomore in pre-professional secondary education. She spoke during the open period at a Senate meeting to gain extra credit for a public-speaking class and because she was concerned about library funding.

Wefald meets with Finney about salaries

TOPEKA (AP) — The top administrators of the state's two largest universities met with Gov. Joan Finney today, apparently to lobby her to reject a staff recommendation against any faculty salary increases.

Finney has been hearing appeals by state agencies from spending recommendations of the State Budget Division for weeks. The governor's staff is drafting a proposed budget for the fiscal year that begins July 1, 1994.

K-State President Jon Wefald andUniversity of Kansas Chancellor Gene Budig took their cases to Finney today. After the meeting, Wefald said they discussed faculty salaries.

The Kansas Board of Regents is seeking a $54.2 million increase in the budget for its six universities. The Budget Division has proposed a $12.9 million cut, a recommendation that would not permit any faculty salary increases.

The meeting came after legislators and state officials learned state tax collections ran about $40 million ahead of the official estimate for the current budget year through October.

Buttafuoco sentenced to 6 months in prison

MINEOLA, N.Y. (AP) — The saga that began in a Long Island auto body shop ended Monday in a courtroom where a handcuffed, smirking Joey Buttafuoco was led away to the same fate that befell his former lover, Amy Fisher — jail time.

Buttafuoco's expression never changed as he was sentenced to the maximum six months in prison, $5,000 fine and five years' probation for statutory rape.

Only minutes earlier, Fisher, now 19, faced Buttafuoco for the first time since she shot his wife, Mary Jo, on May 19, 1992. In a nervous, barely audible voice, she spoke of the ill-fated relationship that began when she was a 16-year-old with braces.

The midday drama provided a certain closure to the case that has provided grist for countless talk-show jokes and three made-for-TV movies.

A year ago in the same courthouse, Fisher had been sentenced to five to 15 years for shooting Mary Jo Buttafuoco, who still has a bullet lodged next to her brain.

Buttafuoco, 37, stood ramrod straight, glaring at Fisher as she spoke.

Later, Fisher said, "I felt physically intimidated by him in the courtroom."

"I kept waiting for him to say, 'I'm sorry' to me for what happened, and he didn't."

Supreme Court lets abortion law stand

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court let a Mississippi law stand today, requiring unmarried girls who seek an abortion to get the consent of both parents or a judge's permission.

The justices, without comment, turned away a constitutional challenge to the law.

Abortion clinic operators also had argued they wrongly were denied an evidentiary court hearing before the law took effect last July.

The Mississippi law was enacted in 1986 but had been tied up in court since a federal judge barred its enforcement that year.

The law requires doctors to obtain written permission from both parents before performing an abortion on a girl who is unmarried, under 18 and not supporting herself.A judicial-bypass provision allows such girls to avoid telling either parent if the girl gets a judge's permission. The law requires that the court proceedings be speedy and confidential.

The law also requires judges to grant permission if a girl shows she is mature enough to make the abortion decision on her own or proves an abortion is in her best interest.

Bishops support accused cardinal

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. bishops rallied around embattled Chicago Cardinal Joseph Bernardin Monday, standing and cheering for their colleague accused of sexually abusing a teen-ager more than a decade ago.

In the suit, Steven Cook said Bernardin abused him sometime between 1975 and 1977, when Cook was in a high-school program at a Cincinnati seminary. Bernardin was archbishop of Cincinnati from 1972 until 1982.

While abuse victims stood outside asking the church to let the courts decide, about 300 prelates opened their fall meeting expressing their faith in Bernardin's innocence.

In another development, a Chicago archdiocesan panel concluded after an initial inquiry that Bernardin does not pose a risk to children and should not be placed on leave pending further investigation.

The bishops also began their discussion Monday of a proposed statement on marriage and the family that encourages Catholic husbands and wives to move beyond the sexual stereotypes they grew up with and divide household and parenting responsibilities.

PLO aid assasinated in Lebanon

SIDON, Lebanon (AP) — Gunners killed a senior aide of Yasser Arafat today in the sixth attack on PLO officials since the Israeli-Palestinian peace accord was signed.

Four senior Arafat supporters have been killed in the Israeli-occupied territories since the accord was signed Sept. 13. But it was not immediately clear whether the latest assassination was linked to the pact or to infighting between factions in the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Police said a gunner using a silencer-equipped pistol shot Lt. Col. Moueen Shabaita six times in the head at an entrance to this southern port city.

The 50-year-old Shabaita died several hours later in a local hospital. He was the second-in-command of the 3,000-strong militia that Arafat's Fatah faction maintains in Sidon's Ein el-Hilweh refugee camp.

U.S. troops prepare for rescue missions

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — In the desert at the edge of Mogadishu, U.S. forces were trained Monday in a new procedure for rescuing troops caught in fighting in the capital's narrow streets.

The exercise was developed after an Oct. 3 clash left 18 U.S. soldiers and about 300 Somalis dead.

Army Maj. Ed Donnelly, an operations officer for the exercise, said that in the Oct. 3 battle, American troops didn't have the ability to respond with speed. Heavy forces are not normally trained to operate within cities.

On Monday, M-1 Abrams and Bradley fighting vehicles roared through the desert as an unarmed Alpha scout plane flew overhead, responding to a mock call for help from a Pakistani unit in Mogadishu.

Since the Oct. 3 clash with forces loyal to Somali warlord Gen. Mohammed Farrah Aidid, American troops have kept largely to their bases and U.N. headquarters in central Mogadishu.

You'll always be my baby.

Whether you're a mother, a daughter, or both, the bond between a mother and a daughter can be one of the most fulfilling and cherished relationships of a lifetime. However, we also may, at times, wish we could trade our mother or daughter in for a "new and improved" model. But because we can't, we must learn to cope.

Mothers and Daughters: Growing Together, a seminar for mothers and daughters sponsored by The Women's Program at Menninger, will:
■ explore the mother/daughter relationship
■ provide ways to communicate effectively with your mother/daughter
■ suggest strategies for initiating change in your relationship

Meredith Titus, PhD, and Ellen Safier, MSW, are the featured presenters.

NAFTA debate spotlights Mexico

J.R. PRATHER
Collegian

North met south Monday in a debate of the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Gustavo del Castillo, chairman of the Department of North American Studies at El Colegio de la Frontera Norte, and Ivan Wyatt, president of the Kansas Farmers Union, faced off in the K-State Union Little Theatre as part of the third annual Latin American Lecture Series.

In his opening remarks, del Castillo joked about Mexico's anticipation of the signing of NAFTA.

"Over the last 500 years, Mexicans have lighted candles to the Virgin of Guadalupe," he said. "Now we light candles to NAFTA. Probably with the same results."

Del Castillo described the economic crisis that plagued Mexico during the 1980s, when inflation almost wiped out the country and output ceased to exist.

Mexico has begun to stabilize since the liberalization of its economy, he said.

"There was a new attitude that, to get things done, the Mexican economy had to open up," del Castillo said.

NAFTA is a stabilizing force for North America, he said.

Wyatt, who has made seven fact-finding visits to Mexico, said it should be clear that many people who oppose NAFTA are not against free trade.

They are for fair trade, he said.

"How does it affect people? If we fail to deal with that issue, any agreement will fail," Wyatt said.

On one of his visits, Wyatt said a Mexican representative told him they would have to get small farmers off the land to make it productive.

They would sell the land to foreign investors, who wanted to exploit it, he said.

He described children sent to beg in Mexico City and asked the audience if that sounded productive.

"You don't practice free trade by exploiting the people," Wyatt said.

Wyatt said the United States should follow the European Economic Community's example of bringing poorer countries up to the level of the more industrialized countries before admitting them to the EEC.

Del Castillo challenged Wyatt's claim that many industries would be drawn to Mexico because of low wages and environmental standards. He compared Mexico's economy to that of Orange County in California.

"You don't practice free trade by exploiting people."

IVAN WYATT
PRESIDENT OF THE KANSAS FARMERS UNION

"There's no way there will be a giant sucking of jobs to Mexico. The economy makes it impossible," del Castillo said.

Del Castillo also said because of the lack of systems to deal with rural-urban migration, there would be no decrease of illegal migration to the United States.

"If anyone argues that NAFTA will decrease migration to the United States, they are dead wrong. It will increase migration," he said.

This is because Mexicans who emigrate tend to be those who are better off financially, and as Mexico's economy increases, people will have more money, he said.

However, in the long run, when there are more jobs in Mexico, people will stay at home, he said.

Wyatt said there would be problems with uninspected trucks crossing the borders, citing examples of substandard beef crossing the border from Canada into the United States.

Del Castillo said there were going to be problems on both sides of the border.

"You have 16 million crossings a year. Obviously there are going to be problems," del Castillo said. "These are areas that have to be worked on.

Missouri professor explains aspects of free trade plan

MIKE HIND
Collegian

The NAFTA debate came to K-State students and faculty members Friday afternoon as a University of Missouri professor gave a lecture on the positive effects the ratification of NAFTA might have.

Dennis Heldman, professor of food engineering at the University of Missouri, spoke for about 40 minutes on the positive and negative effects the NAFTA plan will have on the food industry. About 50 people attended the lecture.

"If ratified, the NAFTA plan would make North America and Mexico a part of the largest free-trade area in the world with 360 million people and a projected $6.2 trillion in goods and services annually," Heldman said. "It would surpass even the European community."

Heldman pointed out Mexico's great economic dependence on the United States with a graphic on economic exports and imports between the two countries.

"Ninety percent of what Mexico exports is to the U.S., and this only accounts for 7 percent of our imports," he said.

"Seventy-five percent of Mexican imports are from the U.S. The projected overall gain to the U.S. economy is around $300 million."

Heldman posed the question to the audience of whether the United States would want to be so closely affiliated with a country that has had such a poor record with the environment.

He also addressed the issue of losing jobs to the low-cost labor from Mexico.

"There will probably be some low-skill jobs that do go to Mexico, but low labor costs are not the whole picture," Heldman said.

"Companies will still take into account skill rate in high-skill jobs. If the position requires skill, the job would probably stay in the U.S. "

Areas that stand to lose from the production standpoint with the passage of the bill would be Florida, California, and Arizona, while the Midwest would gain.

"Grain and oilseed producers stand to benefit much more with the passage of the bill than do the livestock, meat, dairy and horticulture producers. U.S. grain production is just far to superior to anyone in the world," he said.

Heldman commented on the prospects of the United States being isolated in the economic world by not passing the NAFTA agreement.

"The isolation of our economy from the rest of the world would be detrimental in the long run," he said.

Students' mistrust of tuition increases based on experience

During the Nov. 11 meeting, Student Senate missed a perfect opportunity to voice students' concerns on an issue that will directly affect all students' pocketbooks.

The senators, under pressure from the administration, delayed action on a resolution that would have sent an unmistakable message to the governor of Kansas. The message should have been that students of K-State are not in favor of the Partnership in Excellence 27-percent tuition increase plan. The resolution was tabled until the Dec. 2 meeting to see if the governor will include the plan in her budget.

Opponents of tabling the resolution agree with comments recently made by former two-term Governor John Carlin. "If I were governor, I would really like to know what the students are thinking in advance, before I put out a budget that would directly affect students — instead of putting out a budget without student input and then have them come out against after it's been decided, and I could not change it."

One of the reasons students do not support this plan is the simple lack of trust. When the Margin of Excellence plan was put into place in 1988, the students and the state worked together to increase faculty salaries. Both sides fulfilled their part of the deal for two years.

But in 1991, the governor suggested funding the third year of the Margin of Excellence, and the students put up their part of the deal. Unfortunately, the state legislature did not return the money to the universities and kept it for other projects.

Under this plan, there is no guarantee if the students pay higher tuition that money will ever make it back to the University in the form of faculty salaries.

Because student government has failed to represent the students, it will be up to the students themselves to contact the governor and express their opposition to the tuition-increase plan.

Our loves in life are a direct result of our experiences living it

LAJEAN RAU

There are a few things in my life that I love.

I don't mean love, like I love cheesecake or the bank robbery scene in "Raising Arizona."

I love things that make me laugh out loud, things that make me smile through tears I'm trying to hide, places I don't want to leave when it's time to go and beautiful days when I'm happy for no real reason.

But there are certain things I love in a different way. Most of them are people. It's the kind of love that is so much a part of your being that it helps define who you are.

I feel this way about my family. My parents, my sister and brothers, my grandparents, my aunts and uncles, my three cousins and their kids.

I feel this kind of love for my friends. The ones who have been with me through so much. Some I see almost every day, not telling them often enough how much I love them. Some I haven't talked to in months, or even years. I take for granted they will always be there. Love sometimes makes you take people for granted.

I feel this kind of love when I look through my photo albums and when I hear songs that remind me of another time. I felt it when I left home for college, when I pulled out of my gravel driveway and started crying because I already missed the place I was so ready to leave.

It's the kind of love you feel when you've found the person you want to spend the rest of your life with.

This love is a decision as much as it is a feeling. It develops slowly out of gratitude, familiarity and respect. It makes you ignore, even love, idiosyncrasies and faults.

It's hard to leave, or to lose, anyone or anything you love this way.

I had a conversation this weekend with a new friend, also an English teacher, about kids today. About how so many of them lack self esteem and discipline. About how not enough people are worried enough to change that.

Most people I know have a pretty positive self image and enough motivation to succeed at what they do. But most people I know will or have graduated from college.

I forget that sometimes, how lucky and full of potential I am. Somewhere along the line, I apparently developed self-esteem and discipline.

We talked about how a lot of kids don't seem to care about much. Their education and their future in particular. I thought about my students. I struggled to figure out what it was that separated me, and most of the people I know, from those kids who act as if they don't care about anything.

It sounds corny, but I love some of the experiences I've had. One of them is working for this newspaper. In spite of the times here I was lazy or selfish, it has taught me as much about responsibility and pride in myself and in my work as anyone or anything I've ever known.

This feeling comes often only in hindsight. I feel it about my experiences in 4-H as a kid and in CYO in high school. I know now they mean so much to me because a few key ingredients were there — opportunity, expectation and ownership.

They helped shape me because they challenged me to contribute, improve and achieve. They expected great things of me. And they were mine. They made me feel I was part of the reason they existed at all.

This newspaper will be a part of the person I am when I leave here as much as the people who have touched my life. I owe it a lot.

Gratitude, familiarity and respect.

I can't help but think in a time where when money is tight there is so much talk of scrapping high-school extracurricular activities that someone's missing the point. That when so many parents barely make their kids go to school, much less get involved in something there or in their community, that they're doing their kids a disservice.

The only reason I did some things as a kid was because my parents made me. But then I enjoyed them, and in retrospect, I appreciate them.

The only reason I started writing for the paper was because I had to. My major required it. But then I enjoyed it. And in retrospect, I appreciate it.

I never wrote anything great. As editor, I never produced an extraordinary paper. But I tried. Not because I had to but because I wanted to. And I learned a hell of a lot in the process. All it took was a little push in the right direction.

Parents, teachers, administrators, peers — give someone that little push. It's the easiest way I know to make a real difference in this world.

I've wondered a lot lately if I made the right decision when I went into teaching. I think I did. I want to be there to give that little push. It's my way of saying thanks.

▶ PICKING UP

Even in a meat market, 'No' still means exactly the same thing - 'No'

Editor,

At the risk of throwing more fuel to the fire over campus sexual violence, I would like to state what I think may be an underlying problem for which many may realize along with myself.

As bad as it may sound, I was one of the many K-State students partying at Last Chance on Saturday night, and yes, I admit that maybe I overstepped my boundaries by talking to — in her boyfriend's terms, "picking up on" — his woman (If one thinks that small talk for five minutes with Valerie and three other people can be defined as such). I apologize to Valerie and her boyfriend if I upset them. But that is not the subject of this letter.

While in Chance, it was not hard to notice that at least a small percentage of the male crowd was doing "picking up" that would have made my act look like a good deed. It would cause me to wonder if my friend, Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, isn't right in saying that men should think about their actions, especially before they decide to get their confidence or "testosterone" levels up by downing a few beers or equivalent. I overheard at least a half a dozen women planning to leave, simply to avoid being the target of male fondling or lewd comments by drunken drones. If that isn't enough, I can tell you more.

At least two of my close friends, both from K-State, have admitted to being raped at some time in their present college experiences but were afraid to come out with it at the time thinking the guy may get upset and hurt them worse.

This semester, I have seen and felt that I, or someone else, should have helped two unfortunate females on a campus bench who were in tears over something, only to watch them run away when I first offered to help, (guy trouble or not, it was upsetting enough to make me wonder).

I feel in some ways this campus has a long way to go in respects to campus safety and sexual attitudes.

To some young men who think it cool to use women as a "piece of desirable meat," I think that it is time to close the meat market for the sake of the female students at K-State. They are here for an education as well.

If you want to get the aggression out, play some rugby. If you want to get close to someone of the female persuasion, try some honest, open respect and communication. Take a hint, like I did at this letter's beginning, that NO still means NO, even if it comes from "her."

Multiculturalism – child of propoganda

JOHN HART

In the culture war, as in all wars, truth is the first casualty.

Nowhere is this more apparent than with the propaganda that has propelled the vision of multicultural education across our nation's colleges and universities. Intellectual imperialists, often consisting of university administrators and professors, consistently propagandize three key terms — diversity, tolerance and ignorance — in their effort to colonize the minds of students.

The word diversity, as commonly understood and defined, means difference, variety or assortment. A variety of differences, or diversity, is only limited by the size of the group that contains those differences, be it a couple or the world.

Yet, multiculturalists rarely use the word "diversity" in the context of the entire population of the United States. Instead, they promote some differences in preference to others such as homosexuals, women and ethnic minorities over whites, men and evangelical Christians.

By preferring certain differences over others, multiculturalists show that their liberal view of diversity is not a reflection of the population of the United States but a reflection of their personal biases and unique social agenda.

President Clinton's selection of his cabinet illustrates this point beautifully. He said he wanted his cabinet to be diverse and to "look like America." He succeeded in nominating a large number of homosexuals and other minorities, but he failed in nominating many conservative Republicans or citizens from the 57 percent of Americans who didn't vote for him.

Clinton's cabinet does not look like the truly diverse America at all, but rather an America that follows his unique ideology.

Tolerance is another word that performs an important function in the multicultural propaganda machine. In a speech recommended to me by John Ashcroft, former governor of Missouri, Senator Dan Coats of Indiana says of tolerance, "For many professors, tolerance requires us to abandon a belief in moral truth — in good and evil, in right and wrong ... Every lifestyle is equal ... The goal is a conscience swept neat, tidy and empty — unlittered by convictions that might divide us."

With this attitude, multiculturalists construct a false contradiction between a belief in moral absolutes and "tolerance," manipulating students into picking one or the other. Case in point: Those who believe that homosexuality is wrong are labeled homophobic and intolerant.

I believe that true tolerance must involve a profound love and respect for fellow man along with deep moral conviction. It is good to grasp the one and not let go of the other (Ecclesiastes 7:18). Moral compromise is not an option, nor is self-righteous condemnation.

When you abandon moral conviction, there is no ground left to stand on in any fight against intolerance.

The word "ignorance" functions as a propaganda eraser that universities often use to clear a student's mind of previously held, politically incorrect beliefs. A professor from the University of Pennsylvania once said, "In short, this university is a tolerant and diverse community, and if you don't agree with its particular notions of tolerance and diversity, it will gladly reeducate (reprogram) you."

The condescending and arrogant attitude of this professor is deeply disturbing, but not uncommon. In most accusations of ignorance, the true meaning behind the slur is, "If you were only as smart or as knowledgeable as I am, you would automatically agree with my ideology. You disagree, therefore you are ignorant." The progandized definition of ignorance suppresses freedom of conscience and holds reasoned debate in utter contempt by treating opposing ideas as below intellectual consideration.

Don Hedrick, professor of English, provided an insightful comment about the propaganda of multiculturalism in an Oct. 4 letter to the editor regarding Pat Robertson, whose ideas are not part of the biased propagandized notion of diversity. In his letter, Hedrick, one of the most outspoken liberal professors on campus, wrote that Robertson's invitation is "casting doubt on our (the University's) rhetoric of diversity and tolerance." What the University has to offer us about diversity and tolerance then is only rhetoric — language that is showy and elaborate but largely empty of clear ideas and sincere emotion, as defined by Webster.

As K-State considers a diversity-overlay requirement, I encourage the University community to think deeply about multiculturalism and the propaganda that drives it.

Think and speak for yourself. Exercise your freedom of conscience before an imposition of the liberal, multicultural world-view contained in the overlay threatens it any more.

Club educates about alcohol

MELISSA DUGAN
Collegian

Educating students about problems associated with alcohol and alcohol's influence on sexual-violence crimes are just two of the goals of the K-State BACCHUS club.

BACCHUS stands for Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students.

Although BACCHUS has only been at K-State for three years, it is the oldest organization committed to the education, training and support for peer prevention of alcohol abuse, said Jeff Bond, freshman in math and chairperson of the membership committee.

The organization's philosophy is that college students relate best to college students, Roxanne Ayotte, faculty adviser of BACCHUS, said.

Some of the goals of the club are to raise awareness and educate, as well as to teach responsible drinking. The theme for the year is "Buckle up sober."

"We're not here to condone nor condemn," Bond said. He also said the group is open to everyone. He said it is important for people to know they can be users or non-users to be a part of the BACCHUS organization.

"It's all about choices," Ayotte said. BACCHUS tries to present facts to college students and let them make up their own mind, she said.

Bond said one of the main reasons the organization is not as effective as it would like to be is because of lack of membership. Club members are sponsoring membership drives at K-State and at the high-school level.

Ayotte said the organization is very effective despite its membership because the people involved with it share the information with their friends. She also said everyone in the organization affects at least one person, which makes a difference.

Some activities the club has sponsored this year include the National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, White Faces Day and the 40 seconds of silence at the KU-K-State game, which was in remembrance for people who have died in drunken-driving accidents.

Ayotte said the organization tries to put on activities that are alternatives to alcohol. For example, the organization has parties without the kegs.

Next semester, Ayotte said, the first state-wide BACCHUS conference will be at K-State. Another event happening in the spring semester is the National Drugged Dash Drinking Driving week, also known as 3-D. Ayotte said if nothing specific is planned, the organization will at least have a table set up with information.

BACCHUS is planning to promote a safe spring break, Ayotte said. She said the organization will inform students of the different ways to be safe during spring break. The issues they will discuss will include alcohol awareness, safe sex and skin protection from the sun.

Gubernatorial candidate to address social ills

BOB FLEENER
Collegian

Gene Bicknell hammered out his campaign platform for the Kansas governor's race on three specific planks for the College Republicans Monday evening in the Union.

"I can assure you, I'll be the only candidate that won't be looking for a higher office. I can also assure you that I'm not going to be afraid to make some hard-line decisions and some stands on the issues and make the decisions for the betterment of Kansas and its citizens and not for Gene Bicknell," Bicknell said.

Bicknell said he is an idealist. He believes a person has to leave something as a legacy, he said.

Fiscal management, social reform and crime are the three issues Bicknell said he will take on as governor. He said these issues are the ones facing Kansans today and believes he can make Kansas an exemplary state by focusing on those issues.

Since Bicknell ran for governor in 1986, the state's budget is up 71 percent, and sales tax is 107 percent higher than it was. He said there are now more than 5,000 more state employees. This is excess government for Kansas, Bicknell said.

"I tell everybody that if you're going to hire someone to give them an eight-hour state job to do, don't just hire one. Because no one can stand around and be idle by themselves. They need someone to talk with, so hire two," Bicknell said.

Government does this kind of thing because it can always get more money from the taxpayers if it runs out, he said.

"I believe we can have social reform. I believe that people on welfare and other social services have pride and self-respect.

"I think that if we give them an opportunity to earn and work for what they get, they are going to feel better about themselves. They are going to feel better about the misfortunate situation they are in because it is not just a handout," Bicknell said.

Opportunities he will provide for individuals on welfare consist of simple skilled tasks, he said. Welfare recipients will be given the opportunity to paint government buildings, public buildings and not-for-profit buildings, as well as picking up trash and working on road repairs.

"We need to bring pride and self respect back to those people less fortunate. We need to force them to be involved in something constructive," Bicknell said.

Crimes are being committed at a younger age every year, Bicknell said. This, he said, bothers him greatly. Drive-by shootings, easy access to guns without background checks, criminals getting off on light sentences and drugs are key problems, Bicknell said.

"I am the law-and-order candidate. I am willing to stand up and strike down the gangs. I am ready to face the criminals head on. I am willing to teach them that going to prison is not like going to a country club. And I am a strong advocate of boot camps."

There are new ways of dealing with crime, Bicknell said. Boot camps are a great place to begin, he said. The discipline, forced identity, physical training and educational aspects will encourage the youth to take responsibility for their actions, Bicknell said.

"I believe strongly in boot camps. I think the youngster caught on the street or in the school with a handgun should have to spend 30 days in one of these camps. We need to convince these individuals that are going to commit crimes that we're not going to fool around with them."

Kansas has an advantage over other states on how to begin to deal with crime, Bicknell said.

"The bulk of our towns and cities are islands. We can go to the inner part of these islands and push people out of it. The right people, the bad people. The people who do drugs, commit crimes and burglaries," Bicknell said.

If the North American Free Trade Agreement passes, the United States could send criminals to Mexico and see if they like prison down there, Bicknell said.

Bicknell is a Kansas businessman. He was raised in Baxter, though he now resides in Pittsburg.

He started working at age 11. He was chairman and founder of the National Pizza Co., Pitt Plastics, National Mills and C.B. International. He founded the Gene Bicknell Center for Entrepreneurship. He also teaches business classes at various universities.

"I never wanted to be rich," Bicknell said. "But I never wanted to be poor," Bicknell said.

men, she said.

"African women are not encouraged to have ambition or education," Aidoo said. "They are taught from a young age to grow up to take care of some man."

However, Aidoo concluded that African women can hold their own, achieving high positions throughout society.

"We believe that in our hands, our futures lie," she said. "After all, we are one of the world's least-touched resources."

Ron Speight, graduate student in education and audience member, said Aidoo provided insight to misconceptions of Africa.

"I feel like the media paints a disturbed picture of Africa, and I hope that her speech helped to clear up some of those misconceptions," he said.

Doubles team reaches Rolex finals

Kuregian and Meidell team up, become 1st K-State players to reach finals

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Two K-State tennis players made history last weekend.

Karina Kuregian and Masha Meidell became the first tennis players in school history to make the finals of the ITA Rolex Regional Championships Sunday in Salt Lake City.

The Wildcat duo, seeded fifth in the tournament, won four straight doubles matches in three days, but fell short in the finals to KU's Kim Rogers and Abby Wood, the No. 4 seed, 6-1, 3-6, 6-4.

"Masha and Karina improved a great deal to get to the finals," Coach Steve Bietau said.

"They did a lot of things right to put themselves in that position. This tournament was the best effort I have seen from them as a doubles team. It was tactical mistakes that cost them the match," he said.

No other players in school history, including singles and doubles, have advanced to the finals of the regional championships.

Bietau said the pair wasn't beaten physically — it was mental mistakes that kept them from capturing the title.

"They just made some costly mistakes," he said. "They had the physical advantage. The things they can do with the ball are great. They both hit the ball very hard."

"They added improvement to their game with each match. They just need to get their doubles tactics more sound," he said.

Kuregian and Meidell played a total of 10 matches during the fall season, sporting an 8-2 record.

Bietau said the two showed a high level of skill in singles at the beginning of the season, but it was at the end of the season that they showed signs of a potent tandem.

"They are both very talented players, and I felt early in the season that they were just two singles players out there playing for us," Bietau said.

"But the process has started where they are managing themselves to stay at the right level. They are starting to complement each other.

"Actually it is a plus, because the things they need to add are relatively simple."

Kuregian and Meidell, however, won't get another shot at improving further until January.

The ITA Rolex Regional Championships was the final outing of the fall tennis season.

But Bietau said the timing was right for the season to conclude.

"The fall season has been grueling," he said.

"They each played three matches on Thursday, three on Friday.

Karina played two on Saturday, and they both played in the finals on Sunday."

The non-stop tournament took its toll, especially on Kuregian, Bietau said.

"Karina had huge open blisters on her feet after the tournament," he said. "They had to drill a hole in her toenail to let some blood out."

Bietau said Kuregian and Meidell are the kind of players who might actually come back stronger with a break.

"It might create some eagerness," Bietau said.

"If they are fit and come back eager, they will be better off. We'll use the break to focus on conditioning and improve the fitness level."

NCAA regulations permit the team to condition in the winter and start spring practice in January.

Kuregian and Meidell also competed in the singles competition.

Kuregian made it to the quarterfinals before losing to KU's Mindy Weiner 6-0, 7-6.

Meidell competed through the third round before bowing out to 6-3, 6-3.

"Their future is bright," Bietau said.

"We'll see when the new rankings come out. They have a shot. They are beginning to play better and better."

K-State barely misses sweep of weekly Big Eight awards

DEREK SIMMONS
Collegian

Wide receiver Andre Coleman was a unanimous selection for the Big Eight Conference Offensive Player of the Week Monday for his efforts in K-State's 31-21 win against Missouri.

The victory against the Tigers gave K-State the six required Division-I wins necessary to qualify for a postseason bowl game.

Andre Coleman

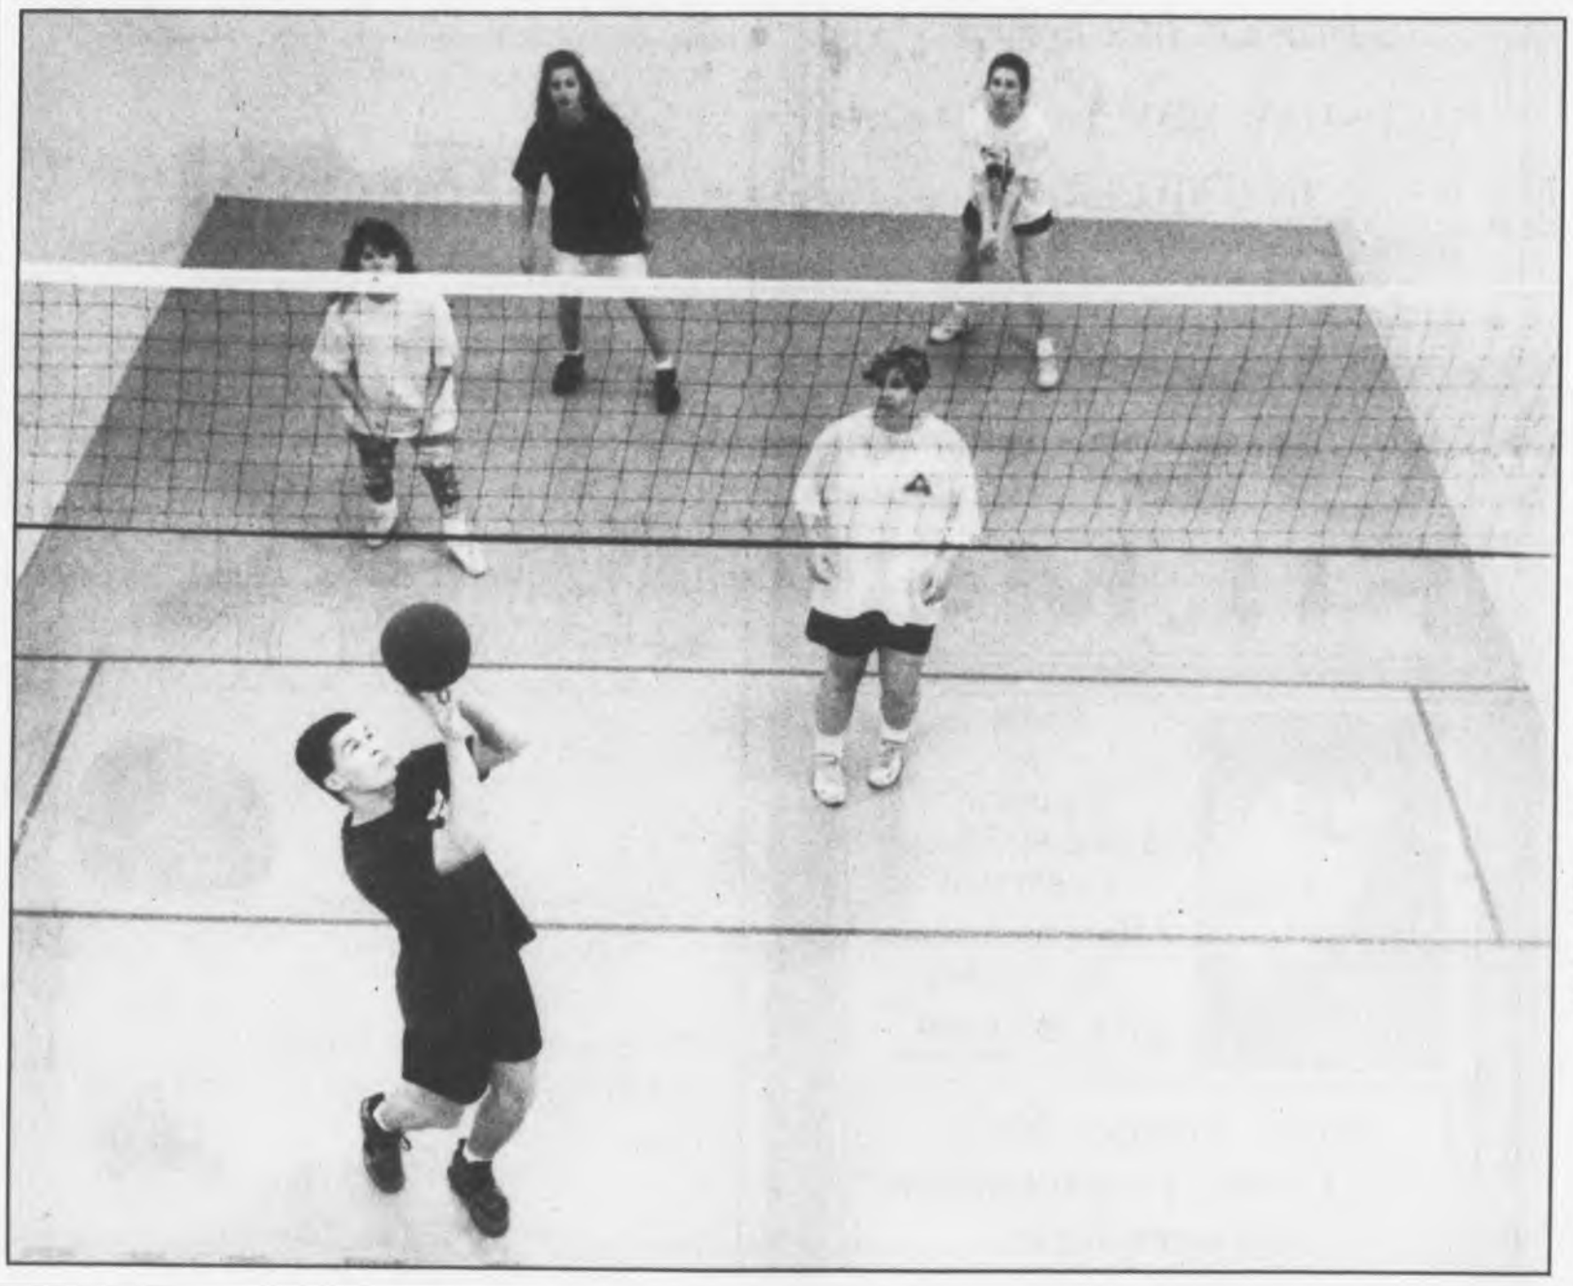
The 5-foot-10, 170-pound senior had perhaps the finest all-purpose game of his collegiate career, which was also his home finale, amassing 270 all-purpose yards on just 10 plays.

Coleman had three receptions for 112 yards, including touchdown catches of 27 and 65 yards that erased the Wildcats' 13-10 deficit in the fourth quarter.

Coleman established a K-State career record for the most punt return yards in a game with five returns for 122 yards.

Coleman ranks 15th in the nation in all-purpose yards with 142.30 yards per game.

He also leads the conference and is fourth in the nation in punt returns with an average of 14.71 yards per return.



John Butler

Senior defensive end John Butler just missed being tabbed the Big Eight Defensive Player of the Week, which would have given K-State a sweep in the league's players of the week awards.

Butler had three sacks for minus-three yards, including a sack of Missouri's Brian Sallee that created a fumble.

Butler registered nine tackles, including five unassisted.

Butler lost in a split vote to Oklahoma's Mario Freeman.

KU lands top hoops recruit

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — Kansas basketball coach Roy Williams landed a top recruit when 7-footer Raef LaFrentz picked the Jayhawks over Iowa.

LaFrentz, regarded by some talent evaluators as the top high-school prospect in the nation, disclosed his choice Monday in Monona, Iowa.

At a pre-season news conference in Lawrence Monday afternoon, Williams didn't say anything specific about LaFrentz because NCAA regulations prohibit coaches from discussing recruits until they signed a letter of intent.

"We tried to recruit three kids real hard, and we came out one for three," Williams said.

"We got one piece of good news and one piece of bad news."

The good news was an obvious reference to the announcement that LaFrentz had picked Kansas. The bad news apparently referred to the decision by Jahidi White of Cardinal Ritter High in St. Louis to attend Georgetown.

The early signing period for basketball players ends Wednesday.

Kansas has four scholarships for next year and is still looking at other prospects who aren't expected to sign until spring.

LaFrentz averaged 29.9 points, 16.9 rebounds and four blocked shots last season for Monona MFL-Mar-Mac.

"I understand how people here in the state of Iowa would like to see me as a Hawkeye," LaFrentz said in a statement.

"It's a fantastic program.

"However, in my heart, I feel I would be more able to reach my goals at the University of Kansas," he said.

"I love their style of play and see myself fitting in very easily.

"Plus, they have a great group of people and players that I feel comfortable with."

COLUMN

Population boom of birds on opening day a positive sign for area hunters

Everyone who has been around me this past week, or those of you who happened to read my column last week, have heard me say the population of pheasant and quail is phenomenal.

I never in my wildest dreams ever expected to experience what I did this past weekend.

TAD MUSSELWHITE

The night before opening day was a typical one.

I sat with a couple of guys from our group talking about how many birds were mere hours away from our game pouches.

We all had been sitting around the small dining room table talking and joking about who would get the most birds and who would win the pot for that treasured first bird.

Before anything was decided, we all turned in for bed.

I awakened around 6:30 a.m. on Saturday by a hunter of our group, softly whispering my name.

I had planned on being in the fields by this time.

By the time we had all congregated and loaded the dog into the truck, it was well past sunrise, and all you could hear were the sounds of shotguns echoing in the distance.

We drove to a field of slew where we had traditionally started every season, but as luck would have it, hunters had already begun their attack on the field.

One of the men in our group, who lived in the area, pulled his truck to the front of the line of vehicles and told everyone to follow him.

He took us to another patch of tall grass, which was considerably smaller than the first field.

I loaded my shotgun with shells and got in line to make a sweep through the field.

We were almost to the end of the field when the man at the end of line flushed up a hen pheasant and yelled, "Hen!"

No sooner than I looked up to see the bird, the ground around the man came to a boil with pheasants flying out of the grass around him.

The guns on that end of line began to roar, and birds were dropping from the sky.

I smiled as I watched the men nearly shoot their limit of pheasant.

Seconds later, my end of the line was busy shooting at two covey of quail, which had left their cover in front of us.

Never can I recall a day where I have seen so many birds.

No matter what you may have heard about the birds this season in Kansas, I will tell you that Kansas is definitely building up its population of pheasant and quail.

Nowhere else in the country will you be as pleased about pheasant and quail hunting as you will be right here in Kansas.

Osborne refuses to play lobbyist role

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Needing to move up at least one more poll spot for a national championship game, Nebraska coach Tom Osborne will leave politics to politicians.

He and his No. 3 team will simply concentrate on their game Nov. 26 against No. 15 Oklahoma.

"I'm not going to lobby. The more you politic, the less it helps you," Osborne said after the dust settled over the latest polls and showed the Huskers on the outside looking in.

"My stance is if you keep winning, you may get fortunate enough to win it."

In the meantime, No. 20 K-State is savoring its second postseason appearance in school history.

Stull's troubled Missouri Tigers gave it a good effort at K-State and even took a 13-10 third-quarter lead behind backup quarterback Brian Sallee.

But the Chad May to Andre Coleman passing duo proved too slick to handle, and the Wildcats (7-2-1, 3-2-1) closed out an unbeaten home schedule with a 31-21 victory.

Oklahoma and Colorado both seem to be playing some of their best football of the season. The Sooners (8-2, 4-2) held Oklahoma State (3-7, 0-6) to embarrassing offensive totals in a 31-0 victory while Colorado beat Kansas offensively, defensively and in specials teams during a 38-14 pasting.

Behind Calvin Jones and Tommie Frazier, Nebraska (10-0 overall, 6-0 Big Eight) crushed Iowa State 49-17 Saturday and worked its way from No. 4 to No. 3 in the Associated Press survey.

K-State clinched its second bowl bid ever and its first since the 1982 team lost 14-3 to Wisconsin in the Independence Bowl.

Even Bill Snyder seemed moved.

"When we walked in here, we told the team we had an opportunity for the greatest turnaround in college football history," the K-State coach said in a rare moment of public emotion. "I wouldn't say we've made it yet, but we have inched closer to our goal."

Among the Big Eight's four bowl teams, only Nebraska knows exactly where it's going. The regular season wraps up this Saturday for everybody but the Sooners and Huskers, who play in Lincoln the day after Thanksgiving.

The second-place team will be the Big Eight's Coalition bowl team and could wind up with a good Jan. 1 matchup. The third-place team gets to go to the Aloha Bowl if it chooses. No. 4 in the Big Eight is guaranteed the Copper Bowl.

If K-State is given a bowl choice, Snyder promises the decision will not be made without consulting his players.

"I will take it to the players. They will have a very heavy vote in which bowl game to go to," Snyder said

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

■ Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open for publication. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be kept in the strictest confidence. The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Dear Cassandra,

I knew a certain girl for three years. We started dating seriously last year. We got along very well, it seemed. Then one day she said good-bye and left very suddenly. After that, we communicated very seldomly.

This year, after returning to school, she called again. I don't desire to talk to her. This has been one gigantic roller coaster.

However, I do not wish to hurt her in any way. I still feel deeply about her. My friends tell me to stay away from her.

She has no concept of how I feel, and I will not explain to her. I think that she wants to jerk me around some more, which she could do very easily if I let her. What should I do?

Signed,
Lied to once too often

Dear Lied to,

I'm not sure why you wrote in. You've already made up your mind, it seems.

You said you "don't desire to talk to her" and you "will not explain to her" how you feel.

My advice to you is to re-examine this resolve of yours for no further communication. And I'll tell you why.

In your letter, you included another note to me on the grounds that it not be published. In this note you told me, in essence, that you still, even after a year, have some rather strong feelings for this woman.

This tells me you need to resolve this issue with this woman and go on with your life. When you do resolve it, she may be in your life, and she may not. My point is, the only way to resolve this is to talk with her.

When you speak with her, don't be afraid to tell her exactly how you feel. Tell her how she hurt you. Tell her how it wasn't fair for her to play with your emotions. Get all of that pain out. Take care of yourself.

Telling her these things won't necessarily open you up to being jerked around again. Only you can truly allow that.

If she tells you she is genuinely sorry and has, after a year, changed, then you may want to weigh the risk of trying it again with her. If she sounds the same, then wish her well and move on with your life.

Series features trumpet

LORI ARMER
Collegian

The Department of Music's Faculty Artist Series for 1993-94 once again prepares to excite musical enthusiasts of all backgrounds.

The series continues with a trumpet performance by Gary Mortenson, associate professor of music, at 8 p.m. tonight in All Faiths Chapel.

FACULTY RECITAL
■ Gary Mortenson will perform on trumpet at 8 p.m. tonight in All Faiths Chapel. Admission is free.

William Wingfield, instructor of music, will accompany Mortenson on piano.

Mortenson's performance will feature a variety of music eras.

"It's a chance to hear some good pieces of the 20th century," Wingfield said.

Mortenson said the recital would feature Haydn's concerto for trumpet and piano, which is the centerpiece of the performance.

"It is classical and the most important work written for trumpet," he said.

Mortenson also said there will be a piece without piano, in which his wife Kristin will play viola.

"It is a contemporary work by Jan Koetsier and is called 'Duo Giocoso for Trumpet and Viola,'" he said.

Other pieces to be featured are the first movement of Halsey Stevens, an intricate rhythm work, and a jazz ballad entitled "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child," arranged by Donald Hunsberger.

"It's a change of pace," Mortenson said. "It features the flugelhorn and trumpet."

Other pieces that will be played, as shown on the announcement, include "Intrada" by Otto Ketting, "Badinage" by Eugene Bozza and "Morceau de Concert" by J.G. Pennequin.

The yearly recitals are normal expectations of music department individuals, Mortenson said.

Hendrix's sounds replayed

Better have a seat. This is kinda scary.

Paul Rodgers and Co. have released a mini-album titled "The Hendrix Set," featuring all Jimi Hendrix covers. Neal Schon plays all the guitar.

Rodgers, singer for Bad Company and the Firm, and Schon, guitar player for Journey and Bad English, teamed up with bassist

REVIEW

Todd Jensen and drummer Deen Castronovo, both of Hardline, to record their versions of "Purple Haze," "Stone Free," "Little Wing," "Manic Depression" and "Foxy Lady."

Surprisingly, this is not as sacrilegious as it initially sounds. For the most part, this band of washed-up '70s rock icons plays Hendrix's songs faithfully, with very few changes in construction or tone.

Schon does an admirable job of copying Jimi's guitar phrasing, especially considering the entire album was recorded live. The frantic intensity of "Manic Depression" shines through loud and clear, and "Little Wing," while not up to par with Stevie Ray Vaughn's version, retains some of the hauntingly beautiful sounds Hendrix laid down more than 20 years ago.

Rodgers himself delivers Jimi's lyrics with as much soul as can be expected. Jensen and Castronovo are hardly Noel Redding and Mitch Mitchell, but they get the job done.

The problem with this album is all the songs sound too much like Hendrix. It might be entertaining live, but why buy an album full of meticulously copied Hendrix tunes when you can listen to the real thing?

Perhaps if Rodgers and Co. had taken a few artistic liberties with these songs, the album would be worth the plastic it was pressed on. On the other hand, it probably would have been a travesty.

In any case, if you've never heard of any of these songs, don't buy Rodgers' "Hendrix Set." Buy "Are You Experienced?," "Axis: Bold As Love" or "Smash Hits." You'll be doing yourself a favor.

Pet of the Year contest near

KIMBERLY HEFLING
Collegian

A special animal in your life could be the 1993 Pet of the Year.

Pet owners have until Dec. 1 to nominate their favorite animal for the 1993 Pet of the Year Award, sponsored by the Kansas Veterinary Medical Association.

The purpose of the contest is to honor animals who have done a heroic deed or have been a benefit to their owners.

"We especially welcome pets special to children, handicapped people or people with special disabilities," said Dr. Marvin Samuelson, chairman of the award committee for the KVMA.

"We're looking for animals with special meaning to people."

However, Dr. John Lyons, public relations committee member for KVMA, said the pet doesn't have to have accomplished a great deed.

"For some students, when they come home from school, their pets are there and are someone to relate to," Lyons said. "Other students live alone, and their pet is their only friend."

Dr. Joe Cook, public relations committee member for KVMA, said the essay should answer questions about what the pet adds to the owner's life.

Cook said he recommends keeping essays one page in length and submitting a letter of recommendation for the award from the pet's veterinarian with the essay.

In the two previous years the award has been given, dogs have been the most common animals nominated. But animals such as cats, horses and livestock have also been entered.

PET CONTEST

- Send your pet nominations to:
  Kansas Veterinary Medical Association
  816 S.W. Tyler, Suite 200
  Topeka, Kan. 66612

The 1992 winner was a dog that alerted a family of a fire. The 1991 winner was a dog that saved a girl in a basement from carbon monoxide poisoning, Samuelson said.

Lyons said two years ago one applicant decided to go to veterinarian school after helping his pet ram's broken leg.

"He said the animal helped him decide what to do with his life."

Some of the applications are humorous.

One young boy from western Kansas nominated his dog and said it keeps coyotes away from his house, Lyons said.

"Some are well written. Some are not well written," Lyons said. "They're still fun to read."

Although understood for years by veterinarians, Lyons said people are just beginning to understand the human-animal bond.

"People just now are starting to realize how important it is," he said.

The pet selected to receive the award will be honored during ceremonies at the Kansas Veterinary Medical Association's Annual Convention, Jan. 8, 1994, in Kansas City, Mo.

Missouri flood causes homelessness, death

High waters sweep cars off bridges; 4 dead

ASSOCIATED PRESS

About 350 of the 1,500 people in the small town of Elvins, Mo., in St. Francois County, had to be evacuated after the rains came Sunday, Flat River Police Chief Bill Holloway said.

At least 300 people were unable to return to their homes by late Sunday night, and Holloway said most stayed with relatives. Others went to a shelter at a local church.

"The river's gone down, but it'll be a few weeks for these people to get everything cleaned up and back in their homes," Holloway said. "It just picked up cars and moved them and washed railroad tracks out.

"I've been here about 52 years, and this is the worst I've ever seen. It's just unbelievable how fast the water came up," he said.

Much of southern and eastern Missouri was under flash flood warnings through Sunday, but the National Weather Service said most rivers in the state had either crested Sunday night or were expected to crest early today.

About 50 people were evacuated from the town of Ellington and were staying at the high school, a Red Cross representative said. The town also has no clean water after a pump failed on Saturday.

"It's just a mess down here," Reynolds County Sheriff's Deputy John Buford said. "It's no fun."

Iron County Sheriff Kenneth Ruble didn't have specific numbers but said several people had to be evacuated Sunday.

"It just kept pouring," Ruble said. "The river fell a lot today. They come up quickly, and they go down quickly. In two or three days, we'll back to normal if we don't get more rain."

National Weather Service Meteorologist Todd MeShea said the heaviest rains had moved out of Missouri by Sunday afternoon but could return on Tuesday. In Madison and Perry counties, six inches had fallen since Saturday night.

The rain and floods contributed to four deaths, including two teenagers in Christian County who drowned about 2 a.m. Sunday when high water swept their car off a bridge about eight miles north of Sparta.

The accident killed Jessica Carpenter and April Warwick, both 18 and from Rogersville.

Dallas Landers, 60, of Patterson, drowned Sunday morning when he tried to drive across a rain-swollen creek in Wayne County southeast Missouri, the Missouri State Highway Patrol said. Landers was swept downstream and pronounced dead at the scene.

Gary Freeman, 32, of Bernie, died Sunday morning when he tried to drive across a creek and his vehicle was swept about 60 feet downstream, the patrol said. Freeman was trapped in the car and drowned. The accident occurred about 10:30 a.m. at a private residence seven miles southwest of Fredericktown.

Authorities in Ozark County searched most of Sunday for three men and a boy who were feared drowned on the North Fork River. But the search ended happily when the Springfield residents were all found safe after spending the day hunting, deputy Jack Dougherty said.

"As we were waiting for some four-wheelers to come and go in looking for them, they came walking out of the woods," Dougherty said. "They wanted some ice because they had killed a deer and wanted to ice it down. They were completely unaware of the search."

A few homes in the Bakersfield area were evacuated, numerous roads were closed due to flooding, and all low-water bridges in Ozark County were impassable Sunday.

Ozark County crews rescued a group of about a dozen campers stranded in the Caney Mountain Hunting area on Sunday.

In neighboring Howell County, much of downtown West Plains was under about a foot of water. Rescue crews evacuated the Country Meadows trailer park on the edge of town. The Howell County fire department spent the day rounding up about a dozen propane tanks lifted by flood waters from the Howell Creek and floated downstream.

Applications for spring positions on the Collegian are due Wednesday in Kedzie 103.

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD
Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Union plans Children's Book Week celebration

Big Bird will serve refreshments to children who participate in Children's Book Week at K-State.

Children's Book Week will be celebrated Nov. 15-19 at the K-State Union Bookstore.

Teachers from Hoeflin Stonehouse Childcare Center and KSU Childcare Cooperative, Jardine, will help the K-State Union celebrate the book week, said Tricia Macelbust, graduate assistant at Hoeflin Stonehouse Childcare Center.

"We will take a field trip to the bookstore if the weather permits us to," she said.

Bookstore student employees and full-time employees will be reading to the children at each half-hour program, said Linda Wiemers, book department manager for the K-State Union Bookstore.

Big Bird will be at all of the programs during the book week, Wiemers said.

"Big Bird isn't going to read to them, but Big Bird will be around serving refreshments to the kids," she said.

Toddlers and preschool children are more excited about the program when they know a particular book character will be at the event, said Ranae Martin, assistant director of KSU Childcare Cooperative, Jardine.

"That's what they talk about all day," Martin said.

Children's Book Week is a nationwide program, said Ruth Sidhom, trade-book buyer for the Union Bookstore.

"Libraries and elementary schools recognize Children's Book Week, so we recognize it," Weimers said. "We also have a very extensive children's book section in our general book area, which is noted statewide."

The Union Bookstore also celebrates the week because it wants to increase interest in children's books, Wiemers said.

"It's important for kids to be learning to read," she said. "Children's books have good illustrations and good stories, and we want to help them learn to read."

Parents used to read "Goldilocks and the Three Bears" to their children, Wiemers said.

"There are so many other ones they can read now, books that have a story and a message that they can give to their kids."

Books will be on display in the front window of the bookstore, Weimers said. The bookstore uses a different theme for its front window each year, Sidhom said.

"Basically, we will have Sesame Street books on display because we are celebrating the 25th anniversary of Sesame Street, and we are using that theme as a workshop to teach children how to read," she said.

Left-overs studied for new uses

Nutritional content of food scraps analyzed

RENEE DENNES
Collegian

When students in the residence halls don't finish their food, it may go to the fish.

Carol Shanklin, director of hotel, restaurant, institution management and dietetics at K-State, is leading a team of students who are analyzing the nutritional content of left-over food from Derby Dining Center to determine additional uses for it.

"A knowledge of the nutrients lets us know what needs to be added for various uses," Shanklin said. "For example, if the waste is used to make pellets for fish food, we can know what needs to be added for it to meet the proper nutritional requirements. Animals, like humans, have certain nutrient requirements."

Shanklin said she enjoys working directly with the students on the research.

"She works on the projects with the students and actually helps them sort through the trash," Rebecca Gould, associate professor in the department, said.

This willingness to get personally involved contributed to Shanklin earning a national award in her field.

She was presented the American Dietetic Association Foundation Award for Excellence in Dietetic Education at the national convention in Anaheim, Calif.

Shanklin was nominated for the award by the HRIMD department at K-State.

"The nomination packet required information pertaining to her leadership skills, her contributions to education, and her ability to practice innovative approaches to dietetic education," Gould said.

"Her former students and peers from across the country sent letters of recommendation and support for the application," Gould said.

The award was designed to recognize an outstanding dietitian who demonstrated excellence and leadership in dietetic education.

Shanklin serves on the Food Service Strategic Initiative Team for the ADA and is a reviewer for the Journal of the American Dietetics Association. She is also chairperson for the college personnel section of the American School Dietetic Association.

KANSAS

Health plan near completion

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Kansas could be one of three states with its own state health program when Congress enacts a universal health-care plan for the nation, Dr. Bill Roy said today.

Roy, chairman of the Kansas Commission on the Future of Health Care, said only Montana, Vermont and maybe Kansas are in position to put together a state plan that would meet expected federal guidelines for state health alliances.

The commission, which just completed eight public meetings to receive citizen reaction to its proposed Kansas plan, met today to put the final touches on that plan.

It left until today's discussion the most politically sensitive issue of all: how to pay for it. It was looking at three proposals, each designed to change the method of raising the $5.8 billion that health care costs in Kansas each year.

Roy and others are scheduled to present a preliminary report on the plan to the Legislature's Joint Committee on Health Care Decisions for the 1990s Thursday.

The final plan is expected to be approved by the commission at a Dec. 6 meeting, then delivered to the Legislature and Gov. Joan Finney in early January.

Roy said he believes the Kansas plan will attract good support, but he conceded it faces opposition from the insurance industry because it cuts out health insurers.

Students debate overlay

Faculty Senate will determine fate of proposal

KEN DIEBEL
Collegian

K-State's faculty faces a decision.

A proposal that all K-State students fulfill a three credit-hour diversity overlay course is in the hands of Faculty Senate.

A multicultural overlay forum Tuesday in the K-State Union Courtyard allowed faculty and students to voice their opinions about the proposed multicultural overlay requirement.

"If this University is to graduate students who are prepared to assume leadership positions in society, they must know about groups other than themselves," said Anne Butler, co-chair of the diversity overlay subcommittee of the Faculty Senate academic affairs committee and director of women's studies.

As proposed, the overlay requirement would be effective for incoming students starting in the fall of 1994, Butler said. Current students would not be affected by the new requirement, she said.

If passed, the diversity overlay would require students to complete at least a three credit-hour course from a list of proposed classes.

There will be no need for additional instructors or to create new courses if the proposal is accepted, Butler said. Students will not be restricted to one course, she said.

A panel composed of students and faculty discussed different opinions on the proposal and fielded questions from the audience.

The panel members included John Hart, junior in political science; Dan Lewerenz, junior in philosophy; Arlo Biere, professor of agricultural economics; Roger Trenary, instructor of economics; Ian Bautista, senior in modern languages; Sandra Coyner, associate professor of women's studies; Brad Finkeldei, junior in chemical engineering; and Stephen Thomas, junior in nuclear engineering.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Roger Trenary, instructor of economics, gives his opinions on the multicultural overlay requirement. Trenary is a member of the faculty student multicultural overlay panel.

The course requirement is a start on the part of the University to increase awareness of other cultures and ethnic groups in all courses, Lewerenz said. There is no textbook that will teach people how to get along with others, but there are books that will expose people to other cultures, he said.

Hart opposes the overlay requirement because it could lead to indoctrination of students to a particular point of view, he said.

House's support of NAFTA slowly increases

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton captured 11 more likely votes today as momentum appeared shifting his way in the battle over the North American Free Trade Agreement.

"We're getting there," an upbeat Clinton said on the eve of the climactic House vote.

With the ranks of undecided lawmakers rapidly dwindling, an Associated Press count showed 204 likely votes for the agreement and an apparent 200 votes in opposition.

It marked the first time that supporters edged ahead of opponents, though the numbers could change quickly because there were still 30 publicly undeclared lawmakers.

With 434 members in the House, Clinton needs 218 votes to prevail.

"We're getting there," Clinton said at the White House. "I never say (there are enough votes) until they're counted, but I feel good today."

Clinton met with governors at the White House to underline that 41 of the nation's 51 governors support the trade accord.

"I used to be a member of Congress," said Washington Gov. Mike Lowry, a Democrat. "I know what it's like to have tough votes and have votes on confusing issues. This is not a tough vote. NAFTA is a very clear choice. NAFTA is the right vote our economy, and it's the right vote for our foreign policy."

Explaining her support of the agreement, Texas Gov. Ann Richards said, "Our trade has grown to the south, and we are inextricably bound in this hemisphere to the future of Mexico and Canada."

■ Kansas legislators split on NAFTA.
■ Gov. Joan Finney supports it.

The governors joined Clinton at an outdoor ceremony on a warm fall day to argue that the trade agreement will produce more American jobs — a point disputed by opponents who say U.S. companies will rush to Mexico in search of cheaper labor and less stringent environmental rules.

Clinton brushed aside criticism from AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, who had accused him of abdicating his leadership of the Democratic Party by offering political cover to Republicans who

Communication is Senate priority

TAWNYA ERNST
Collegian

This is the last in a three-part series about Student Senate, from the senators' representation methods to the student body's interaction with the legislative body.

Reach out, pick up the phone and dial a student senator or the Office of Student Activities and Services.

K-State student senators are hoping that their constituents will do just that.

"Call me at home. I really do care, and I really want to know. I can't fix everything, but I'll try," said Stacy Dalton, business senator and sophomore in pre-professional business administration. "I know that there's a lot of things that need to be worked on at K-State.

"People get frustrated and want to give up," she said. "But don't. Come in, call us, talk to us."

The relationship between senators and constituents is something Student Senate is working to improve this semester.

Not enough communication or a lack of it has been the main problem for SGA. Taking this into consideration, Senate is trying several different tactics to reach more constituents.

One area receiving attention is the visitation of college councils. Senators are upping the number of visitations this semester.

Another tactic is the purple suggestion cards. The cards provide a way for students to write down what they are concerned about and send it into the Office of Student Activities and Services.

Weekly senate meetings take place on Thursdays. As a result, special emphasis has been placed on Thursdays to meet with students. Senators wear name tags to increase visibility and student awareness. Students may know the names of senators, but in a crowd they wouldn't be able to recognize them.

"We're always asking for a lot of input, but it's kind of hard sometimes because people don't know what their senators look like. I really like the name-tag thing because people get to know the faces and the names," said Aaron McKee, senator in engineering and sophomore in mechanical engineering.

In the K-State Union, a table is set up outside the Stateroom on Thursdays. Senators are present to answer questions, take suggestions and offer information to interested students.

Clayton Wheeler, senator in business administration and junior in marketing, said the table was a good start, and the Union is a good place to get in touch with students.

"I like the way it's starting off this year with the communications table," Wheeler said. "If we have nicer weather, it might be a good idea to get senators and interns to

COLLEGIAN OPEN HOUSE

■ The K-State Collegian will offer readers the opportunity to stop by the newsroom in Kedzie 116 to meet the staff, ask questions, voice concerns or learn how the newspaper operates.

■ The newsroom will be open from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Wednesday.

■ You may come and go as you like. This offers you the chance to stop and learn more about your campus newspaper.

■ Any questions concerning the open house can be answered by Julie Long, Collegian editor, at 532-6556.

Collegian staff wants to meet you

In the first issue of this semester's Collegian, I explained some of the changes we made to respond to your requests and concerns.

We redesigned Page 2 to include world, national and regional briefs, redesigned and enlarged the Diversions page and started two special sections — the Wildcat Watch and KSU Professionals.

The Collegian staff has worked to respond to your needs and serve you in the best possible way. Now it is time to tell us how you think we are doing. We are having an open house from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. today in Kedzie 116. Everyone is welcome and encouraged to come, meet the staff and tell us what you think.

I want you to remember the Collegian is your newspaper. Student Publications Inc., of which the Collegian is a part, is an independent corporation. The Collegian is student-run. This means all content decisions rests in the hands of the student editors. We decide what stories will appear in the newspaper.

As a student newspaper, the Collegian should be responsive to students' needs. So feel free to drop by and tell us how we can improve the Collegian.

HBO brings lawsuit against Wichita bars

WICHITA — Home Box Office Inc. is suing three Wichita bars for more than $260,000 for allegedly showing a heavyweight title boxing match without paying for it.

Players Sports Bar & Grill, JoJo's Down Under and Walt's All American Bar and Grill are defendants in the complaint filed Nov. 9 in U.S. District Court.

HBO alleges the bars aired the Riddick Bowe vs. Michael Dokes match in February without subscribing to the cable service.

Players owner Dave Chaffin says HBO unfairly monopolizes its own signals. He says his bar has been trying for years to reach an agreement to pay fees for use of HBO's sports programs.

HBO sends its signals only to residential subscribers.

U.S. oil worker freed from Iraqi prison

ANDREWS AIR FORCE BASE, Md. — An American oil worker held captive in Iraq for nearly seven months returned Tuesday to the United States, saying he was used as a political pawn by the Iraqis to renew talks with the U.S. government.

"They needed something to open a dialogue, something to gain recognition from the Western world, including, of course, the United States," said Kenneth Beaty, 45, of Mustang, Okla.

Beaty arrived at Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington on a military jet, accompanied by Sen. David Boren, D-Okla. He was freed Monday after Boren met with Iraq's deputy prime minister, Tariq Aziz.

Boren stressed that his trip was for humanitarian purposes only, that his talks involved no negotiations with the Iraqi government on other issues and that no deals were made for Beaty's release. Beaty's release was widely seen as a goodwill gesture by Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

Research to develop AIDS preventing foam

GENEVA — Switching tactics against the deadly scourge of AIDS, the World Health Organization announced today that it is searching for a safe foam or gel that could kill the HIV virus inside a woman's vagina.

The U.N. health agency said the new research strategy could revolutionize AIDS prevention efforts and held out hopes such a substance could be ready within two to three years.

The foam or gel would be an alternative to condoms, the only current method of birth control that also offers protection from the human immunodeficiency virus that causes AIDS. The agency estimates 75 percent of all HIV infections are spread through heterosexual intercourse.

Iraqi civilians protest Kuwait-border trench

KUWAIT — Hundreds of Iraqi civilians crossed the disputed border into Kuwait on Tuesday to protest construction of a 130-mile-long defensive trench.

A representative for the U.N. Iraq-Kuwait Observer Mission, Abdullatif Kabbaj, said the demonstrators planted the Iraqi flag in a farm cut in half by the trench, after chasing contractors from the land by throwing stones at them.

Kabbaj said the Iraqis arrived in 100 cars and three buses and left after two hours. Such demonstrations in Iraq are staged by the government.

Sheik Ahmed al-Humoud al-Sabah, Kuwait's interior minister, told Parliament that more than 350 Iraqis entered Kuwait.

Pro-life lobbying plan organized by Catholics

WASHINGTON — Leaders of the nation's largest church plan to issue their first major pastoral statement on abortion in nearly two decades and to mobilize a million rank-and-file Catholics for special lobbying efforts.

Timed to come out with a new encyclical from Pope John Paul II next year, the pastoral statement on abortion from the National Conference of Catholic Bishops also will address other public-policy issues such as euthanasia and the civil rights of immigrants, Cardinal Roger Mahony, chairman of the bishops' Committee on Pro-Life Activities, said Tuesday.

To help get their point across with an administration that backs abortion rights, the bishops voted 201-7 at their annual fall meeting to establish a grassroots network of 1 million Catholics whose names were gathered from church lobbying efforts against the Freedom of Choice Act.

Clinton signs bill protecting religion

WASHINGTON — Reversing a Supreme Court decision he said threatened the nation's first freedom, President Clinton signed a bill Tuesday making it harder for government to interfere with religious practices.

A broad coalition of civil liberties and religious groups, who foresaw autopsies forced on families and cities meddling in church construction, said the law is the most important for religious freedom since the adoption of the Bill of Rights.

In a 1990 ruling involving the use of a drug in an Indian religious ritual, the Supreme Court made it easier for local and federal governments to pass laws that infringe on religious beliefs.

Representative endorses NAFTA

Clinton lobby effort convinces Rep. Jan Meyers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Rep. Jan Meyers announced today she would vote for the North American Free Trade Agreement after spending months leaning against the treaty over environmental and wage concerns.

Meyers, a Kansas Republican who was lobbied personally by President Clinton, said she has been convinced her suburban Kansas City district is for NAFTA and that it is of vital economic concern to the United States.

"I believe NAFTA is something the United States must have to retain economic leadership in the world, and I am concerned that if we reject NAFTA, this country will not have another opportunity," Meyers said.

Her announcement came a day after the Clinton administration agreed to impose tariffs or quotas on Canadian durum wheat unless that country's government changes its policies on grain pricing.

Meyers' prepared statement made no mention of the wheat deal, but at a news conference today with 15 pro-NAFTA governors — including Democrat Joan Finney — Clinton said it will be pursued with new Canadian Prime Minister Jean Chretien.

"We're going to discuss some of the issues outstanding between us, including the differences both of us have with each other's definition of what constitutes fair trade in agriculture," Clinton said.

"The prime minister has made an interesting suggestion, which is that we ought to try to reach agreement on what does or doesn't constitute a subsidy," the president said.

Meyers was lobbied in a 10-minute telephone call Friday from Clinton and by Finney, who stressed NAFTA's importance to Kansas agriculture and manufacturing exports.

"I support the idea of a trading bloc from Canada to Mexico, but for a long time I had intended to vote no because of the lack of strong provisions in this agreement concerning the environment and the wage differential between the U.S. and Mexico," Meyers said.

Her statement said those concerns had been alleviated.

She joins Republican Rep. Pat Roberts and Democratic Rep. Dan Glickman in favor of the pact in Kansas' delegation to the House. Rep. Jim Slattery, a Democrat, is against it. Republican Sens. Bob Dole and Nancy Kassebaum both support NAFTA.

who vote for the agreement.

"I will do everything I can to defend this vote and to say that a vote for this agreement should not be the basis for defeating any member of Congress without regard to party," the president said.

Acknowledging the political risks for NAFTA supporters, Clinton said he had discovered that members of Congress are literally willing to put their political careers on the line tomorrow night to do what they think is right even though they're not quite sure their voters agree with them yet.

"This is going to be a close vote," presidential adviser David Gergen said

NAFTA still poses many questions as Congress votes

Today, Congress decides the fate of the much-debated and hotly contested North American Free Trade Agreement.

Finally.

The U.S. government and its constituents have argued and thrown every wild accusation possible over a bill that would eliminate trade barriers between Canada, the United States and Mexico.

Let's put it to the vote and be done with it.

But in hoping for this, we must understand what this bill is attempting to accomplish and why it is so highly resisted in certain sectors.

NAFTA's basic principle is to eliminate tariffs and other trade barriers among these countries, creating the largest trading bloc in the world. It would encompass 360 million people.

Further, tariffs on agricultural goods would be phased out over a period of 15 years. Mexican import licenses would be dropped immediately.

Financial service restrictions among the three countries would be considerably lessened, increasing participation.

Mexico and Canada would have easier access to the rapidly growing American telecommunications market. Mexico would eliminate its $1-billion tariff on telecommunications equipment to facilitate this.

The United States and Canada will open their textile and apparel markets to a much larger market. High tariffs would be phased out over 10 years, but the garments would have to be cut and sewn in America with American yarn and fabric.

There are other points to ponder. This agreement is being resisted because many feel American jobs will leave the country, especially manufacturing jobs.

Also, if this happens, many feel that American goods won't be able to compete with cheaper foreign goods.

Supporters say NAFTA will open all three countries to a large rich market free of barriers that cost consumers billions each year.

It's a tough call. From the looks of it, Clinton has the votes to pull it off. And only time will tell if NAFTA is a savior or a nightmare.

Let's hope that the people we've picked to lead us make the right decisions on a bill with so unpredictable a future.

THOMAS EDISON DOOMED US ALL

Jane Doe No. 1 is 10 years old. She is sexually active, and society finds this perfectly acceptable.

Jane Doe No. 2 is 45 years old. She is not married, has no life partner, and nobody blinks an eye.

These women (and these same standards apply to men as well) don't exist now. But they will. Give it time.

It's now a fact of life (some consider it an ugly one) that condoms are now passed out in fifth-grade classrooms. Children are having children, or so the saying goes. It scares people, and it scares me, but not because I think it's a result of our decadent pre-armageddon society or some sort of subliminal MTV influence. There is always a rational explanation.

There is even a scientific explanation.

It may be societal changes that tell women to marry later in life, but no societal change is going to cause menarche, or the arrival of a woman's first period, which is the most reliable indicator that puberty is under way. Puberty begins an average of three years earlier than it did in the 1800s. Our society is definitely causing a huge gap between physical sexual maturity and marrying age, but not in the way that everyone thinks.

Factors that can cause hormonal change are things like nutrition, health care and, surprisingly, exposure to light.

One of the most significant developments our technological society ever introduced into adolescents' lives was the light bulb. Light, natural and artificial, has long been ignored as a major factor in health.

Light fools the body. When a person is inside after dark with lights on, the body is tricked into thinking that it is daytime. That's an oversimplification of a complicated process, but that's what it boils down to.

Sunlight accelerates growth in living things, but what most people don't realize is that artificial light acts in an almost identical way. It makes you grow more quickly, and it's therefore not surprising that children mature more quickly in areas with larger rates of electricity use.

"No wonder they're having sex," I hear. "That's all they see." This sort of thinking is based on the theory that the brain can make the body alter itself by sheer will, as St. Francis of Assisi might have done when he showed the signs of stigmata.

SARA SMITH

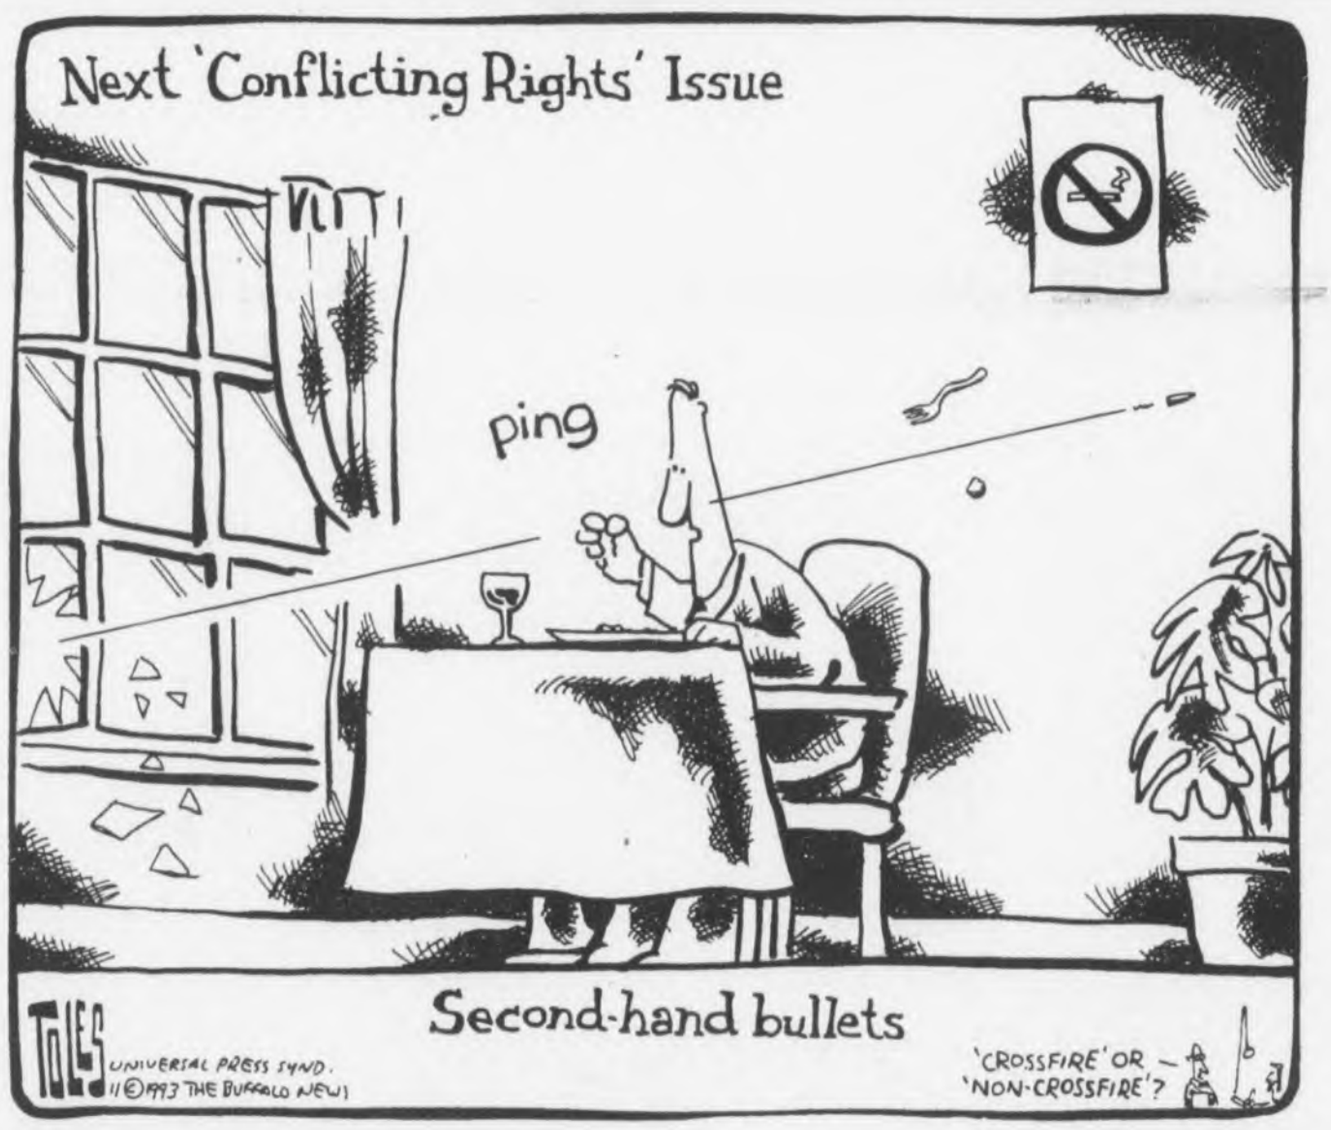
This theory, I'm sure, has some scientific validity, but it doesn't explain everything. It doesn't explain the jump in the rate of sexual maturity that coincided with the widespread introduction of gas lighting around the period of the Industrial Revolution.

That period also brought better living conditions, nutrition and health care, all of which speed up the maturation process.

Being healthy means developing fast for the superhealthy children we raise today, and that means every kind of development.

Also, as society speeds up, people sleep less, and the rate of lost sleep in the average person's life is about one less hour a night every 10 years. Sleeping less makes you live longer, according to science, which is nothing I was ever told about growing up.



Back to the Jane Does, they are not fantasy. They are not that far ahead of us. Society's future could potentially involve a 40-year gap between physical sexual maturation and the acceptable age to be married. If there is an age to be married at all.

So if any parents are concerned about their kids growing up too early, they should underfeed them, make them sleep a lot and confine them to a dark closet.

If you want to place blame on anyone for children having children, don't blame condom distributors or Hugh Hefner or MTV.

Blame Thomas Edison and your family doctor.

▶ SELF-DEFENSE

Defense classes should be expanded to meet the expanding demand

Editor,

The recent attacks on women have made a steep increase in demand for the self-defense classes taught by the Women's Resource Center.

I think it is great that these articles from the Collegian are opening a lot of eyes, and people are taking extra precautions such as the self-defense course.

However,because of the increase in interest in the self-defense class, a problem has arisen.

The class is currently being taught in the office of the Women's Resource Center. Limited space and equipment allow the center to teach only 10 to 15 students per session.

With this new overwhelming demand, they have outgrown this small office.

They have an average of 50 students on a waiting list for the self-defense course.

I think the perfect solution for this problem is for the Women's Resource Center to join up with the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

The Rec Center has the proper equipment and space to teach 30 to 40 students.

This would double the present enrollment and almost eliminate the waiting list.

I am a true believer in self-defense courses as they help women become in control of their own safety.

▶ MARRIAGE

A marriage license is not a 'get out of jail free' card for rape

Editor,

Rape is a crime.

Unfortunately, in the minds of some Americans, a marriage license is the right to nullify that fact.

Many cases of rape go unreported each year because the rapist is also the victim's spouse.

Gender roles that have been in place for centuries make us think that rape cannot exist between a husband and wife.

Marital rape is domestic violence, just as physical, mental, child and spouse abuse are forms of domestic violence.

Thinking or saying that any of these is not a crime is like giving a big OK to other forms of criminal activity.

Until we stop the crimes in our own homes, the crime rate of society will continue to rise.

I'm human; that's the only title I need

These past few weeks, I have found myself praying for time. I have been so caught up in a circle of classes and meetings that I have been missing the subtle show that Nature has been putting on right in front of me. It has blurred past me as I go from one place to another, and I have prayed that it would last just long enough for me to find the time to enjoy it.

I finally made time the other day. I sat down for a few minutes, in perfect silence, to enjoy the light and the leaves. It was then that I realized how silent it truly was.

I have known since I was 17 that I was going deaf. The best doctors can't tell me why. It could be because of any number of reasons, they say. Perhaps it was that fever I had when I was 7 that spiked at 106. Perhaps it was a severe concussion, or just one of the endless number of earaches I have had over the past 22 years.

The reasons don't really matter. The diagnosis is the same however the means: permanent degenerative nerve damage. In time, complete deafness. A year from now, five years from now, 10 years from now, but eventually, complete, inoperable deafness.

I know that is a difficult concept for some people to relate to. Soon, I will not be able to hear my favorite piece of music. I will not hear my mother's voice or "I love you" or the sound of my firstborn child's cry.

It is as if these things are slipping away from me a little at a time. It is as if I am slowly immersing myself in a swimming pool deeper and deeper, permanently enclosed in that kind of quiet. I am ready for that, and the thought of it does not bother me as much as it once did. I have had enough time to get used to the idea — as used to it as I could possibly get, anyway.

I have practiced being deaf in a hearing world as best as I can. I have learned some lip reading and a passable amount of sign language. I have become quite vigilant at crosswalks. And I "hear" the phone and my alarm relying more on intuition and my other senses. And I have even learned to find some positive aspects to my situation. I never have to hear another hateful thing spoken again.

But those are small and general things. There are other elements of being handicapped in this society that I will never get used to, no matter how much preparation I do.

ERIN MANSUR-SMITH

I have not learned to cope with rudeness from strangers who have to repeat themselves for me to understand. Nor the irritation of family members when they have to constantly face me and speak. I cannot count the number of friends who have told me to put my hearing aids in, even after I have told them time and time again that they aren't of any use anymore.

What is even worse is those well-meaning people who treat me as if I am weak simply because I need some slight considerations. They find out that I am hearing impaired, and they speak slowly and loudly as if I am senile or dim-witted. They think that because I cannot hear them that I am not listening or that because my ears don't work, nothing else does either, and I become the object of their pity.

I am a working, thinking, feeling member of this society. I can do anything that needs to be done just as well as any hearing person. I just do it from a different perspective.

If I were blind, if I were mentally handicapped, if I were a quadriplegic, it would be the same story.

I am not helpless. I am not weak. And I will not be treated as if I were. Not by anyone.

We all have our own "handicaps."

Everyone operates on his or her own level of ability, and my level is no lower or higher than anyone else's. It is just different. If that were taken into consideration, it would make living in this world so much easier for everyone, not just those who are physically challenged.

Panel discusses holidays

KRISTEN WELBORN
Collegian

With the holidays approaching, K-State's international community took the opportunity to tell about the holidays and customs of their native countries.

Students from nine countries formed a panel discussion, and each told about unique, interesting holidays from each culture.

Kappa Omicron Nu, Phi Upsilon Omicron, International Student Council and KSU Housing and Dining Services sponsored "Celebrating Holidays Around the World" Tuesday night in Hoffman Lounge in Justin Hall. International students talked about their homeland-holiday traditions and celebrations.

The evening began as native Puerto Rican dancers twirled and danced to the feisty sounds of Spanish music, backed heavily by the sound of drums. The dance is traditionally performed to ward off the evil spirits. The swirling skirts and festive attitudes of the dancers are said to keep evil spirits away.

The panel discussion provided insight to different cultures, focusing on the way each country celebrates traditional holidays.

Kouassi Kouakou, graduate student in grain science and president of the International Coordinating Counsel and native of the Ivory Coast, West Africa, said there are 18 international associations on campus, representing students from 95 countries.

"It is important to know other about other cultures, then we can begin to accept. K-State students need to travel to other campuses, and see what other campuses have in cultural richness, and I'm sure they can return saying, 'God Bless K-State,'" Kouakou said.

In Austria, Oct. 26 is celebrated as its independence day. After World War II, the Allied troops stayed for 10 years to prevent the Soviet Union from occupying the country and gaining control over Austria. The last Allied soldier left Austria on October 26, 1955. Since then, the country celebrates its independence and the opportunity to participate in a democratic government.

Aug. 14 is independence day in Pakistan. Pakistanis participate in parades and various competitions. T.V. shows, plays, and songs related to Independence Day are emphasized on this day of independence.

Another Pakistanian holiday centers on giving a sacrifice to the poor and needy people. A goat is sacrificed and the meat given to those who are in need of food.

France participates in the Three Kings, or Wise Men celebration. A sweet bread is specially prepared. The youngest member of the family hides underneath the kitchen table as the rest of the family chooses pieces of cake according to who is to be king and queen for a day.

The first day of summer is also widely celebrated by the French. The Feast of Music is observed. Bands play in the street, fireworks explode, and the festival results in drinking and much celebration.

Two couples demonstrated the traditional dance styles of Ecuador and Venezuela.

Students agreed that multicultural programs are beneficial.

"I think that we should have more of these multiculture programs. People are really interested in it. We are trying to start to do multicultural events in residence halls," said Shazia Aqeel, junior in chemical engineering and native of Pakistan.

Organizers look forward to more participation by students.

CITY

Commission approves street work

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

City Commissioners passed a motion for street improvements in the Brier Heights subdivision with a 4-1 vote Tuesday night.

A number of residents of the Brier Heights subdivision were present at the City Commission meeting to state their opinions on establishing street improvements in the area.

Steve Hall, city commissioner, opposed the proposed plan for street improvements in the subdivision.

"I am very reluctant to raise taxes when the majority of people don't want it," Hall said.

One resident of the neighborhood conducted a survey revealing that 80 percent opposed street improvements because of the financial burden it will cause.

The idea for street improvements now is to cure the problem now before it gets worse, Helen Cooper, city commissioner, said.

"It's not going to get any cheaper, and it's not going to get any better," Cooper said.

Sydney Carlin, city commissioner, said the resale of homes in the Brier Heights subdivision will progress with street improvements in the neighborhood.

Roger Maughmer, mayor, said he is convinced that street improvements must inevitably be done and should have been done when the neighborhood was first developed.

"I think it was of grave error to take Brier Heights into the city in the first place and not pave the streets then and there," Maughmer said.

The proposed plan includes 37 lots, of which each household in the area would be required to share the total estimated project cost of $567,000. Estimated cost includes the construction of a 27-foot-wide paved street with a sidewalk on one side of the street.

Copper wants Wildcats; Aloha likes Sooners

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

K-State football players want to spend their Christmas in Hawaii playing in the Aloha Bowl.

The only problem is the Aloha Bowl doesn't want the Wildcats, but the Copper Bowl does.

"It's a three-way partnership between the Copper Bowl, the Big Eight Conference and the Aloha Bowl," Marcia Cherner, executive director of the Aloha Bowl, said.

"We are working really close with the Copper Bowl, and they really want a commitment from K-State."

Cherner also said the people in Hawaii don't know the difference between K-State and Kansas, and that could affect the attendance at the Aloha Bowl.

"We're looking to put up the best match-up, and if a team can't draw enough people, the bowl is going to take a loss," Cherner said. " It's not just a game — it's also a financial risk."

Saturday's home game against Missouri only drew 27,168 fans. KSU Stadium has a capacity of 42,000.

What would it take to fill the stadium?

"Free money, I guess," Coach Bill Snyder said.

"There has been some concern and disappointment that it (the stadium) is not full, but that doesn't take away how strongly I feel about the people that have been here, and there has been a lot of them.

"I'd love to see 40,000 or however many we can seat," he said.

Senior wide receiver Andre Coleman said he and most of the team want to play in the highest bowl possible, which would be the Aloha Bowl.

"If we had a choice, my vote would be for the Aloha Bowl," Coleman said.

"We want to go to the best bowl possible. Why finish in third place and go to a fourth place bowl?"

According to the Big Eight's agreement with the Aloha Bowl and the Copper Bowl, the Aloha Bowl must take the third-place team in the conference. If K-State would win this week against Oklahoma State, and Oklahoma loses to Nebraska on Nov. 26 the Cats could finish in third place in the Big Eight.

This could cause a problem, because the Copper Bowl's executive director, Larry Brown, said they will give out their invitation no later than this Sunday, before the Nebraska-Oklahoma game.

"K-State is very high, if not the top on our list," Brown said.

"I would imagine our invitation to go out no later than this Sunday."

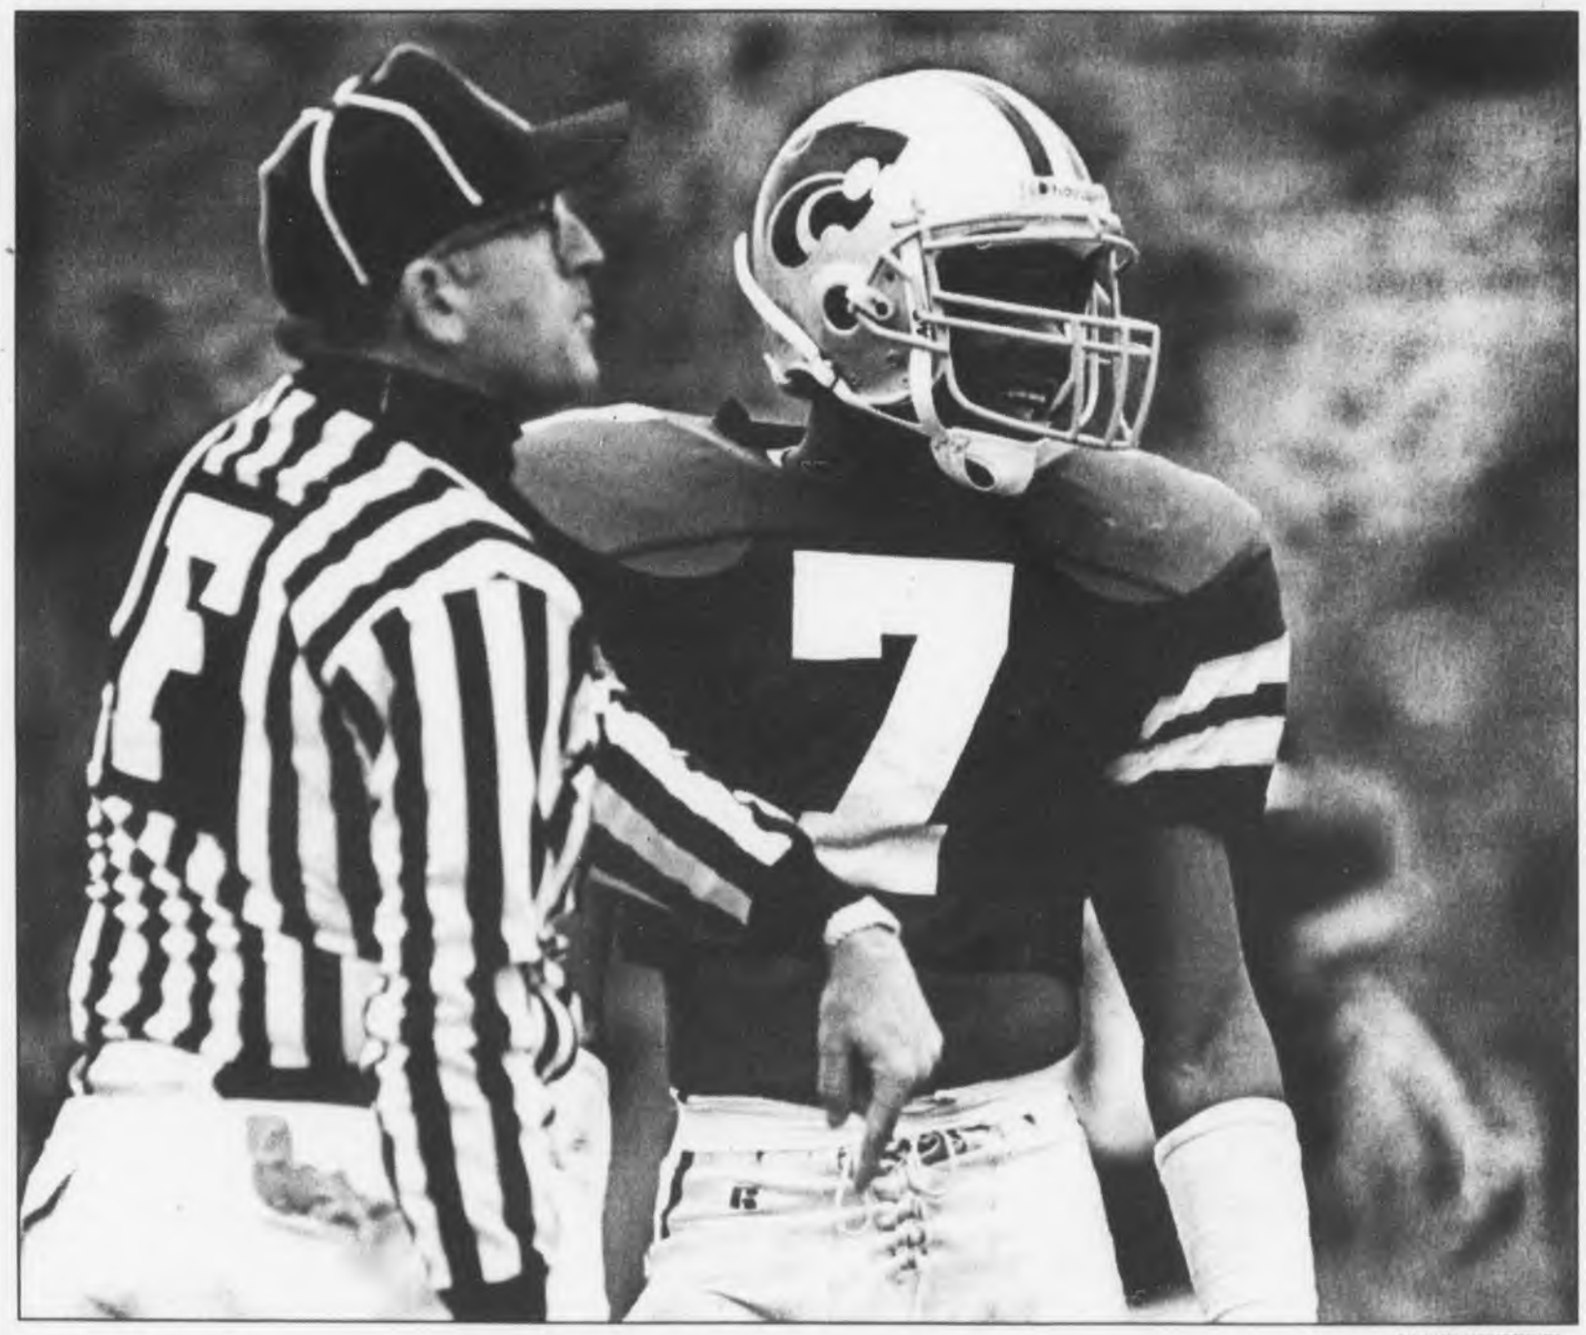
The Aloha Bowl isn't expected to give out their invitation until after the Football Bowl Coalition makes their bowl selections on Dec. 5.

Cherner also said the Cats have a great offense, but the Sooners' ability to pass the ball impresses her more.

"K-State has a tremendous offense," Cherner said, "but we love Oklahoma's passing game. If Oklahoma was still having trouble passing the ball like they used to in the past, K-State would have an advantage over the Sooners.

"The games in the Aloha Bowl are always high-scoring, and Oklahoma's passing attack fits us well."

The official Big Eight team statistics tell a different story than what Cherner said.



According to the statistics, the Cats have the top passing offense in the Big Eight, compared to the Sooners, who have the fourth-best passing offense. K-State is averaging 247 yards a game passing, while Oklahoma is averaging 202 yards a game though the air.

While there is little knowledge of K-State in Hawaii, Brown said the Cats would attract a large following in Tucson, Ariz.

"It looks like K-State would attract a lot of people, especially since they haven't been to a bowl in such a long time," Brown said.

"We've had scouts at the games, and they were impressed with K-State."

Cornerback Kenny McEntyre discusses a call with an official during K-State's 31-21 win against Missouri. McEntyre is a two-sport athlete, competing in both football, as a cornerback, and basketball, as a reserve guard.

McEntyre asset to football and basketball teams

TONYA FOSTER

A K-State dual athlete is now in the school record books.

Senior Kenny McEntyre has already played in the NCAA basketball tournament, and with Saturday's 31-21 win against Missouri, he will also get a chance to play in a college football bowl game.

He is the first K-State athlete to do so.

The native of Plano, Texas, said K-State recruited him out of high school. He said the only thing he knew about K-State was its losing record.

"When Coach Snyder got here, football started getting better," McEntyre said.

The 5-foot-10 cornerback/reserve guard had his first taste of basketball at Cloud County Community College where he averaged 5.3 points per game and shot 51 percent from the field.

His junior-college basketball experience was actually his first taste of the game, at least in front of a crowd.

"I didn't play basketball in high school," McEntyre said. "I didn't want to play basketball in high school because the coach played like Ivy-school basketball. It was a real slow-paced game."

He said he got interested in K-State basketball when K-State coach Dana Altman and recruiters came to Cloud County his sophomore year to look at another player.

"I came here in '91, and right when I got here I asked if I could walk on. He (Altman) said yes, but I didn't walk on that year," McEntyre said. "Then, my second year here, prior to leaving to play in Japan, I asked if I could play when I got back, and he said yes."

Altman said with all of the talk about McEntyre playing in the National Football League, he needs to take a serious look at his future.

"I would hate for him to come out an twist an ankle and ruin his chances," Altman said. "I think he has to look at his football future."

But Altman said McEntyre is an asset to the basketball team.

"Kenny helped us out a lot last year," Altman said.

"He gained a lot of experience this summer when he went overseas with the team."

McEntyre said whether it is basketball or football, he loves to play in front of a home crowd.

"I love playing in front of 50 — 60 thousand people," McEntyre said.

"In the cornerback position, you're open to the public. If you mess up, people see you."

McEntyre said even though professional scouts have been looking at him, it is not his main priority.

"I think about it sometimes when everyone talks about Tom Randolph," McEntyre said.

"But as far as keeping it in my mind, I don't think about it. That'll take care of itself in the end."

VOLLEYBALL

Seniors to play last match in Ahearn

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

K-State's volleyball match tonight against Kansas will be the last match in Ahearn Field House for three seniors who were the building blocks of the program, Coach Patti Hagemeyer said.

Outside hitter Stephanie Liester, middle blocker Angie McKee and setter Wendy Garrett will all play for the last time in Manhattan.

"They made a huge commitment to the program," Hagemeyer said. "I hope that the match isn't emotional, because they will not be able to sustain a high level of play throughout the entire match."

Garrett said the match is one of the most crucial in the seniors' careers at K-State.

"Tonight's game is something important," Garrett said. "I think that this match sums up all four years of playing volleyball in college."

All three said the highlight of their careers came in 1991 when they won one game against UCLA. The Cats lost the match 3-1.

"Beating UCLA was definitely the high point of our career," McKee said. "They were ranked No. 1, and we had only seven players because everyone else quit the team."

Liester said she would miss Ahearn.

"The court is really sweet," Liester said. "I'm really going to miss it a lot."

This year hasn't lived up to the Cats' preseason expectations, Liester said, but she still supports Hagemeyer.

"Patti is very inspirational," Liester said. "She definitely knows the game, and she's taking this program in the right direction."

The Cats are 7-23, and 0-10 in the Big Eight Conference. Hagemeyer said it is going to take an all-out effort to win.

"To be successful against KU, we're going to have keep our confidence and play well throughout match.

"Earlier this season, we were in control up to the 11th point in each game. After that, they didn't keep their confidence and committed too many errors."

Hagemeyer said there is no pressure to win their first Big Eight match.

"Pressure is a weird word," Hagemeyer said. "We're not angry at this time about our play. Frustrated is a better word to describe us now, but we continue to work hard at every practice, trying to improve. We're due for a win."

Montana might return for Chiefs this week

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Joe Montana's pulled hamstring has healed enough to make him a possible starter for the Kansas City Chiefs' game Sunday against the Chicago Bears, Coach Marty Schottenheimer said Tuesday.

"I don't even know that he (Montana) will practice tomorrow," Schottenheimer said. "We're going to be very conservative. I would not rule him out this week ... to practice and possibly to play."

Montana, who has been nursing a pulled hamstring since Oct. 3, was scheduled for another medical checkup Wednesday. He has not played since re-injuring the hamstring Oct. 31 at Miami.

Since first hurting the muscle, Montana sat out a game, played a game and then went out in the second quarter of a 30-10 loss at Miami.

The last thing the Chiefs want is to have Montana re-injure the leg badly enough that he is out for the year.

"You've got to look at things like range of motion, soreness, swelling. And while you can test the muscle in the rate of activity he might perform in, you can't create the competitive environment," Schottenheimer said.

▶THOMAS INJURED AFTER HITTING LAIMBEER

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — Isiah Thomas broke his right hand Tuesday when he punched Bill Laimbeer during a scuffle at the Detroit Pistons practice.

Witnesses said Thomas, whose rib was broken Oct. 30 when he was elbowed by Laimbeer, became angry when Laimbeer elbowed him again. Thomas threw a punch that struck Laimbeer in the head.

The team said Thomas broke the third metacarpal bone of his hand and will be out three to eight weeks.

Neither Thomas nor Laimbeer commented on the incident.

Coach Don Chaney said fatigue from a recent road trip and frustration from a four-game losing streak probably contributed to the incident.

"Frustration, fatigue — when you have those things combined, then you have a problem. That's what happened out here on the floor," Chaney told WWJ-AM.

"If you're going to play aggressive, tempers will flare. You can't play soft at practice."

It's the second time in a month there has been a scuffle during a Pistons' practice. On Nov. 4, Alvin Robertson fought with player personnel director Billy McKinney.

Robertson, who apparently became upset when McKinney told him he would be suspended for three games for missing practices and rehabilitation sessions for his sore back, has been suspended indefinitely since that incident.

▶TEAMS TRY TO LOSE GAME TO AVOID CHINA

AKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — When Taiwan and North Korea played on Tuesday, both teams were trying desperately to lose.

Both had already qualified for the quarterfinals of the Asian Men's Basketball Championship, but the winner eventually would have to play powerful China, the defending champion.

The game was stopped after six minutes with Taiwan leading 4-0.

Some players deliberately threw the ball out of bounds or passed it too high for anyone to catch.

After nearly one hour of negotiations with officials, the teams agreed to resume play, but again, nobody tried, and the game was called.

Taiwan was leading 14-7 when that happened — after 10 minutes and 17 seconds into the game.

The organizing committee will decide who plays China.

Nobody was happy with the goings on.

"We have to play four games without rest, and now they played like that just to select their opponents," said Saudi coach Joe Betancourt, whose team was to play the loser.

"We don't like it. It's not good for the tournament."

"It was the first time I saw a game was played like that," said Imam Suyudi of the organizing committee.

In other games, China outpowered Pakistan 112-40, Japan beat host Indonesia 94-53, Malaysia trounced Bangladesh 144-73, the Philippines outplayed Singapore 89-62, and Jordan defeated Thailand 72-63.

Paw returns to Lawrence

European tour concluded; band to play hometown

BRENT DUNGAN
Collegian

After finishing a European tour, a hard rockin', Lawrence-based band will be returning to its roots to excite a hometown audience. A&M recording artists Paw will be performing Thursday night at the Bottleneck in Lawrence.

Rick Gershon, A&M Publicity, said Paw cannot be put into a category.

"They have been embraced by college, metal and alternative listeners," Gershon said. "The band even has some country influences."

Gershon said the band will have broad appeal. Its influences range from Pantera to the Lemonheads and the Allman Brothers.

"I would describe them as an aggressive, hard-rocking, melodic rock 'n' roll band," Gershon said.

"Dragline" is the name of Paw's album, which includes such songs as "Jessie" and "Couldn't Know."

Gershon said the songs are written about real-life experiences.

"These are storytellers who are continuing an old tradition," he said.

Paw includes guitarist and music-writer Grant Fitch, drummer Peter Fitch, bassist Charles Bryan and lead vocalist Mark Hennessy.

Gershon said Hennessy is exceptional.

"Hennessy has the most arresting vocal chords I can think of."

PAW
■ The band will perform Thursday night at the Bottleneck in Lawrence.

Paw has been touring for almost a year without great support from radio and television, but the band has had great success through word of mouth, Gershon said.

"The word of mouth is very real and very organic," he said.

In addition, Paw's single, "Couldn't Know," has been made into a video and will be playing on MTV's "120 Minutes" and "Headbanger's Ball," Gershon said. Paw will still have 25 tour dates after Thursday's show, but Gershon said the band is ready to tour so that people can hear its music.

"Personally, I think Paw is one of the most dynamic live bands touring today," Gershon said.

Burnt toast symbolizes inner fears

Dear Cassandra,

I am severely handicapped socially: I cannot make toast. I enjoy toast with my breakfast and sometimes as a snack. However, whenever I try to make toast, it comes out either charred to dust or merely warmed and raw.

I live in a residence hall, so in the cafeteria I can find someone to make me toast. (I have been banned from the toasters for filling the cafeteria with smoke on several occasions.)

I am tired of asking strangers, "Excuse me, could you make me toast?"

I'm not sure of the overtones this questions conveys. I think it's ridiculous to ask strangers to make my toast.

I've tried making toast in my room with my own toaster. My room filled with the smoke of burnt toast. What do I do now? I feel like an outcast of society.

Signed,
Hungry

Dear Hungry,

Perhaps we should look at the psychological implications of your inability to make toast. I think it may relate to your unwillingness to grow up and become completely independent as an adult.

Or maybe the burnt toast you keep creating symbolizes your fear of commitment — thus, you burn what you fear.

But even more profound, I think you should investigate the very real possibility that, subconsciously, you might not even like toast.

Of course, if none of my conclusions is valid, then you may just check the toast-o-meter, which is located on the side of any halfway decent toaster.

Position the toast-o-meter indicator somewhere in the middle on the "toast continuum," if you will, somewhere between "warmed and raw" and "charred to dust."

It may be scary at first, but Cassandra knows you'll do just fine.

'Tasty' 20 years ahead of cannibalism trend

RAUL REIS
Collegian

"Anthropophagus. An eater of human flesh; a cannibal [Latin anthropophagus, from Greek anthropophagos, man-eating.]" (The American Heritage Dictionary, 1992).

In the past few years, cannibalism has become a fashionable film theme. Peter Greenaway's amazingly crafted "The Cook, The Thief, His Wife and Her Lover," Jeunet & Caro's original cartoon-like "Delicatessen" and Jonathan Demme's Oscar-winner "The Silence of the Lambs" had something beside being great movies in common. In all of them, cannibalism was the underlying motive that keeps the plot moving.

More recently, audiences were fascinated by "Alive," a movie in which eating human flesh played an important role.

As far as cannibalism is concerned, the Brazilian film "How Tasty was My Little Frenchman" (Como Era Gostoso o Meu Francês, 1971) is 20 years ahead of the current trend. A large gap, indeed, separates the latter from the former.

It is a historical, social and cultural gap. Brazilian director Nelson Pereira dos Santos used cannibalism as a metaphor to get across his ideas about cultural imperialism.

In the late 1960s and early 1970s, Brazil was ruled by a military dictatorship that took its self-imposed task of "sanitizing" popular culture very seriously. For the bureaucracy, the job of "preserving national culture against deviant influences" meant suffocating any cultural innovation that escaped the pro-status mainstream.

As you might once have seen on MTV, the late 1960s also witnessed the surge of the counterculture movement. Like in the rest of the world, the trend had strong repercussions in Brazil. There "deviants" had to choose between violence or subtlety.

Protected behind a historical-saga veil, "How Tasty..." is an exercise on subtlety. The movie tells how a French castaway (Arduino Colasanti) befriends a Tupinamba Indian tribe on the 1500s Brazilian coast.

The tribe almost accepts him as one of their own. The acceptance is never complete, because the tribe members think he is a Portuguese, not a Frenchman. The cannibal tribe and the French were allies against the Portuguese.

As time goes by, the Frenchman proves to be a brave and loyal warrior, marrying one of the Indians (Ana Maria Magalhaes) and integrating into the village's life. Coincidences aside, the film was made 20 years before "Dances with Wolves."

As the cynical and telltale title puts it, the Frenchman will end up being completely assimilated by his newfound countrymen. Deserving the highest honor of all, he will be eaten by the whole tribe.

Cannibalism (or antropofagia) was the main pillar of two important Brazilian cultural movements: modernismo, in the 1920s, and tropicalismo, in the 1960s. Artists affiliated to these movements believed European cultural influence should be "eaten" and assimilated in order to create, after proper digestion, an original Brazilian culture.

From beginning to end, "How Tasty..." is a tropicalismo's child. Except for a few dialogues in French or Portuguese, the movie is in Tupi-Guarani language, spoken or understood by the majority of native Brazilian tribes.

Thanks to a dictionary compiled by a Jesuit priest in the 1500s, the film's makers could resuscitate the language, not spoken in Brazil since the Indians' near annihilation.

The movie is immersed in an authenticity aura, built by careful anthropological research, which allowed the recreation of a Tupinamba's village daily life.

One of the film's most intriguing aspects was its ability to deceive censorship. Fortunately, the military was not smart enough to detect the movie's political understatements. That's good for us, who can enjoy an art piece that gets better as it ages.

▶Ahlers goes over the game plans during the pre-game meeting. The meeting lasted about two hours.

▼Liebsack jokes with line judge Darryll Lewis during a brief break during the pre-game meeting before the game.

At football games, they are easy to spot. But anywhere else it is almost impossible. Not many people would have given much thought to the seven men eating breakfast at the Holiday Inn Saturday morning.

As they addressed Bob Stull, University of Missouri football coach, in the restaurant by saying almost in unison, "Mornin', Coach," their identity became a little more clear.

Frequent outbursts of laughter came from the group as they made jokes with each other — much like a group consisting of a law professor, a salesman, a middle-school English teacher, a vice president of a financial services company, an engineer, a real-estate salesman or a certified public accountant.

These are the men's professions. But most of their free time is spent in other cities all over the Midwest officiating.

The Big Eight has contracted 36 officials. Every Big Eight game is officiated by seven officials, but the agenda for their stay here consisted of many things other than the game.

"From the normal perception of a fan, they think we pull up in the 'ol Studebaker here about five minutes before game time and then go straight to the field," back judge Mark Johnson said.

The officials arrived in Manhattan around 6 p.m. Friday to eat dinner, watch game films and discuss the upcoming game between K-State and Missouri.

They were at the stadium before 9 a.m. Saturday, where they conducted their two-hour pre-game meeting.

"You'll see an interesting transformation between, say, the looseness of breakfast and when we walk into our pre-game meeting," umpire Kevin Hart said. "It becomes heart-attack serious."

After the pre-game meeting, the officials walked back to the locker room where they dressed and got mentally prepared for the game. Pre-game jitters were not apparent — just an occasional handshake or a pat on the back.

"We all go out as one, and we come back in as one," field judge Terry Porter said. "It is stressful, but our bottom line is to get the call right."

Although the groups of seven officials are with each other for less than 24 hours, strong relationships do exist between them.

"I have 35 guys that I would trust my life with, every week," side judge Ron Liebsack said. "You just don't do that with every Tom, Dick and Harry. You do it with 35 people that you have something in common with. You walk out on the field, and they're your best buddies, and during the week, they're your best buddies. They cry with you, they laugh with you. We are the only people that care about us."

"The bonding is really necessary," Porter said. "It's really important to come together as one for a common goal."

"Because we know one thing," Hart said, "we're the only seven people that will support us."

Most of the officials started officiating in an area other than Division I-A football. Beginning in little-league football, moving on to junior high, and and then to high school, the officials consider themselves fortunate to be where they are.

"There are 600,000 people in America who officiate football," Hart said. "And of those 600,000 people, only 600 guys look like the seven guys who are here at this table, only 600 guys make it to Division I-A football. So, it's a very fortunate and select few that get a chance to do this."

Tradition, commitment and a love for the sport play an important role in the officials' success.

"There is a lot of influence from the officials who came before us," Porter said. "It's a heck of a fraternity. We have this common bond to go out and do this game under a lot of scrutiny and to do it perfect. We need to start out the game perfect and improve from there."

"Most of us, regardless of who the critics are, are harder on ourselves than anybody else is," Johnson said.

Some of the officials agreed that most people they meet are surprised when they are being introduced to a Big Eight official.

"Most people are impressed by it," lineman Bill Spyksma said.

"They are curious. Most people don't know enough about it. Too much of their perception of it is not good."

Tones of mutual support rang throughout the locker room as they prepared to enter the field.

Referee Tom Ahlers had said earlier, "If someone has a family problem or something, there is a lot of support throughout the year, and that is a big part of the chemistry that drives us through being involved in this whole process.

"Because it is certainly not the money."

CLASSIFIED DIRECTORY

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

CAMPUS

Climbers save K-State trees

LAURIE DOANE
Collegian

Squirrels are not the only ones climbing trees across the K-State campus.

Thirty-four students in the arboriculture class are learning basic tree care by scaling trees in the Quinlan Natural Area.

"Arboriculture is a profession, and people spend their whole lives caring for trees," said Charles Long, associate professor of horticulture and instructor of the class.

"Getting in the tree is part of caring for the tree," he said.

Basic tree care involves pruning, fertilizing and planting trees as well as other aspects of tree maintenance, Long said.

While in the trees, students prune or remove plant parts for the betterment of the trees. Dead and broken branches are also removed as a safety precaution.

"Pruning opens up the tree and lets air movement and light come into the branches," Long said.

The body-thrust technique is used to ascend the trees.

Students use a rope and climbing saddle attached around their waist and buckled around their legs.

A rope is draped over the tree limb, tied back into the belt at the student's waist and then is tied back into the rope, so a complete circle is formed.

The body-thrust technique is a safe method for climbing and does little, if any, damage to the trees, Long said.

Stephanie Coltrain, junior in horticulture, said she had an interesting experience on her first climb.

"The first time I did it, I fell, but it caught me, so I'm not scared anymore," Coltrain said.

David Champlin, sophomore in horticulture, said taking the arboriculture class has helped him in running his own tree-trimming business.

"We get to know what the tree is like and see its actual growth habits," Champlin said. "You can't stand on the ground and see all that is wrong with the tree."

Coltrain and Champlin said they have received strange looks and comments about their tree climbing.

"Lots of people stop and ask us what we're doing and if this is really a class," Coltrain said.

Senators seek increased communications

stand out in front of the Union to talk to students, pass out flyers. Fourteen thousand people go through the Union everyday. A lot of people could be reached that way."

McKee said the table in the Union is a valid effort, but students might be intimidated by it. He said he tries to talk to most of his constituents in classes.

"Sitting in the back row of class, it's easier to spill your guts. Sometimes the students sitting in the back row that are pissed off and just being quiet could be the ones that have some of the best ideas," McKee said.

Senators made other suggestions that might increase communication with constituents, including weekly columns in the Collegian written by senators and Senate meetings in a larger, more public place such as the Union Courtyard.

Suggestion boxes in residence halls and a possible newsletter that would inform students about what topics Senate is discussing are also in the works.

The topics Senate discusses are supposed to represent what the students are concerned with. To have that representation, there has to be an open path of communication.

Rachel Smith, arts and sciences senator and senior in English, said communication is a two-way street.

"It's 50 percent their job and 50 percent our job. They should be contacting us to let us know what they want, and we'll do what we can," Smith said.

"I think that Senate could improve if we'd talk more with constituents, if we started voting with our conscience instead of being politically correct," she said.

Smith said she would like to see a larger number of students calling in.

"We don't have enough students calling in and bitching," Smith said.

Jumping for a bowl game

Running back Rod Schiller leaps over Missouri defensive lineman Rick Lyle in the 31-21 victory against the Tigers. Schiller was K-State's leading rusher with 12 carries for 59 yards. The win qualifies the Cats for the second bowl game in K-State history.

K-State defeats Missouri, prepares for its second bowl in history

JEREMY CRABTREE
Collegian

The K-State football players had a team dispute after last Saturday's 31-21 victory at KSU Stadium.

After K-State recorded its sixth Division-I win, the Cats had to decide whether they would prefer playing in the Aloha Bowl in Honolulu or the Copper Bowl in Tucson, Ariz. It will be the second time in the school's history that K-State will be represented in a bowl game.

Offensive lineman Jim Hmielewski said the vote is pretty close.

"It's a pretty even vote as far as I know," Hmielewski said. "But I voted that we beat Oklahoma State on Saturday. We won't have to chance to decide if we don't win."

Coach Bill Snyder said he is happy to have the opportunity to get a bowl invitation.

"It was good because it solidified our bowl bid," Snyder said. "But our goal is to play in the best bowl possible and to finish as high as possible in the conference. Personally, it magnifies last week's loss at Iowa State."

The win moved the Cats to 7-2-1 on the season, their best 10-game record since the 1934 team finished 7-2-1.

After the game, most K-State players were talking about finishing higher than fourth place in the Big Eight Conference. A fourth-place finish would place the Cats in the Copper Bowl.

The Cats still have a chance to play in the Aloha Bowl, which picks third in the Big Eight. Snyder said the only to way get the opportunity to play in the Aloha Bowl is to beat Oklahoma State next week.

"With the win and getting to the bowl game doesn't mean we have to overlook Oklahoma State," Snyder said. "We told our players, 'Yes we've solidified a bowl spot, but our goal has been to play in the very best bowl, and to finish as high as we can in the conference.'"

The Tigers scored in the third quarter on quarterback Brian Sallee's touchdown pass to tailback Joe Freeman out of the no-back set. The touchdown was set up when receiver Andre Coleman dropped the opening kickoff of the second half and the Tigers recovered at the K-State 18-yard line.

The Cats' bowl hopes were on the line, as Missouri fought back from a 10-0 deficit to take a 13-10 lead on a 16-yard touchdown pass from Sallee. They got the lead when Sallee hit tight end A. J. Ofadile on a play-action pass on third down and short yardage with 4:27 left in the third quarter.

K-State linebacker Kirby Hocutt said the Cats were still confident despite falling behind in the third quarter.

"I thought back to Iowa State when they came back to take the lead," said Hocutt. "We had faith, and the coaching staff kept reminding us of the feeling we had on the bench last week."

Quarterback Chad May helped the Cats regain the lead when he connected with wide receiver Andre Coleman on a post route for a 27-yard touchdown pass. The extra point by Tate Wright gave the Cats a 17-13 lead.

Snyder said it was important to score right after Missouri did.

"It was something you saw happen to us against Iowa State," Snyder said. "They came down and scored on us right after we scored. I don't know if it's the drive of the season — perhaps it is — but it was the drive of the game for sure."

K-State scored on its next possession as May again completed to Coleman. Coleman than juked his way through Missouri defenders and was off to the races for a 65-yard touchdown reception that expanded the Cats' lead to 24-13 with 6:15 left in the game.

"Kevin (Lockett) made a great block on the play," Coleman said. "It's just designed for a short pickup, but they all ran at me and missed. I took off and out-ran them."

Missouri coach Bob Stull said the catch changed the momentum of the game.

"Coleman has great speed, and his play really hurt us at an inopportune time," Stull said. "He got out there, and he was gone."

Coleman said the game was just another benchmark for the program.

"I think it proves that we're for real because we never gave up. Our defense rose to the occasion when it had to, and the offense did also. They got some big plays, and so did we."

Seniors came to play in 'worst program,' leave with bowl game

Players to pick where to play during postseason

WESS HUDELSON
Collegian

The K-State seniors will play in one more game of the regular season this Saturday against Oklahoma State.

It won't be their last game, though, since the Wildcats beat Missouri, 31-21, at KSU Stadium last weekend and clinched a bowl-game appearance.

"We've got two more games this year," defensive end John Butler said.

"Normally, we have one more game, and that's it. It's going to be fun being somewhere warm for Christmas."

Both Coach Bill Snyder and the senior football players have seen what K-State football program used to be and have brought it to what it is today.

"Many of those players were in my first recruiting class," Snyder said. "I have extremely warm feelings for them."

The biggest thing on the minds of most K-State fans is a bowl game and which one it will be.

Snyder said all the players would make the choice about which bowl they would like to attend.

"If there are options, they will decide," Snyder said. "They're the ones who will be playing."

Snyder and the players said the game at Stillwater, Okla., is their first priority.

Saturday's game is important because there is still the option of going to a couple of bowl games, playing with pride and having the seniors finish their regular season ranked.

A loss at Oklahoma State would limit the Wildcats' options to the Copper Bowl.

"We want to go to the best bowl possible," offensive tackle Bryan Campbell said.

"The Aloha Bowl is for the No. 3 team, and we want to be the No. 3 team." Together, the seniors and Snyder have resurrected a Wildcat program from a 1-36-1 streak to a 24-18-1 record since 1990.

"We (the seniors) didn't really think about it being our last game at home when we walked off the field. It hasn't really sunk in yet."

KENNY MCENTYRE
SENIOR CORNERBACK

The 17 senior players are in the midst of a 13-game unbeaten streak at home and have had a 21-2-1 record at home during their careers.

It is the best 24-game stretch in school history.

The 31-21 victory over Missouri completed K-State's second consecutive unbeaten season in KSU Stadium.

No team has accomplished the feat since 1934.

"We've started a tradition now, but it's not going to mean anything if K-State folds over next year," wide receiver Andre Coleman said.

This class is the first class since 1912 to have at least five wins in four consecutive seasons.

En route to these records, the class of 1993 erased a 30-game winless streak, a 16-game losing streak, a 30-game road losing streak, a 22-game Big Eight Conference road losing streak, a 27-game Big Eight winless streak and a 17-game Big Eight losing streak.

This season, K-State ended an 18-game non-conference road losing streak with its victory over Minnesota at the Metrodome.

Last Saturday marked the last appearance the seniors made at KSU Stadium.

"We (the seniors) didn't really think about it being our last game at home when we walked off the field," defensive back Kenny McEntyre said. "It hasn't really sunk in yet."

BIG EIGHT ROUNDUP

COLORADO AT IOWA STATE

FAST FACTS: Noon, Cyclone Stadium-Jack Trice Field, Ames, Iowa.

RECORDS: Colorado (6-3-1/4-1-1) and Iowa State (3-7/2-4).

ABOUT THE BUFFALOES: The Buffaloes defeated Kansas 38-14 on Saturday. Colorado rolled up 598 yards of total offense, the 10th highest total in school history. Tailback Rashaan Salaam posted 130 yards of rushing on 19 carries.

Quarterback Kordell Stewart increased his school passing record to 4,307 yards. He ranks 15th all-time in the Big Eight Conference. Stewart also leads the conference in total offense with 2,607 — the fifth-best mark in league history. He trails the 11-game leader, Iowa State's David Archer, by 91 yards.

The Buffaloes have won the last nine games against Iowa State. Colorado has an 18-6 record at Iowa State.

A win by the Buffaloes would give them second place in the Big Eight and probably a slot in the John Hancock Bowl on Dec. 24 in El Paso, Texas. A loss might put Colorado in the Aloha Bowl if Oklahoma loses to Nebraska and K-State beats Oklahoma State.

K-State and Colorado would be tied for second place in the league. The team that is ranked higher than the other one in the bowl poll would probably go to the John Hancock.

ABOUT THE CYCLONES: Iowa State fell at Nebraska, 49-17. The Cyclones' touchdowns came in the first and fourth quarters.

Iowa State's special teams have limited opponents to only 19 punt-return yards on nine returns this season. Senior James McMillion is ranked second in the Big Eight in punt returns with an average of 12 yards per return.

Iowa State's rushing defense is ranked last in the Big Eight. The Cyclones have allowed an average of 219 rushing yards per contest and have given up 32 touchdowns on the ground.

The Cyclones will face Colorado for the 48th time. Colorado has dominated the series, 35-11-1.

MISSOURI AT KANSAS

FAST FACTS: 1 p.m., Memorial Stadium, Lawrence. Broadcast on Prime Network.

RECORDS: Missouri (3-6-1/2-4) and Kansas (4-7/2-4).

ABOUT THE TIGERS: Missouri lost at K-State 31-21 last Saturday. Missouri tailback Joe Freeman rushed for 103 yards on 20 carries to become the first Tiger since 1978 to rush for 100 yards in three consecutive games.

Wide receiver Kenny Holly leads the Big Eight in receptions per game with an average of 5.3 catches. Tight end A.J. Ofodile is third in the league with an average of five catches per game. Quarterback Jeff Handy enters the final game of the 1993 season with 4,929 yards passing — third all-time for the Tigers and 11th in the Big Eight — and defensive back Kevin McIntosh is tied for the conference lead in interceptions with four.

Missouri is last in the conference in turnover margin. The Tigers have coughed up the ball 29 times on interceptions and fumbles and taken away only 18.

Offensive guard Mike Bedosky tied a school record with his 41st-consecutive start last Saturday. Bedosky was one of 15 Division I student-athletes to receive an $18,000 National Football Foundation Postgraduate Grant.

The Tigers are locked in a three-way tie for fifth place with Kansas and Iowa State.

ABOUT THE JAYHAWKS: Kansas lost 38-14 at Colorado last Saturday. Kansas tailback June Henley established a school record with a 100-yard kickoff return in the third quarter. Henley increased his season rushing total to 1,009, becoming only the third Big Eight freshman running back to eclipse the 1,000-yard mark in a season.

Last season, Kansas, ranked 22nd in the polls, traveled to Columbia and were victims of an upset by Missouri, 22-17. Missouri place kicker Jeff Jacke kicked a school-record five field goals in the game. The win was Missouri's first over a ranked team since 1990, when they beat No. 21 Arizona State.

Kansas and Missouri will test each other for the 102nd time. The series is the longest west of the Mississippi and the second longest in the nation behind Minnesota and Wisconsin, who have played 103 times.

THE MATCH-UP

A position-by-position look at K-State's game Saturday against Oklahoma State. The Collegian sports staff compiled the information to pick the team with the advantage at each position.

DEFENSE

| POSITION | | K-State | OSU |
|---|---|---|---|
| LINE | Last week against Missouri, the K-State defensive line had seven quarterback sacks and jumped to third in the Big Eight Conference in total defense. Oklahoma State's defensive line is led by all-Big Eight defensive end Jason Gildon, who leads the Cowboys in most defensive categories. | ✓ | |
| LINEBACKERS | With last week's performance against the Tigers, the Cats' defense improved to third in the league. Kirby Hocutt led the Cats with 10 tackles against the Tigers. The Cowboys linebacking corps is led by the 1992 Big Eight Defensive Newcomer of the Year, Keith Burns. The Cowboys have the fourth-best defense in the Big Eight, giving up 350.4 yards a game. | ✓ | |
| SECONDARY | The Cats are third in the Big Eight in passing defense with 11 interceptions. K-State had two interceptions last week, including one by free safety Jaime Mendez. Mendez also had nine tackles against the Tigers, which was second on the team. The Oklahoma State secondary is fifth in passing defense. The Cowboys have given up 1,836 yards passing this season, and they have given up 13 touchdown passes. The Cats have only given up nine. | ✓ | |

OFFENSE

| POSITION | | K-State | OSU |
|---|---|---|---|
| LINE | The Cowboys returned all five starters from last year's offensive line, but they are last in the Big Eight in total offense with an average of 255.80 yards a game. The Cats have the fourth-best offense in the league and average 352 yards a game. It will also be the last regular-season game for seniors Quentin Neujahr, Bryan Campbell and Eric Wolford. Once the offense gets in the opponent's 20-yard line, K-State has scored 23 touchdowns and three field goals in 39 opportunities. | ✓ | |
| WIDE RECEIVERS/ TIGHT ENDS | The K-State passing game continued to click last week as the Cats' receivers combined for 248 yards through the air. Andre Coleman caught two touchdown passes, and tight end Brian Rees added another. Coleman and Kevin Lockett are second and third, respectively, in the Big Eight in receiving yards. The Cowboys don't have any receivers in the top 15 in the league in receiving yards. Rafael Denison is the only Oklahoma State player in the top 15 in receptions per game, averaging 2.30 catches per game. | ✓ | |
| RUNNING BACKS | Even though the Cats are last in rushing offense in the Big Eight, J. J. Smith is the fifth leading rusher in the league, and Rod Schiller is 11th. The Cowboys' leading rusher is freshman tailback David Thompson. Thompson is 14th in the league in rushing, and he has rushed for 424 yards this season. | ✓ | |
| QUARTERBACKS | K-State quarterback Chad May has been struggling lately. He has completed 13 out of 30 passes in the past two games, but May rallied the Cats for a come-from-behind victory and had 195 yards in the second half against Missouri. May is still second in the Big Eight in total offense. Oklahoma State has used two quarterbacks this season. Toné Jones and Andy Loveland split time against Oklahoma last week. Loveland is eighth in the league in passing efficiency. | ✓ | |

SPECIAL TEAMS

| POSITION | | K-State | OSU |
|---|---|---|---|
| PUNTING | The Cowboys have all-Big Eight punter Scott Tyner, who is second in the Big Eight in punting. Oklahoma State, as a team, is second in net punting with an averaging 43.1 yards per punt. K-State punter Chad Romano is the sixth-best punter in the conference with an average of 38.6 per punt. | | ✓ |
| PLACE KICKING | Tate Wright continues to be on a roll. Last week, Wright kicked a 49-yard field goal and four extra points. Wright's accuracy has improved to .883 in field goals, and he is third in the Big Eight in field goals (10 of 14 attempts). Oklahoma State's place kicker Lawson Vaughn is also third in the league in field goals. Lawson is 10 out of 12 in field goals. | ✓ | |
| RETURN | Coleman is fourth in the country in punt returns and eighth in kickoff returns. K-State leads the conference in punt returns, and the Cats are second in kickoff returns. K-State averages 14.7 yards on punt returns, averaging 22 yards on kickoff returns. The Cowboys are seventh in the Big Eight in punt returns, but they are third in kickoff returns. Oklahoma State's leading returner is Denson, who averages 22.86 yards on kickoff returns. | ✓ | |

| AREA | | K-State | OSU |
|---|---|---|---|
| MOMENTUM | Last week, K-State clinched its second bowl game bid ever. In that game, the Cats overcame a three-point deficit to end up winning by 10 points. Against Oklahoma last week, the Cowboys were shut out by the Sooners and totaled a mere 31 yards of total offense. The Cowboys are winless in the Big Eight and have lost the last three contests to K-State. | ✓ | |
| COACHING | K-State coach Bill Snyder owns a 3-1 record against the Cowboys. He also helped K-State to its best 10-game record since 1934 and its second postseason appearance in school history. Snyder's overall record at K-State is 25-28-1. Oklahoma State coach Pat Jones is 59-52-2 in 10 years at Oklahoma State and he is the most successful coach in the school's history. He has a 6-3 record against K-State. | ✓ | |
| THE EDGE | Last year, the Cats shut out the Cowboys, 10-0. The only touchdown of the game came by offensive guard Toby Lawrence. Lawrence scored on a fumblerooski play in the second quarter. This year's match up pits two teams going in two different directions. The Cats are going to a bowl, and the Cowboys are buried in the conference cellar. Look for the Cats to establish the short passing game, because the Cowboys like to blitz with Burns. Eventually, the short passing game could open up the middle as it did last week against Missouri. | ✓ | |

Ranking means little to Altman

K-State's basketball past doesn't mean anything about its future.

At least that is what a majority of the preseason basketball publications are saying. Several magazines and preseason polls have tabbed the 1993-94 men's basketball team no better than fifth in the Big Eight Conference and as low as seventh.

Those predictions are a reflection of last year at this time. The Wildcats were picked to finish low, ended up winning 19 games and were a No. 6 seed at the NCAA Southeast Regional. They also unexpectedly made the finals of the Big Eight Tournament as the No. 5 seed.

So why the low pick?

After all, Coach Dana Altman will have the luxury of returning three starters and nine lettermen, the most experienced squad in his four-year tenure with the Cats.

"It doesn't really matter to me, and I don't think it matters to our players much," Altman said of the preseason predictions. "It's a situation ... where do you put us? Who in the conference is going to be weak? It's kind of a hard question to answer.

"The experts seem to think that last year was a little bit of a fluke maybe, I don't know. We do have some players returning, but so do other teams."

K-State will get its first shot at testing the returnees today, playing host to the Central Army Sports Club of Russia in an exhibition game. Tipoff is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. at Bramlage Coliseum. The Russian team defeated Emporia State last Sunday, 101-92.

The Slovenia national team was the original opponent for the exhibition game, but it had to cancel last week.

The Cats will play their first eight games at home and open Big Eight play Jan. 8 at Missouri.

"We're looking for a lot of leadership from our seniors," said Altman, who guided K-State to a 19-11 record last season. "This will be a pivotal year for them. They had pretty good junior years, all four of them.

"We're real anxious to get them back on the floor. The other group of newcomers are going to have to contribute immediately. I think they are anxious to get the season started."

Newcomers include transfers Demond Davis, Manatee (Fla.) Community College; Stanley Hamilton, Dodge City Community College; and Belvis Noland, Three Rivers (Mo.) Community College. The Wildcats also added two freshmen to the roster: Kevin Lewis, Midwest City, Okla., and Todd Schmidt, Norfolk, Neb.

The newcomers will vie for the voids left by departing seniors Aaron Collier and Vincent Jackson. Collier averaged 9.1 points and 6.6 rebounds per game, while Jackson contributed 13.7 points and 4.5 rebounds per contest.

"We've got more than a couple of questions to answer," Altman said. "The first one is who is going to replace Aaron Collier on the front line. We are really concerned about the loss of his numbers. We are also concerned about the leadership void. Aaron had a very calming effect on the team.

"The second (question) is finding a defensive stopper to replace Vincent Jackson. We felt very comfortable going into most games that he would hold the opponent's leading scorer, if he was a perimeter player, in check.

"We've also got to find a backup for Anthony Beane, to relieve some of the pressure. We got to the point last year where we played Anthony about every minute of every game. We've got to find someone to give him a break."

Beane, a transfer from Three Rivers and former teammate of Noland, averaged 34.4 of 40 total minutes on the floor last season.

Sports Illustrated labeled him "Mr. Clutch," and he was a unanimous selection as the Big Eight Newcomer of the Year. Of the 11 games K-State won in the final minute last year, Beane scored the game-winning or game-tying points in six of them.

"A lot of people will be coming after me this year," Beane said. "Everyone knows who you are now. But I'm looking forward to it."

Beane said one statistic he needs to improve on is his assist-to-turnover ratio. Last season, Beane had 137 assists compared to 95 turnovers in 30 games.

"I really worked hard for the upcoming season," Beane said. "I worked a lot on my shooting and ball handling. I'd like to improve my decision making. That is something the coaching staff said I can really improve on."

Deryl Cunningham and Askia Jones are the other two returning starters. Cunningham averaged 9.3 points and 8.3 rebounds per game last season, while Jones averaged 13.2 points and 4.1 rebounds per contest.

Jones was hospitalized last Wednesday with an inflammatory

New coach boosts women's basketball players' confidence

The K-State women's basketball team has a new coach and a new attitude.

Gretchen Bertrand, 5-foot-8 senior guard, said the biggest change from last year is the attitude of the new women's basketball coach Brian Agler.

"When Coach Agler says something, he believes it 100 percent," Bertrand said. "He has a confidence about himself and the things he teaches us. We just have so much confidence it's going to work."

Agler coached at the University of Missouri-Kansas City, where he led the Kangaroos to an 85-54 record over five years. The 1991-92 team went 5-0 against Big Eight teams.

The team also defeated Kansas, Oklahoma State, Missouri and Iowa State on the road during his five years with UMKC. The team led the NCAA in scoring defense three consecutive seasons and set the all-time team defense record by allowing 51.8 points per game in the 1991-92 season. Agler guided the team to the nation's longest home-court winning streak of 26 games from 1991-93.

Agler said one of the biggest adjustments the team has had to make has been in practice.

"Our practices are awful intense," Agler said. "We demand a lot of concentration. I see that as something we need to improve on. We are a very demanding coaching staff."

Agler said he knows how to turn around a program.

"I've been in this situation two other times and, looking back on the two other experiences and looking at this situation, I think it's just the belief and the confidence that you can step on the floor and win basketball."

By being in Kansas City, Agler was well aware of the Big Eight and the competition of K-State's non-conference schedule. Agler said the schedules have been weak, and that could have been its downfall.

"I thought one of the reasons Kansas State might not have been as successful within the conference the past couple of years is the standpoint of not playing as good of competition outside the conference as they get in the conference," Agler said.

"I think it's real important to play good teams in a non-conference schedule because you're surely going to play against good teams once you get in the conference."

K-State plays at Ohio State, a team that finished last season as the NCAA runner-up in the NCAA Tournament. K-State also plays at Minnesota and Utah. Utah was the Western Athletic Conference's regular season champion last season. Agler said there is going to be a difference on offense.

"There is going to be a lot more movement on offense," Agler said. "I've been impressed with some people who can shoot the basketball. It's going to be our job to give them an open shot."

Bertrand said the new offense is more comfortable. The problem with the offense last season was that it was confusing, she said.

"It wasn't clear to us, and we didn't have a confidence about ourselves," Bertrand said. "This year, Coach Agler is so confident in telling us with what we are supposed to do it makes us feel confident."

Agler said Shanele Stires is a strong player who can help the team.

"Shanele can shoot," Agler said. "Shanele is capable of being as good as anyone in the conference."

Stires, a 5-foot-11 post player, led the team in scoring a year ago with an average of 13.4 points a game.

She lead the Big Eight with nine rebounds per game, earning second-team all-Big Eight honors.

The offense is definitely a better offense because there is more motion than last year's offense, Stires said.

"It gives you the freedom to do some things individually that you need to be able to do on offense where everybody's kind of represented," Stires said.

"I think it's going to be difficult to defend. It's going to cause teams problems."

Former player remembers his days at K-State

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Even after five years in the NBA, Mitch Richmond misses college life and Manhattan.

"I love this area. This is where I made my mark," said Richmond, who now plays for the Sacramento Kings. "It is great to come back to the place I enjoy the most.

"I miss going to class. I miss hanging out with Will (Scott, teammate of Richmond at K-State) and going to Aggieville."

Richmond played in the 1986-87 and 1987-88 seasons at K-State and helped the Wildcats to a record of 45-20 during his time.

Also, he helped the Cats to a second-place finish in the Big Eight Conference and guided the team to the Midwest Regional game in Pontiac, Mich., a top-10 finish in the national polls and a school record-tying 25 wins with a 25-9 season his senior year.

Richmond said it was wonderful to lead the squad his senior year.

"The situation was great back then," Richmond said. "They built the team around me. The coaches did a great job with me and had confidence in me to lead the team."

Richmond ranks fifth on the school's all-time scoring list with 1,327 points. He broke Bob Boozer's single-season scoring record with 768 points his last year to earn first-team all-America honors.

Basketball coach Dana Altman, who recruited Richmond from Moberly Junior College when he was an assistant coach at K-State, said Richmond had the talent to play in the NBA long ago.

"I thought he was capable of playing in the NBA," Altman said. "What has surprised me is his consistency as he has jumped from town to town over the years. He has played well the whole time. No, I'm not surprised about what he has done.

"I noticed back in his junior-college days that he could play," Altman said. "He had the physical talent. He has developed the mental toughness over the years to be able to compete."

Richmond was selected to the 1988 United States Olympic Basketball team, where he earned a bronze medal, and was the fifth pick in the first round by Golden State of the 1988 NBA draft.

He was named the 1988-89 Rookie of the Year after averaging 22.0 points, 5.9 rebounds and 4.2 assists per game.

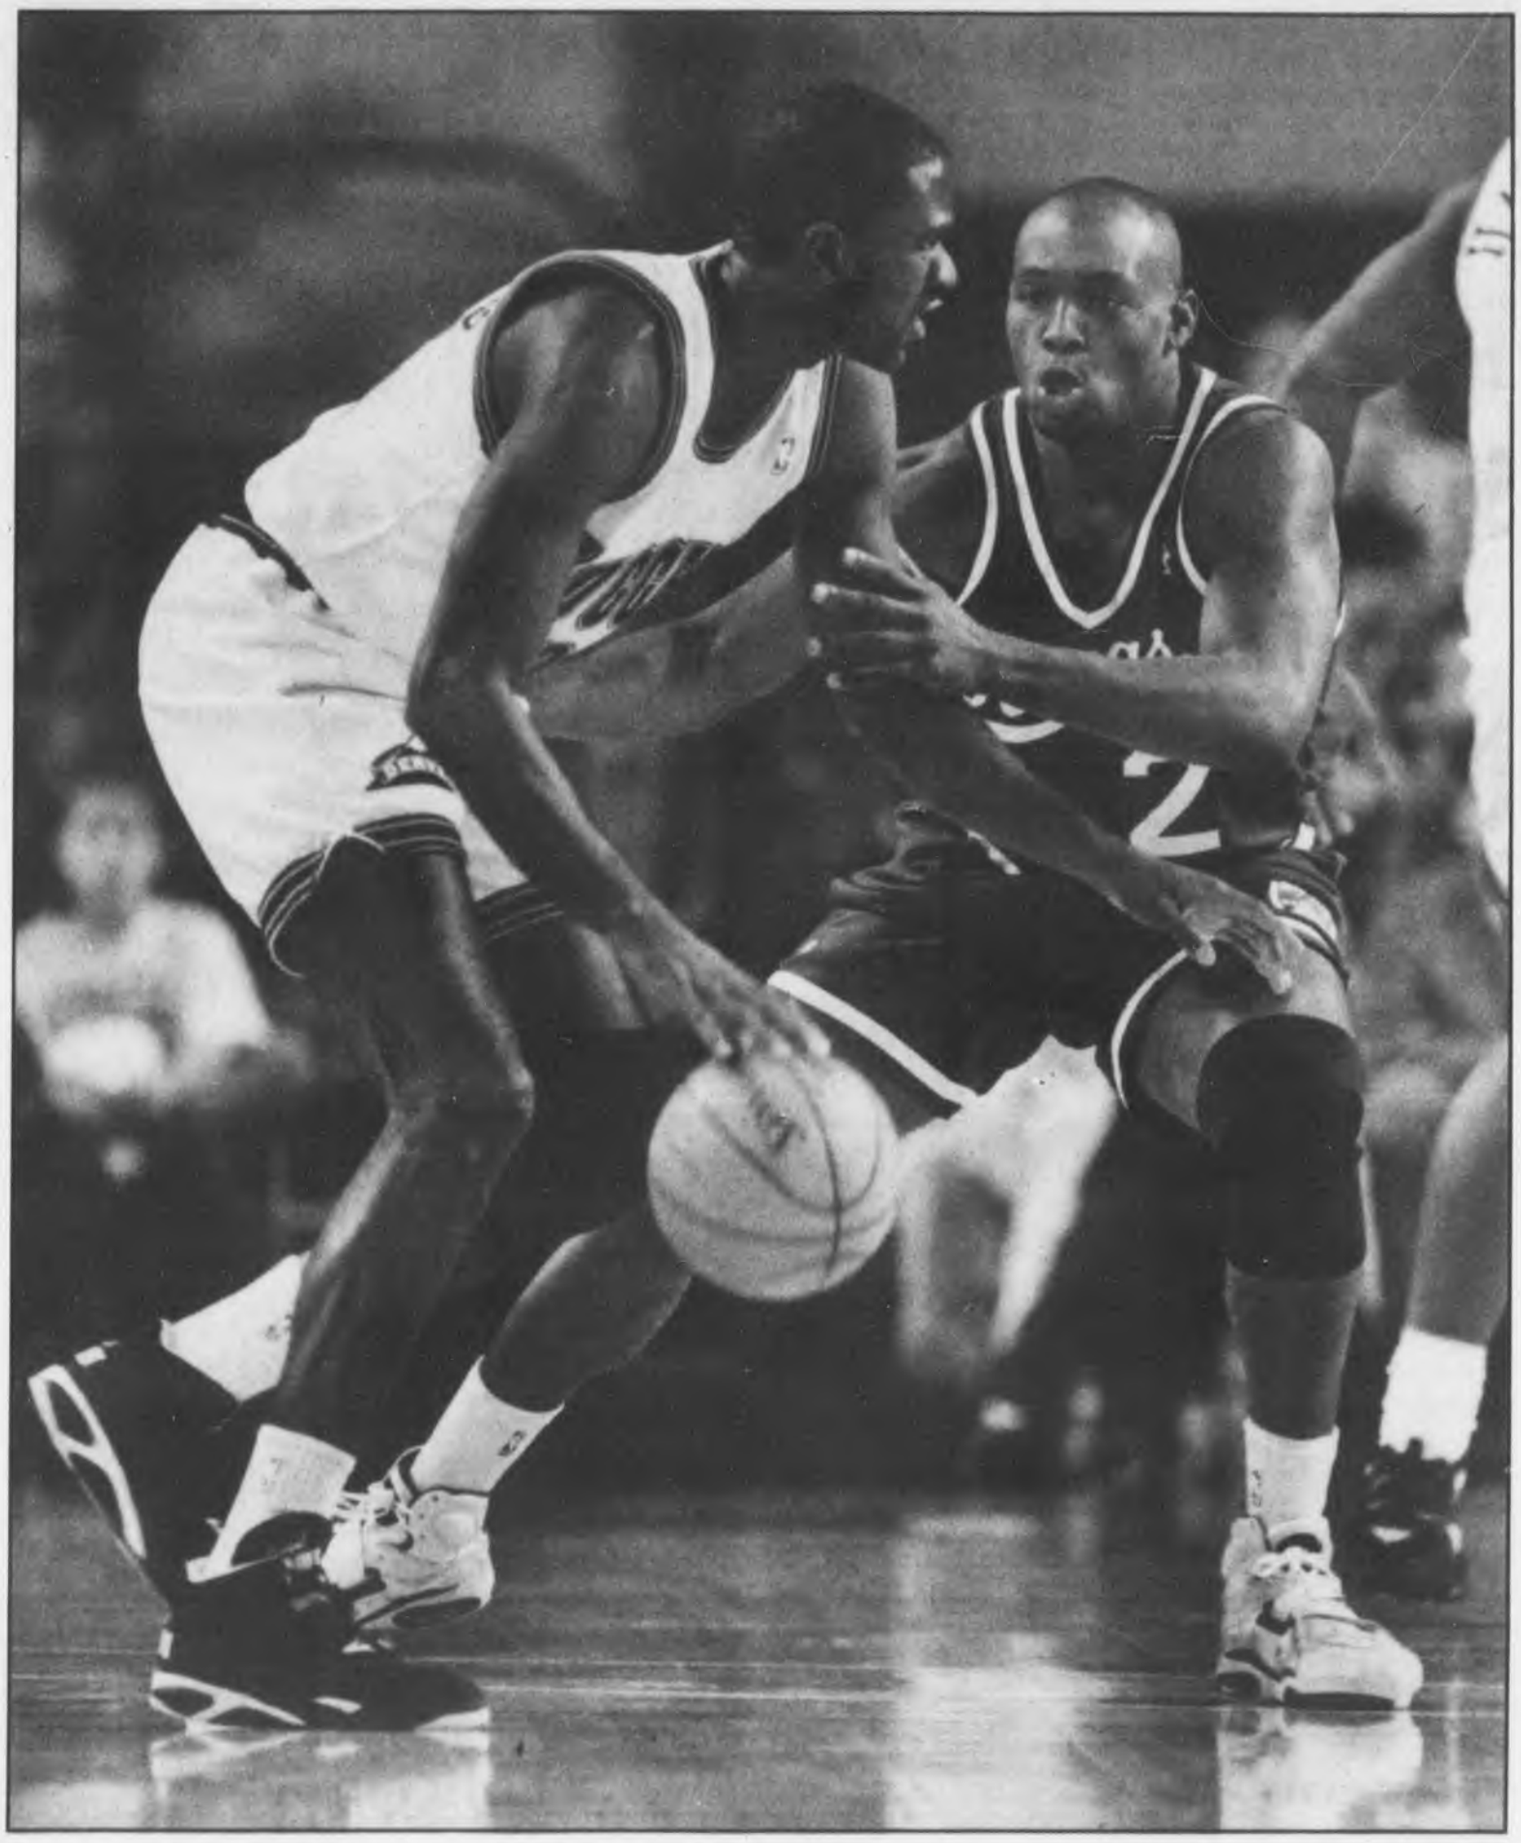
Two years later, he led the Warriors to the semifinals of the Western Conference Playoffs and averaged 23.9 points and 5.9 rebounds during the 1990-91 season.

Golden State traded Richmond to the Sacramento Kings for the rights to Billy Owens in the fall of 1991.

Richmond then led the Kings with an average of 22.5 points per game and finished ninth among the NBA's scoring leaders for the 1991-92 campaign.

Only four active players have reached the 5,000-point mark faster than Richmond.

Mark Aguire, David Robinson, Terry Cummings and Walter Davis have reached the mark faster, but Richmond is the only current NBA player to rank among the NBA's top-20 scoring list in each of his first four seasons in the league.



Richmond made the NBA All-Star team with the Kings last season, but he missed the All-Star game and the second half of the season with a broken wrist. He said his wrist is still bothering him.

"I've got to iron things out. I haven't played since January," Richmond said. "I'm still going to have soreness for another year. I think I missed my timing and the contact the most last season.

"I was very disappointed not to play in the game. It was great to be selected, but not having to play upset me."

Right now, Richmond wants the Kings going in the right direction and to do well in his career.

"My goals are to make the team better, get more wins, to make the All-Star team and to be more consistent," he said. "Eventually, I would like to make my mother proud by getting my degree at K-State."

▲ Mitch Richmond, former K-State basketball player, defends against Reggie Williams of the Denver Nuggets during an exibition game at the Kansas Expocentre last month. Topeka is the closest Richmond has played to Manhattan as an NBA player.

Richmond watches with a Sacramento Kings teammate as their team scores in the fourth quarter. Because Richmond is still recovering from an injury he suffered last season, Richmond played less than half of the game in the 121-99 loss to the Nuggets.

BOWL GAMES

Nebraska (9-0/6-0 in the conference) has clinched the Big Eight title and will play in the Orange Bowl on Jan. 1.

The Cornhuskers could play for the national title if either Notre Dame (10-0) and Florida State (10-1) lose a game.

Colorado (6-3-1/4-1-1) is in second place of the league, and a win against Iowa State would put them in either the Gator Bowl or the John Hancock Bowl.

A loss could drop the Buffaloes to third if Oklahoma beats Nebraska and to fourth if K-State beats Oklahoma State.

Oklahoma (8-2/4-2) is in third place. A loss to the Cornhuskers and a K-State win against Oklahoma State would move the Sooners into fourth place.

A win against Nebraska and a Colorado loss puts the Sooners into second place. If K-State loses, the Sooners remains in third place and goes to the Aloha Bowl.

K-State (7-2-1/3-2-1) is in fourth place and could go the Copper Bowl. A win against Oklahoma State and a Sooner loss would give the Cats third place.

A win against Oklahoma State, combined with an Oklahoma loss and a Colorado loss, would give K-State second place and a shot at either the Gator or the John Hancock.

reaction in his left knee. He is now out of the hospital, but the cause of the reaction is still unknown. Jones will miss at least four to five weeks because of arthroscopic surgery.

Altman said this year's squad will be built around the same principles as last year's.

"Our team is still going to be built around defense and rebounding," he said. "Of our 30 games last year, we out-rebounded 22 of our opponents. That is a very important stat to us. When we held our opponents to under 70 points a game, we were 17-3. I think those two stats tell us about our team, and I think a lot of those things will have to be in place this year.

"We were also last in field-goal percentage, and if we can improve that stat, I think our team can improve."

Seven students stretch and bend to the slow, rhythmic beat of a congo drum.

The instructor calls out directions, her 5-foot-2-inch frame erect and controlled as she demonstrates a position.

During the lesson she paces, gives encouragement and correction while beating out rhythms for the percussionist, Kouassi Kouakou, graduate student in grain science, to follow.

"Don't lean on the barre. I had to ask my first class to step away from the barre because they were doing Marilyn Monroe," she said as she leans back into the parody of a seductive pose.

Doris Bennett-Glasper is the artist in residence with the K-State dance program and is introducing the modern dance class to the Katherine Dunham technique.

Glasper described the Dunham technique as one of the hardest techniques to learn because it's so physically hard on the body. However, she said, it is also a lot of fun and builds strength, muscle, stamina and character.

Glasper learned the technique from Katherine Dunham, whom she began studying with at the age of 10.

Dunham, a dancer, choreographer, teacher and anthropologist, staged and choreographed her first concert, "Negro Rhapsody," in 1931. In 1939 she formed the Katherine Dunham Dance Company. Dunham based her technique on native dances she observed in the Caribbean and in Africa while studying their cultures as an anthropologist, Glasper said.

"For me, it is a group of movements that were created with specific rhythms," Glasper said. "Miss Dunham studied the culture of these countries. She tried to make the movements as authentic as possible.

"In a lot of countries, they use their pelvises a lot, but it's not vulgar," Glasper said.

"She was once called the pelvic queen."

Glasper said she usually travels with a percussionist, but many places where she teaches can't afford a salary for both of them.

Achmed Valk, director of the K-State dance program, recommended Kouakou, who is the host of KSDB-FM 91.9's program "Into Africa," as a percussionist for Glasper's class.

Besides being a Broadway and off-Broadway performer, Glasper is the co-director of the Katherine Dunham Children's Workshop in her hometown of East St. Louis, Ill.

She works with a group of about 23 children from ages five to 19. They are the only group doing original choreography anywhere in the world, she said.

Not only do the children learn to dance, Glasper said, but they also learn about other cultures, as well as their own.

Glasper said some students here did not take to the technique, but others have been showing up for extra classes.

Students have also complained of sore muscles, and Glasper said that's good.

"It lets me know I was good in explaining, and they were good in giving it back to me," she said.

House passes NAFTA 234-200

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — In a hard-earned triumph for President Clinton, the House approved the North American Free Trade Agreement late Wednesday to fuse the United States, Mexico and Canada into the world's largest trading bloc. Republicans provided a majority of the support.

The 234-200 vote sent the measure to the Senate, where leaders predicted approval within a few days.

The House voted after a day-long debate that reflected high-minded disagreements over America's role in the world economy and bare-knuckled politics. Dozens of labor-backed Democrats abandoned their president to oppose the accord, but 132 Republicans signed on to assure passage.

See related story, Page 12

For weeks the outcome had been in doubt, but in the end it wasn't even close.

A cheer went up in the chamber when the vote count passed the 218 needed to approve the pact. Opponents stood in clumps, shaking their heads and grimacing at the result.

The House was packed with lawmakers; the spectators' gallery that rings the chamber was filled.

"A vote for NAFTA is in the great tradition of our party," House GOP Leader Bob Michel of Illinois said in a ringing speech of support. "So let it be said on this crucial vote tonight, that we Republicans did not sacrifice the jobs of tomorrow to the fears of today."

Democratic Leader Richard Gephardt summed up for the opponents who fear the pact will throw thousands of Americans out of work.

"Deficient and flawed," he said of NAFTA. "We cannot and must not expose our workers and our corporations to unfair competition."

The accord would create a continental free-trade zone by gradually eliminating tariffs over 15 years. All industries would be affected, from fruits and vegetables to banking and automobiles.

Opponents vented their anger over concessions the administration made to line up votes.

"If this is such a good deal, why did we almost have to give the portico away on the White House to get it?" Rep. Butler Derrick, D-S.C., said.

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., the last speaker in a long day of debate, conceded the pact wasn't perfect. "One can always find defects and deficiencies. ... But this is for this moment an opportunity to expand our trade, to reach out beyond our borders, to continue our leadership, to seize the future."

Union workers and other foes of NAFTA staged one final, forlorn rally in the rain outside the Capitol. A knot of Greenpeace demonstrators briefly disrupted the House debate in late afternoon, raining mock dollar bills down on debating lawmakers. Four protesters were arrested.

Administration officials said in advance a favorable vote would would strengthen Clinton's hand as he departs for Seattle on Thursday for a trade meeting with Asian leaders, and it would lead to freer trade with Europe and all of South America, as well.

Supporters said the agreement would open up a vast new Mexican market to American goods. Opponents said the certain result was a loss of jobs as American firms move to Mexico to take advantage of lower wages and lax worker safety and environmental regulations.

Negotiated by the Bush administration and modified through side agreements by the Clinton administration, the pact turned customary political alliances on their heads.

Republican leaders said in advance they stood ready to provide the majority votes needed.

Senate could oppose regents tuition hike

MIKE ZAMRZLA

Student Senate may consider tonight a recommendation to oppose a 9-percent tuition increase for in-state students and 13 percent for out-of-state students attending K-State.

The tuition increase, coupled with a 3-percent increase in state educational funding, is part of the proposed Partnership of Excellence Funding Program.

If approved by the Kansas Legislature and the governor, the program would raise tuition at all Kansas Board of Regents schools beginning in fall 1994.

Tuition at K-State, the University of Kansas and Wichita State University would be raised by 9 percent for residents and 13 percent for non-residents. Tuition at Emporia, Pittsburg and Fort Hays state universities would increase by 5 percent for residents and 13 percent for non-residents.

The proposal is designed to increase faculty salaries at regents universities.

Senate initially decided Nov. 11 to postpone consideration of the recommendation until Dec. 2 to see if Gov. Joan Finney included the program in her budget.

Michael Henry, Senate legislative affairs committee chairman, said since Senate's Nov. 11 decision, supporters of the program have taken the initiative.

"Kansas University Chancellor Gene Budig and President Wefald met with Governor Finney for 55 minutes to support the program," Henry said. "From second-hand knowledge I have learned that three KU students also met with the governor to support the increases."

Henry said he believes most K-State students and student senators are against the Partnership of Excellence Program. If they want to make those feelings known they have to act now, he said.

"The governor has been kind to higher education in the past. I think she's waiting to hear student opposition," Henry said. "This resolution will make a definite impact on her."

Faculty are underpaid, but he said he thinks there are better ways to go about increasing their salaries.

"This is not the most equal way to go about things," Henry said. "It also sets a dangerous precedent for students to fund faculty salaries directly.

"Instead, maybe we could look at a way to restructure the regents system to see if more tuition money students pay could stay here at K-State."

Mann says freedoms often denied

LEIGH NEVANS

The First Amendment guarantees freedom of religion, but this freedom has not been extended to American Indians, said Henrietta Mann, professor of Native American studies at the University of Montana.

Mann spoke before a large crowd Wednesday in Throckmorton Hall about American Indian spirituality and First Amendment rights.

"Living in the United States we have some guarantees called the Bill of Rights," Mann said. "It is what makes this country great.

"We go to war when any of these rights are violated. American Indian spirituality is the first religious system of this country."

Mother Earth is a spiritual being for American Indians, and they have a spiritual bond with the land, Mann said.

"Our religion is land-based," she said. "We have a care-taking responsibility for her. We are the same color of our Mother (Earth)."

Mann said there are four children of the Earth: red, black, white and yellow.

"We're all related. We share this land today, and all the others who have come to live with us," she said.

The first people who came to live with the American Indians came for religious freedom, Mann said.

American Indians have been through many injustices. In the 15th century theologians debated whether American Indians had souls. American Indians also went from having the whole continent to having only 2 percent of the land base, she said.

In 1978 the American Indian Religious Freedom Act was passed, which ensured some of the American Indians religious rights.

For some reason the First Amendment did not protect these rights, and there had to be a special piece of legislation passed, which limited American Indians on the practice of their religion, Mann said.

"Our religious rights have been violated by the United States government," she said.

One rule is the American Indians can not practice religious dances.

"If this happened to any other group there would have been a revolt," Mann said. "Our spirituality is the last thing our white brothers and sisters will understand about us."

In a recent triumph for the American Indian people, the Religious Freedom Restoration Act was signed by President Clinton on Nov. 16.

This act dealt with the religious rights of American Indian prisoners, which is one of the four main issues facing American Indians today.

The other three issues not included in the act are protection of sacred sites, use of peyote in religious ceremonies and the religious use of eagle feathers.

RELIEF DEADLINES EXTENDED

Topeka (AP) - The Federal Emergency Management Agency has extended the deadline to Dec. 15 for flood victims to apply for federal assistance.

Gov. Joan Finney's office on Tuesday encouraged people who had flood losses but have not applied for federal disaster assistance to register as soon as possible.

The deadline was Nov. 15.

For seven counties, the deadline is Dec. 28. Those counties are Cherokee, Crawford, Barton, Graham, Thomas, Sheridan and Trego.

Regents to review new standards for teachers

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas Board of Regents plans Thursday to review a plan for tougher standards for students who want to be teachers, its actions sparked in part by concerns about how well math is taught in Kansas.

The proposal the regents plan to consider will require students to pass six hours of math before entering a school or college of education.

It also will require potential education students to have better grades and higher scores on a standardized test.

The regents imposed new standards for education students a year ago, but a task force on teacher education this year recommended more changes. In part, the regents are concerned that students entering the six state universities do not have strong math skills, said Martine Hammond-Paludan, regents' director of academic affairs.

"It's easy to point the finger at the high schools and elementary schools and say, 'It's all your fault.'" Hammond-Paludan said. "The regents institutions have to acknowledge that they have a role."

Education Commissioner Lee Drogemueller described the proposal as an intermediate step. He said schools at all levels — from kindergarten through college — need to use outcomes-based programs, under which goals are set for students, and their grades are based on how well they meet those goals.

"I'm optimistic that this is going to help," Drogemueller said.

AIDS patient speaks about killer disease

OVERLAND PARK (AP) — Even though AIDS is killing Kathy Steadman, she is trying to save a few lives before it does.

Steadman, who is in the final stages of the disease, talked to students Tuesday at Shawnee Mission North High School as part of the school's AIDS-awareness campaign. She told the students about her daily life.

"It consists of taking 11 pills a day," she said. "I have a permanent IV in my chest because I have different IV treatments daily. The IV medications take about 18 hours a day. The remaining six hours are spent coping with the disease."

Steadman was released from the hospital to make her presentation. Her doctor, Sharon Lee, said she had wondered if Steadman would live long enough to make the presentation.

African legislators finalize equality bill

KEMPTON PARK, South Africa (AP) — After a frantic day of horse-trading, the government and African National Congress put the final touches Wednesday on a draft constitution promising blacks and whites equal rights for the first time.

Negotiators muscled the proposed agreement through multiparty talks, bringing two years of painstaking negotiations to a dramatic climax.

Final agreement and a signing ceremony were expected Wednesday night.

Led by President F.W. de Klerk's National Party and Nelson Mandela's ANC, the negotiators' task was to find a peaceful way to transfer power from an affluent, but nervous, white minority to the oppressed and impoverished black majority.

Senate approves defense budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate today approved a $261-billion defense budget that adopts a more restrictive version of President Clinton's policy on gays in the military.

By a vote of 77-22, the Senate adopted the defense authorization bill for the fiscal year that began Oct. 1 and sent it to President Clinton for his expected signature.

The House approved the legislation on Monday.

The overall package, which postpones tough post-Cold War decisions on cutting weapons, is $2.6 billion less than Clinton sought in his first military budget and $12 billion below last year's level.

The biggest controversy of the year was Clinton's campaign pledge to lift the 50-year-old ban on homosexuals serving in the armed forces.

U.N. say peace talks could begin in Somalia

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — U.N. officials said Wednesday that a Security Council resolution calling off the search for Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid could lead to national reconciliation talks.

The United Nations issued an arrest warrant for Aidid in June, after his militia were blamed for the deaths of 24 Pakistani soldiers. The warrant was effectively suspended after a battle on Oct. 3 in which 18 American soldiers and more than 300 Somalis were killed.

The Security Council voted Tuesday night to officially suspend the warrant. The vote appeared to be an admission that a political solution in Somalia would probably have to include Aidid and his clan-based Somali National Alliance.
